TRIBUTE TO THE LATE JAMES B. FRAZIER, OF TENNESSEE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, resolutions of the Chattanooga and Hamilton County Bar Association, adopted April 12, 1937, relative to the recent death of the Honorable James B. Frazier, of Chattanooga, and a former distinguished and able Senator in this body. Senator Frazier and I were devoted friends, personal and political. He was a man of unblemished character, of distinguished ability, and one of the greatest orators I ever heard speak. As a convention orator he had no superior. He was an unswerving Democrat, and one of the kindliest and gentlest men I ever knew. I deeply deplore his death.

His life was an inspiration to every ambitious young man in our State. He was a gentleman of the old school in the highest and best sense of that term.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator James Beriah Frazier was born at Pikeville, Bledsoe County, Tenn., on the 18th day of October 1856, and died at his home in Chattanooga, Tenn., on March 28, 1937. He was the son of Thomas N. and Margaret (McReynolds) Frazier.

He left surviving his widow, Mrs. Louise Douglas Keith Frazier, four children, James B. Frazier, Jr., of Chattanooga, Thomas A. Frazier, of Clarksdale, Miss., Mrs. Robert N. Somerville of Cleveland, Miss., and Mrs. John P. Fort of Chattanooga, eight grandchildren, Keith Somerville, Aston Somerville, John P. Fort, Jr., James Frazier Fort, Keith Fort, Thomas A. Frazier, Jr., Frances Frazier, and Jane Louise Frazier. His two sons are prominent lawyers, having followed their father's chosen profession. James B. Frazier, Jr., is a member of the Chattanooga Bar and at present United States District attorney for the eastern district of Tennessee. Thomas A. Frazier is a member of the Mississippi Bar.

On the 10th day of January 1883, at Athens, Tenn., he was married to Miss Louise Douglas Keith, daughter of Colonel Alexander and Sarah Ann Keith. Colonel Keith was a prominent attorney and a veteran of the Seminole and Mexican wars, and a man of great influence and prestige.

Senator Frazier descended from Scotch and French Huguenot ancestors, and was a great-grandson of Samuel Frazier and a grandson of Abner Frazier, both of whom fought in the Battle of King's Mountain. Samuel Frazier was a delegate to the first constitutional convention of Tennessee in 1796, and was on the subcommittee with Andrew Jackson and others who drafted the constitution of Tennessee. He served as the first State's senator from Greene County.

Senator Frazier's ancestors have long been associated with the practice of law. His father was admitted to the bar at Greeneville, Greene County, Tenn., and later became clerk and master of the chancery court of Bledsoe County, which office he resigned to engage in the practice of law at Pikeville. In 1861 he was elected circuit judge, but before he could take his seat the State seceded, and he never received his commission. He moved to Rutherford County from Pikeville in 1863 and was appointed criminal judge of the Hermitage district by Andrew Johnson. After he was appointed and in the year 1867 he was impeached by a radical legislature for granting writs of habeas corpus releasing several members of the body held prisoners in the State capital for absenting themselves from the legislature for the purpose of breaking a quorum. In 1870 his political rights were restored by a State constitutional convention. This is the only time in the history of this country that a constitutional convention restored the political rights of a citizen. In 1870 he was elected criminal judge, without opposition, of Davidson and Rutherford Counties, and held such office for many years. The first case tried by Senator Frazier was before his father at Nashville, who was then serving as criminal judge. Senator Frazier's father was originally a stanch Union man, but after the State of Tennessee adopted the policy of secession he did what he could to further the cause of the Confederacy.

After attending the common schools of Rutherford and Davidson Counties, Senator Frazier continued his education at Franklin College near Nashville, and at the University of Tennessee, where he graduated in 1878 with a bachelor of arts degree. He attained prominence as an orator in early manhood, having been awarded the oratorical medal in 1877 at the University of Tennessee. The Chattanooga College of Law in 1914 conferred upon him the degree of master of law, and Tuscalum College conferred upon him the honorary degree of doctor of law.

After Senator Frazier graduated from the University of Tennessee he taught school for a period of time and studied law in his father's office at Nashville, thus preparing himself for admission to the bar, being admitted in 1880. In 1880 he moved from Nashville to Washington, then the county seat of Rhea County, where he became associated in the practice of law with Capt. S. J. A. Frazier, at that time attorney general for his district. He left Rhea County in 1882 and came to Chattanooga, where he engaged in the practice of law. Shortly after coming to Chattanooga he was employed with Col. Joe Clift to defend a man for murder by the name of Taylor. This was an important law suit and attracted wide attention. Col. Lawrence Spears was then attorney general and had associated with him in the prosecution of the case Judge W. H. DeWitt and Judge Lewis M. Shepherd, both outstanding lawyers. Colonel Clift became ill and it was necessary for Senator Frazier, then a young and almost inexperienced lawyer, to alone conduct the defense for his client. The trial lasted approximately one week, and Senator Frazier defended his client with such skill and eloquence that he gained almost instant recognition. His speech before the jury in defense of his client in this case lasted for 5½ hours, and was said by many to have been the most eloquent appeal ever delivered before a jury at this bar. His client was convicted of some degree of homicide, and while the sheriff was taking him to the supreme court at Knoxville some parties boarded the train, killed the sheriff and secured Taylor's release. He was never recaptured. Probably as the direct result of the trial of this case, Senator Frazier was invited to form a partnership with Judge DeWitt and Judge Shepherd, and the well-known law firm of DeWitt, Shepherd & Frazier of Chattanooga was formed, and continued until the year 1891. In 1891 he became associated as a partner in the law firm of Cooke, Frazier & Swaney of Chattanooga, the other members of the firm being the late T. H. Cooke and W. B. Swaney. Mr. Swaney was a classmate and roommate of Senator Frazier at the University of Tennessee, and is at present a beloved member of this bar. This connection continued until 1896 when he became senior member of the law firm of Frazier & Coleman of Chattanooga, the other member being the late Lewis M. Coleman. This firm was dissolved when Senator Frazier was elected Governor of Tennessee.

For many years Senator Frazier had been recognized as a leader in the Democratic Party, and in the year 1900 was made elector-at-large on the Democratic Presidential ticket. He stumped the State in behalf of his party, and his speeches were so eloquent that he immediately gained State-wide recognition. As a result, in 1902 he was unanimously nominated by acclamation by the Democratic convention as party nominee for Governor and was elected Governor of Tennessee by the largest plurality—44,000 votes—at that time given to any gubernatorial candidate since the Civil War. That his administration received public endorsement is shown by the fact that in 1904 he was again nominated without opposition by the Democratic convention as party nominee to succeed himself, and a second time was elected Governor by almost as large a plurality as he received in his first election.

His administration as chief executive of this State was strictly a business one. He insisted upon the most rigid economy. He refused to sanction the creation of unnecessary offices and increase of salaries of public officials, and when the legislature indirectly attempted to increase his own salary, he promptly vetoed it. During his terms the biannual appropriation was $5,000,000, and out of this amount he reduced the State debt during his two terms more than $2,463,000, the most economical administration in the history of this State. This is the latest reduction that has been made in the State debt, although more than 30 years have elapsed since he ended his second term.

He carefully considered the qualifications of those appointed to office. On April 19, 1903, he appointed the Honorable Cordell Hull, now Secretary of State, judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit of Tennessee, and on April 17, 1903, he appointed the Honorable SAM D. MCREYNOLDS, now Representative of the Third Congressional District, criminal judge of the Sixth Judicial Circuit of Tennessee.

He made his first race for Governor on the platform of an 8- or 9-months' school for every boy and girl in Tennessee. At that time many of our counties had only a 3-month term. At the time he became Governor, the State, as such, had never made appropriation for the support of public schools, except the small sum annually paid on what was known as the school fund. Shortly after he was first elected Governor he appointed his schoolmate, Seymour D. Mynders, State superintendent, who assisted him in a systematic campaign to develop the public schools. Senator Frazier was a strong advocate of public schools, and at his instance the legislature passed a bill making the first appropriation for the support of public schools of this State. This was the real beginning of our present public-school system and for which Senator Frazier is undoubtedly entitled to more credit than any other person.

A short time before Senator Frazier first became Governor there had been a number of disastrous explosions in the coal mines of the State, involving great loss of life. When he became Governor he studied this problem very carefully and helped draft and secured the passage of laws regulating the operation of and providing for the inspection of coal mines in this State, which has resulted in reducing mine disasters and the consequent loss of life therefrom to a minimum. This law, with slight amendments, stands on the statute books of the State to safeguard the lives of the workers inside the mines, and as a monument to Senator Frazier. His administrations as Governor are the most successful, economical, and progressive in the history of this State.

In March 1905 Senator Frazier was elected by the State legislature as United States Senator to succeed the Honorable William B. Bate, who died before he took office, Senator Frazier being elected for the full term. He thereupon resigned as Governor of Tennessee and entered upon his new duties as that of a United States Senator. He served in the United States Senate from March 1905 until March 1911, and his record in the Senate was in keeping with the record he made as chief executive of his State. Being a Democrat, he stood for the fundamental principles of his party, both in speech and by his vote. While in the United States Senate a question arose between the National Government and the State of California as to the admission of Japanese children into the public schools. Theodore Roosevelt, then President, espoused the cause of the Japanese children and threatened to use force if necessary.

Thereupon Senator Frazier introduced into the Senate a resolution defining the legislative powers of the Federal Government and the States and insisted that the public schools of the States were domestic institutions, over which the States were supreme, and that the Federal Government had no right or power to dictate as to who should enter the schools. He made a strong speech in the Senate in favor of this resolution, which attracted great attention at the time over the country and particularly in the Western States. It was never answered, and the administration abandoned its efforts in that respect. Senator Joe Bailey, of Texas, himself a great statesman and orator, said that the speech of Senator Frazier in behalf of this resolution was the greatest that had been delivered in the Halls of the United States Senate since the days of Daniel Webster.

While in the Senate he was a strong advocate of an income-tax law. He was also an advocate of Federal aid to the States in the construction of public highways and prepared and introduced the first bill on that subject, which failed to pass. The principles he then advocated and provided for in his bill have since been adopted. He wrote the majority report of the committee appointed by the Senate to investigate the discharge of a battalion of soldiers for shooting up the town of Brownsville, Tex. He made an eloquent speech in the Senate in support of his report sustaining the action of the President in discharging the soldiers. His report was accepted. He was a member of the investigating committee appointed to investigate the election of Senator Lorimer, of Illinois. He did not believe that Senator Lorimer had been legally elected and was strong in his conviction that he should not be seated as a United States Senator. Senator Frazier stood alone on the committee and brought back to the Senate a minority report, signed only by himself, to the effect that Senator Lorimer had been illegally elected. After much debate the Senate adopted the minority report of Senator Frazier, and Senator Lorimer was not allowed to take his seat. As a member of the Military Committee he introduced and secured the passage of a bill authorizing the Government to purchase the first airplane built by Wright Bros.

The year 1911 witnessed one of the bitterest political wars in the history of this State. The Democratic Party was divided into bitter factions. Senator Frazier refused to engage in factional fight, and stood loyally by the principles of his party. As a result, a long and bitter fight was engaged between the different factions of the two parties in the legislature over the election of United States Senator. After more than 20 votes had been taken without election, Senator Frazier withdrew his name. Unquestionably he could have been reelected to the United States Senate without serious opposition had he been willing to lay aside principles that to him were sacred and right. This he did not do, because to him nothing could justify the sacrifice of the principles he believed.

After Senator Frazier left public offices he came back to his beloved city of Chattanooga to practice law, and in 1912 formed a partnership with his kinsman, Fred B. Frazier, now a prominent member of this bar, the firm name being Frazier & Frazier. This firm was dissolved in 1914 when he formed a partnership with his son, James B. Frazier, Jr., also under the firm name of Frazier & Frazier, which association continued until his death.

Senator Frazier's associates in the practice of law were all leaders in their profession, and the different firms he associated with engaged in extensive practice. Senator Frazier tried many important lawsuits. He was a skilled and learned lawyer, and noted not only for his ability as an orator in affairs of State but also as a strong advocate before the court and jury. He served by appointment as special chancelor for Chancelor Somerfield Key and as circuit judge for Judge Trewhitt. While so serving on the bench he delivered many opinions in important cases that are regarded as strong presentations of the law.

Shortly before the Democratic convention in 1908 William Jennings Bryan, in an editorial in the Commoner, a newspaper published at Lincoln, Nebr., referred to Senator Frazier as one of the few qualified to be President.

In 1920 he was again made elector-at-large on the Democratic Presidential ticket. Several times he was a delegate from the State at large to the national Democratic convention. Probably his greatest speech was delivered before the Democratic harmony convention at Nashville in 1912. The ovation he received on this occasion was said to have been the greatest given to anyone on any occasion in this State. After he had finished his address the delegates carried him on their shoulders around the convention hall.

Though he had a long career as an officeholder, State and National, he was known as a statesman and never as a politician. He was a strong party man, but never narrow in his convictions.

He had no superior throughout the State or Nation as a public speaker. He was tall, stately, and commanding in appearance, eloquent in speech and forceful in argument. For years he has been recognized as one of the country's most eloquent and accomplished orators. His private life was pure and spotless, his public and professional career honest, able, and sincere.

We concur in an editorial which appeared following his death in one of our leading local newspapers, and which, among other things, said: "Children who receive the advantage of the fine public schools of which Tennessee now is so justly proud; miners busy in the half lights far below the surface of the earth; motorists who drive comfortably and swiftly over broad, modern highways—all these and many more have reason to be glad that James B. Frazier lived and made his contribution to government."

Senator Frazier was raised a Presbyterian, but after his marriage he affiliated with the Southern Methodist Church. He was a Mason and Knight of Pythias. We believe, as has often been said, that his name will stand in the history of this State alongside that of Andrew Jackson, Andrew Johnson, and James K. Polk.

He was especially well versed in constitutional and statutory law. Few have obtained the position he did in affairs of state. None have excelled him in the respect and love of his fellowman. Truly he was one of the State's most illustrous son.

While we mourn his loss, we are thankful for his life. He was a tender father and husband, and to his family we extend our deepest sympathy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished the bereaved family, that members of the bar be appointed to present copies to the local criminal, chancery, and circuit courts, to the Court of Appeals and Supreme Court of Tennessee, and to the United States district court at Chattanooga, and to Senators Kenneth McKellar and Nathan Bachman in order that they may present them to the Senate, to be enrolled upon its records.

FRED B. BALLARD,
Chairman,
R. B. COOKE,
P. H. THACH,
Memorial Committee.

The foregoing is a true and correct copy of resolutions which were presented before, and unanimously adopted by, a largely attended meeting of the Chattanooga and Hamilton County Bar Association, which convened at the courthouse on Monday, April 12, 1937.

AUBREY F. FOLTS,
Secretary, Chattanooga Bar Association.

That the secretary of the Territory is requested and directed to forward to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii duly authenticated copies of this joint resolution.

Joint resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to ratify and confirm Act 23 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1937, amending Act 174 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1935, by extending the time within which revenue bonds may be issued and delivered

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

SECTION 1. The Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to ratify and confirm Act 23 of the Session Laws

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Whereas the May old-age pension checks have not been sent to those on the rolls; and

Whereas the reason for this delay is because the Federal allotment has not been received; and

Whereas it will be necessary for Congress to make additional appropriations to take care of the Federal part; and

Whereas the old people of Texas are in distress because of the need for their May checks; and

Whereas unless Congress takes immediate action on this matter it may be several weeks before these funds are received: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That we urge the National Congress to give immediate attention to this matter and to pass sufficient appropriations to take care of the Federal allotment at once; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the House of the National Congress and to the Members of the Texas delegation.

PAYMENTS UNDER SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3687) to extend the period during which the purposes specified in section 7 (a) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act may be carried out by payments by the Secretary of Agriculture to producers.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think perhaps a brief explanation of just why this bill is proposed should be made.

Directly after the decision of the Supreme Court in the Triple A case, it was thought important, and almost imperative, to have the real beneficial elements of that act embodied in a measure which would meet the test of the Court. That act included a measure which was already on the statute books, namely, the Soil Conservation Act, which was already operative, in conjunction with certain other features that were necessary for the preservation not only of the soil but, as far as possible and as rapidly as possible, to reforest the watersheds of our streams in order to stop the devastating effects of their overflow upon the lower levels.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As the Senator is explaining the bill—and I am very much interested in his explanation—I will suggest that I notice that it proposes an amendment the effect of which will be to continue the existing law until 1942. But for the amendment, as I understand, the present law would expire on January 1, 1938.

Mr. SMITH. I am coming to that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator, in his explanation, will tell us why the 4-year extension was inserted in lieu of the shorter one.

Mr. SMITH. Under the terms of the law—and I take it for granted that most Senators are familiar with its terms—it was provided that up to January 1938 the administration of the measure would be wholly in the hands of the Federal Government, pending the adoption of certain enabling acts by the several States. When a State passed such an act the State and its counties would then be responsible for the entire administration of the law.

I have a list of the States which have qualified. In several of the States the legislatures meet only once in each 4 years and, therefore, they have been unable to qualify under the terms of the act. For that reason the administration has asked that the time for the States to qualify be extended to 1942. When they shall have qualified under the terms set forth in the bill then the program comes entirely under the jurisdiction and administration of the States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has considered ways and means of effecting a more equable distribution of these benefits to the States on the basis of some plan similar to that which carries Federal aid for highways. As I recall, in some States almost all the farmers came in for benefits or soil-conservation payments. In other States the percentage of farmers obtaining benefits was smaller. It occurs to me that in taking money from the Federal Treasury and distributing it for agricultural purposes in the nature of benefits to the farmers, it would be the part of wisdom if the expenditures were made so that no one State would have too great and no one State too little of the benefits provided by the act.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in the administration of the terms of an act which contains so many elements affecting the farmers, it is almost impossible to draw an exact balance as between the States; but I unhesitatingly say that the operation of the act during the past 2 years has aroused great interest in the preservation and conservation of the soil, in preventing erosion and protecting land from streams which overflow their banks.

The administration has started out constructively to administer the act. The feature which appeals to me more than any other is that the act will not be applicable, and benefit payments under it cease if the State itself does not, by an enabling act, come into the picture and administer the act itself. It is a recognition of the fundamental principle of State rights.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it contemplated that when the original act shall have expired by reason of the limitation set forth in the act, thereafter the States shall raise the money to carry on the program, or shall the Federal Government raise it and have the States administer it, or are they to raise it jointly?

Mr. SMITH. They are to raise it jointly.

Mr. TYDINGS. On what percentage basis?

Mr. SMITH. That is not contemplated in the bill. The original amount which the Government obligated itself to supply will continue to be supplied so long as the program continues or so long as may be necessary. Senators can readily see that in some States, in the course of time, so far as soil erosion is concerned, the program will be completed; that so far as reforestation of the watersheds of rivers is concerned, that work will be completed; and so far as the educational program relates to the kind of soil-binding crops to plant, that part of the program will be completed.

It is an intensely educational program in that under the supervision of those who really study the chemicals of the soil the farmers may obtain correct and exact information as to what best to plant. I have been a farmer all my life, and I did not know why certain parts of my land would produce one crop better than another. An analysis of the soil will indicate what is necessary to plant in order to secure the elements which may be lacking in that particular soil. In addition to that there are certain lands that should not be cultivated. The program goes into every element of practical education by physical demonstration.

I know some excesses have been committed under the act, some things done that ought not to have been done. However, the Senate itself has done many things it had no business to do, but did nevertheless. When we embark upon a soil-conservation program which is so essential to the preservation of two of our great resources, namely, the farms and the farmers, we ought all to cooperate to see that the farmer has every advantage that legitimately can be given to him.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there under consideration before the Senator's committee another farm relief bill embodying a very ambitious program?

Mr. SMITH. No; we have not such a bill before our committee as a bill, but yesterday a number of gentlemen who appeared before the committee submitted to us a proposed form of bill—that is, one which they contemplate asking to have introduced—but I take it that the Senate will scrutinize any such measure and exercise its judgment as to its practicability.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Such a program as that would inevitably link in with a soil-erosion program; but would it supersede the soil-erosion program?

Mr. SMITH. So far as I was able to grasp just what the proposed bill meant, I believe it does not enter the field of this particular soil-erosion program. I believe no conservation of soil is contemplated by that proposal. I think it is more in the nature of a marketing plan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to submit a query to the Senator which relates to a problem that is a conundrum to me. If we are still experimenting in respect to our farm legislation, why should we extend this particular law for 4 years when the new program, it would seem to me, inevitably must synchronize with the old one? Why not do it all at once? Why take the 4-year leap at the present time in respect to this particular program?

Mr. SMITH. Because we have had 2 years' experiment with the present program, and it is a practical program. It remains to be seen whether, in our judgment, the other plan ought to be considered or adopted. The present plan has been tried for 2 years and has proven a success. Why not extend it until all the States may have an opportunity to have their legislatures pass enabling acts so they may come in under the program, and then carry on the program under the auspices of the respective States?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to say in fairness to the group which appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry yesterday that in the new bill which they discussed, only four or five farm products are covered. There is a specific provision that soil conservation, if the soil-conservation law should remain in effect, shall not apply to those four or five products. The payments under the Soil Conservation Act would not go to the producers of those particular products.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I to understand that the proposed bill which we are rather vaguely discussing is presented solely on the responsibility of the farm organizations, or is it presented also on the recommendation and with the approval of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand, the Secretary of Agriculture sometime ago called in leaders of the farm group for a discussion and conference on farm problems. The bill which has been mentioned is the outgrowth of that conference. As nearly as I can understand, it was sponsored by the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And not by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not know. There was nothing yesterday to indicate that it is sponsored by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I desire to say that as a practical farmer I heartily endorse the principles incorporated in the act which the pending bill proposes to extend. I have seen its beneficial effects around me, and I hope we shall not take any backward step. The Government is educating the farmers as they have never been educated before as to the methods of conserving their soil, improving its fertility, and getting better returns from the portion which they cultivate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, we could extend the present act for 1 year, and another Congress could extend it for another year, and we could extend it yearly for as long a time as we desired. I point out to the Senator, however, that under the present bill we not only extend the soil-conservation part of the act for 4 years, but we also extend the allotment plan for 4 years. I wondered if the committee had separated what might be called permanent soil-conservation work from benefit-payment work.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator were as familiar with the character of the farms and farmers in all sections of the country as I am with the character of those in the Southeast, he would realize that the allotment plan fits in splendidly with the soil-erosion and soil-conservation idea. A great many farmers have land which, no matter how poor it is, is all they have, and they have to make something on it. Under the act which it is proposed to extend the Government says to them, "If you will discontinue raising crops for market on a certain percentage of the area of that land we will make you an allotment and give you a benefit payment and prove to you that by planting certain things you cannot market, but certain things for improvement of the soil, your action will repay you in years to come."

That is being done all over my section of the country. I think the allotment plan fits in splendidly with this whole scheme.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly in answer to some of the suggestions made by the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The Soil Conservation Act to which the Senator refers was builded upon the old A. A. A. Act, which was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. I opposed the Soil Conservation Act when it was before the Senate 2 years ago upon the theory that the principles involved in it fell clearly within the same category as the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act which the Supreme Court had specifically declared to be unconstitutional, and therefore the Soil Conservation Act could not stand the constitutional test. I think, as Mr. Justice Roberts said, that the Agricultural Adjustment Act invaded the sacred rights of the States. I assume that to be the law of this case and the law of the country at the present time. It has not yet been overturned.

Mr. President, the Soil Conservation Act provides for the payment of benefits, even though they carry a different name. In my opinion, there is no way in which that act can be differentiated from the Agricultural Adjustment Act in that respect. It is true that under the Soil Conservation Act there has been some planting of legumes and other soil-conserving crops. That was incidental to the main purpose, however, which was to give benefits to farmers, prevent surpluses, and control production. I think no one will rise in the Senate and disagree with the frank statement I have made.

I should not oppose this proposal if it were to extend the present act for 2 years; but I see no reason for going forward with this program definitely for 4 years.

That brings me to the particular reason I have in mind, which is quite apart from my view that the Soil Conservation Act flies in the face of the decision of the Supreme Court.

Yesterday there was laid on my desk a bill and an explanation thereof; and hurriedly, in the afternoon, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was summoned to listen to advocates of that measure. I was not able to be present, but I took home last evening the bill and the explanation of it, and read them with some care. The purpose of that bill is to give farmers a parity price, which means that the years 1914–19 are taken as the base period, and the prices derived during that period are specified as those which the farmer shall receive. The bill goes further, however, and provides that the farmer shall receive for his product a price corresponding to that which he pays for the articles he uses.

To a certain extent that was the theory of the McNary-Haugen bill with reference to the domestic consumption of farm products. This theory now is carried further, to provide for an ever-normal granary. That simply means that we shall at all times maintain in granary, in storage, sufficient of the basic commodities so that there will never be a shortage. If there is a surplus, the tariff on those commodities is to be increased 10 percent. If there is a deficit, the tariff is to be lowered 10 percent. That brings in a tariff proposal which is entirely unique in legislation of this kind.

The purpose of the bill to which I refer is to fix the price which the farmer shall receive for his products. I shall not go into a full discussion of that subject, though it is a rather pleasing one to contemplate from the standpoint of the agriculturist. The question which disturbs me at this time is, Why should we continue the present plan for 4 years when we all know that we now have before the committee a plan that will be brought out at this session of Congress, the nature of which I have stated?

Mr. President, the plan to which I refer was sponsored by the three farm organizations headed by the Farm Bureau Federation. These organizations for many years have faithfully and courageously labored in behalf of legislation beneficial to the farmer. They have worked out this proposition, in my judgment, in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture; if not with the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture himself, at least with the cooperation of those who are in his organization. The bill also provides for a system of erosion control, precisely as does the measure now called the Erosion Act. It provides for benefit payments. It goes farther than the Erosion Act, however, and provides that the Government shall make contracts with farmers who may receive benefits, a procedure which was held unlawful in the old Agricultural Adjustment Act.

So, Mr. President, in my judgment we shall soon find before the Congress, as we now find before the House committee and the Senate committee, a bill incorporating the main provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the main provisions of the Soil Erosion Act. That bill has had the approval of the farm organizations. In my judgment it has the approval of the technicians and technologists in the Department of Agriculture.

In view of that situation I appeal to the able chairman of the committee and ask him why we should now be legislating for 4 years along a line which, in my opinion, will be superseded within 4 weeks? If not, there will be a very great effort to bring that bill here; and I shall discuss it quite at length at that time.

I have no particular objection to the extension of the present act for 2 years, because we are in the middle of the stream. I opposed the act originally for reasons which to me were fundamental, both in law and in the philosophy of legislation that affects the farmers of the country. I should not at this time vote against a 2-year proposal, because contracts have been made, though they are not called contracts. They are sympathetic arrangements between the farmer who practices erosion control and the officials of the Department of Agriculture, but nevertheless they are just as effective as contracts. That is how Congress seemingly has avoided the decision of the Supreme Court.

In view of the statement I have made that there is before the committee headed by the able Senator from South Carolina a bill which embodies all the features of the pending bill, plus many of the features of the old Agricultural Adjustment Act, I appeal to him that we should not at this time legislate definitely for a period of 4 years upon a subject matter that is to be treated in its entirety in a separate bill during the present session of Congress.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not know, except from what was said before the committee yesterday, just from what source the proposed bill to which the Senator from Oregon refers has come, or just how far it may go. I take it that there will be hearings before our committee on that bill and on other legislation that is proposed. I recognize that the Senator is correct when he says that certain features of that bill will duplicate some features of this bill.

Mr. President, in view of the statement of the ranking member of my committee, I think perhaps I should be willing to accept a 2-year limitation and let the matter go to conference.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think all Senators are in agreement as to the desirability of accomplishing the object of these measures. I wish to suggest, however, that the bill of which both Senators speak as having been discussed yesterday by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has not yet been introduced either in the House or in the Senate. I never heard of it until yesterday, when I was present at the meeting of the committee.

So far as I was able to go into the matter, I was very favorably impressed with the bill; but at this moment, in view of the slight knowledge I have regarding it, I should not be willing even to pledge myself to the support of the bill. I realize that the bill, not yet having been introduced, and being a rather novel way of controlling the surplus farm-product situation, one that is rather new to me, it is deserving of very candid and careful consideration. Both Senators know that there is a long road ahead before the bill can become a law. It may not become law. It may not be passed at the present session.

Would not such a compromise as I am about to suggest be agreeable? Let the provision as to 4 years remain in the bill, with the understanding that if the other bill shall come before us for consideration, and there is found probability of a duplication of authority, an amendment will be adopted which will change the 4-year extension perhaps to 2 years, or 1 year, or 3 years; or we could repeal the provision altogether, if we desired. But at this time we do not know whether the other bill will ever become a law and we are not fully informed, or at least I am not, with respect to it, because I never read the bill until the examination I made of it during the hearing of the witnesses to whom I wanted to listen. I tried to read the bill at the same time so that a very unsatisfactory opinion was formed in my mind about it.

No one wants duplication of authority. I am sure the committee does not want it. I do not know of anyone who wants it. But perhaps the danger of such duplication is overestimated, because the administration of both laws, as I understand, will be under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture.

If it shall be found, upon a closer examination of the other bill, if it shall finally be passed, that it will do the work which is contemplated in the pending bill, we can remedy the situation when we pass the bill, even by repealing this one, if we desire, or modifying it in some way. I am satisfied that there will be no objection to that, because everyone who is interested is anxious, I take it, that something be done, but that there should be no duplication under the two different laws. At the present time we are discussing a measure of which we have no jurisdiction; an interesting proposal, it is true, but we have not had time to study it or to make a full examination of it, or even to read it. It has never been introduced.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. It is my understanding, from a slight acquaintance made with the bill yesterday, that the only reference in it to soil conservation is the elimination of title I, so far as certain basic commodities are concerned. I cannot see any basis for the argument that the introduction of the proposed bill should in any way interfere with the enactment of the pending measure.

Mr. NORRIS. I should not think it would, from what little I know about it. I do not claim to know very much about it, because my opportunity to examine it or hear it discussed has been very limited indeed.

I appeal to the Senator from Oregon and to the Senator from South Carolina, why not let the provision for the 4-year period remain in the bill, with the understanding that if the other bill shall be passed, and if, when we do pass it, we shall find any conflict between the two measures we will remedy the matter then. If we undertake to remedy it now, we will be in an uncertain field, because no one knows whether or not the suggested bill will ever become a law.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from Oregon, who has the floor, will allow me, I may state that I have been informed that the proponents of the proposed bill, the one which has not yet been introduced, endorse the pending measure, which is not a component part of the suggested bill, but is very essential in the general farm program.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have not had any means of ascertaining the facts underlying the proposal that was discussed before the Senate Committee on Agriculture on yesterday. But I am sure from what I read from day to day that these two bills cannot stand together, and it is not the purpose of the proponents of the bill that they should.

The ever-normal granary bill, as I am pleased to term it, is more comprehensive, and is based upon the conception that we can control surpluses and deficits and at the same time maintain an even level of production in order to avoid violent fluctuations in price, to the injury of the producer and to the penalty of the consumer. No such idea is covered in the bill before us. The suggested bill treats of contracts for benefit payments and erosion, exactly as does the pending bill. I shall stand on that declaration now and hereafter.

I think I know what is in the proposed bill. We know that bill is to be brought before the Senate. The press has faithfully disclosed from day to day that the bill will be introduced. If it is not a serious proposal, why is the able chairman of the committee holding hearings on something he does not believe will ever come before the Senate? He is too able and adroit, too good a farmer and statesman, to permit himself to be misled in that fashion.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if there shall be found in the House of Representatives any who will introduce the bill—and I suppose their name is legion—and a similar bill is introduced in the Senate, it will not be a question of discretion on the part of the chairman of the committee; it will be a matter of discretion on the part of the committee. When a matter is of such importance as to engage the time of the able Senator from Oregon, of course we ought to have hearings, develop the facts, and then proceed with the wisdom that characterizes this body.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it is the part of good judgment that I offer an amendment to strike out "1942" and insert "1940", and I feel that the able chairman of the committee is half persuaded to accept my suggestion. I hope I will not have to argue the proposal. It would give us 2 years to continue the soil-erosion program, and in the meantime we will add to the program by the introduction and passage of a bill immensely more comprehensive in character and purpose.

I appeal to the good judgment of the able chairman of the committee, and with that I submit the matter for the consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "1942" and to insert "1940", on line 9 to strike out "1941" and insert "1939", and on page 2, line 6, to strike out "1942" and insert "1940."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Oregon will prevail, and I believe it is in the interest of the farmers themselves that it should prevail.

Extensive hearings were held on this bill in both the House and the Senate, and Senators who are interested will find, commencing at page 1206 of the House hearings and continuing through to page 1211 of the agricultural appropriation bill, the purposes for which this money was spent, the units for which it was spent, the amount per unit, and the States in which it was applicable.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, have hearings been held on this particular measure?

Mr. TYDINGS. Hearings were held concerning an appropriation to carry out this bill, and, as the Senator from New Mexico knows, to a large extent, the operation of the existing law is carried on by regulations rather than by specific provisions of the law itself. Practically every dollar that is expended of the $500,000,000 is being expended in accordance with the regulations promulgated by the Soil Conservation Service. Therefore, we have appropriated half a billion dollars and turned it over for a general purpose, and in the expenditure of that money the regulations promulgated by the Soil Conservation Service govern.

Let me show briefly, because it has been a hard task, what has happened. I do not want to be unduly critical. It has been difficult to provide a program which will apply to the entire country. But take the question of subsoiling, which is one of the most important soil-conservation activities, involving the attempt to eliminate surplus water from the soil. Water leaches the soil and carries off the fertilizer and carries off much of the topsoil, and so the Soil Conservation Service has properly concerned itself with what might be termed subsoiling, or underground drainage.

In carrying out that activity $2 an acre is allowed the farmer who will subsoil his farm. But only the farmers in Virginia and North Carolina can get the $2. If the work is done in Nebraska or Maryland or California the payment is not made. When interrogated as to why it was confined to the two States, Mr. Tolley said very frankly that in getting up the program they had largely taken the advice of the agricultural authorities in those States, namely, those in charge of the experiment stations, and so on. I asked him if he would not keep a list of the changes in this program to submit next year when he comes before us for another appropriation, because I felt that a field of administration existed there which could carry out the objectives of the act and at the same time be in the interest of wise expenditures.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read from the hearings. In one county in each of the two States of Tennessee and Kentucky a farmer is entitled to buy a cow upon certain terms. That privilege, however, is not granted to farmers in any other part of the country. If a farmer in the State of Delaware buys fertilizer he gets 75 cents an acre for putting the fertilizer on his land; but 10 miles west, in Maryland, if a farmer buys fertilizer and puts it on his land, instead of getting 75 cents an acre he gets a dollar an acre.

The Senators will find that there are certain provisions applicable to other States, which on the surface do not seem to have any rhyme or reason, but which could be applicable to the whole country.

I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks there be printed in the RECORD the table commencing on page 1206 and continuing to page 1210, of the House hearings on the agricultural appropriation bill, headed, "Performance for which payment is to be made under the 1937 agricultural conservation program formulated pursuant to the provisions of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act." In that table the practice is given, as well as the rate of payment to the area to which it is applicable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

[1] The most common rate is $2.50 per acre, this being the rate for the seeding of alfalfa in all States except in the Northeast region, where the rate is $3. The $1 rate applies only to wild white clover in New York and white clover in the East Central region. The $4 rate applies throughout the Western region if a good stand of a perennial legume is obtained and the nurse crop, if any, is not harvested for grain or hay. This rate also applies under like conditions with respect to alfalfa on dry-land farms in Nebraska and South Dakota.

[2] The most common rates are $1.50 and $2 per acre. The $1 rate applies only to the seeding of sweetclover in the North Central and Western regions. The $3 rate applies only in the Western region and on dry-land farms in Nebraska and South Dakota when a good stand is obtained and the nurse crop, if any, is not harvested for grain or hay.

[3] The most common rate is $1 per acre for nonleguminous green manure and winter cover crops and $2 per acre for summer legumes used as green manure crops. The $0.50 rate applies only for special cover and green manure crops in limited areas of the Western region and the $2.50 rate applies to legumes used as green manure crops in the Northeast region.

[4] The rate varies with the fineness of the limestone used and the average cost of limestone in the area.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if we continue this activity for 4 years, in my judgment there will not be as much effort made to spend this money wisely as if we shorten the time and during this formative or experimental period impress upon the Bureau the necessity of making the money go as far as possible and obtain the maximum amount of soil conservation. If Senators had been present in the committee where Mr. Tolley and his associates were present for a number of days, and if they could have heard the testimony, I am satisfied that they would have reached the conclusion I have just expressed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to say to the Senator that my interruption is only for the purpose of trying to ascertain the facts. I think I am trying to accomplish the same thing the Senator from Maryland is trying to accomplish. We may disagree as to how it should be accomplished.

However, I should like to call the Senator's attention to one matter. He said, in substance, that if we should shorten the time it would have a tendency to bring about a better expenditure of the money than if the time were extended 4 years. The Senator may be entirely right in his contention; but, as I see the situation, such shorter extension would have the opposite effect. It seems to me it would have the effect of hurrying up the process, because those affected would realize that they could not get anything unless they got it within 2 years; and necessarily, in order to come within the 2-year limit, it would often happen that those in charge could not in any given case give the consideration that the matter deserved.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator's point of view, but I do not agree with him. I do not believe the Senator would have reached that point of view had he been present during the hearings before the Appropriations Committee. I think all members of that committee who took part in interrogating the soil-conservation authorities did so with an idea of getting the best possible soil-conservation program.

There was general comment in the committee that there seemed to be a tremendous looseness in the expenditure of money by the soil-conservation authorities. I think that was excusable. It was due, of course, to the fact that they had this whole thing placed in their hands to apply to a country as large as our country, with no program before them, and they had to carry on and do the best they could. But it would be unfair to leave the Senate with the impression that the committee itself was satisfied with the way the money had been expended. It was far from satisfied. There was considerable sentiment in the committee that there should be a more definite program than the haphazard one which applies in many parts of the country.

I wish to deal again for a moment with the question of subsoiling. It is a simple matter. Subsoiling is just as important in Kentucky or Nebraska or Idaho or Maryland as it is in North Carolina or Virginia. Subsoiling may be very desirable in States other than Virginia and North Carolina; but in those States the farmer would not be encouraged to do it. There are no provisions in the regulations to reward the farmer if he does it in Nebraska; but if he does it in North Carolina or in Virginia he receives $2 per acre. Therefore, we cannot escape the conclusion that during the formative stage, when this program is being set up, Congress ought not to give too long a life to this bureau. Rather, we should keep them on their toes and be critical of this program, so that when it is finally adopted as a permanent thing it will be a sound program from beginning to end.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize, as I think every other student must—and the Senator has in effect just now said it—that in putting this program into force in a country so large as ours, we cannot expect perfection. The program was a new one. The method of soil treatment in one locality is not applicable at all in another locality; so we would expect mistakes to be made. We would expect those in charge to make numerous experiments before they reached what they believed to be the right course. It seems to me that better results could be obtained if they had sufficient time ahead of them in which to carry out the program—4 years rather than 2 years.

I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to another matter. I understand that the proposed bill about which we have been talking and which has not as yet been introduced, applies only to some specific agricultural products.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it applies to five agricultural products.

Mr. NORRIS. Five, I am told. I am a little embarrassed in trying to discuss the matter, because I confess I do not know much about the proposed bill. I have not had opportunity to examine it carefully. I think it is true of all the Senators that they have not had sufficient time to look into it fully.

The bill now before us is general in its terms. It is not confined to a few specific products. As I now remember—and again I desire to be corrected if I am wrong—the bill which we discussed yesterday in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry contains a provision which I cannot, of course, describe, but its general tenor is that when it goes into effect the specific agricultural products to which it applies are by its own terms eliminated from the other act. Is that correct?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It applies to title I, which is the diversion portion; not to the other portion.

Mr. NORRIS. So I am not looking for any conflict of authority. I am not satisfied with the work done by the Soil Conservation Service up to date, of course. I do not think anyone is satisfied with it. However, I should hate to stop it. I think the results which have come from the efforts at soil conservation have shown that it is something we ought to continue for the security of American agriculture. I do not see that any possible harm could come from our legislating now without reference to the bill which we are all talking about, which has not as yet been introduced. When it is introduced, and if it shall pass, we shall have time to study all its provisions; and if there are any conflicts between the provisions of that bill and the one now before us, the time to eliminate such conflicts, as I see the matter, is when the other bill is before us for discussion.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Assuming the correctness of the logic of the Senator from Nebraska, that there is no harm in extending the time 4 years, what additional benefit will come from extending it 4 years rather than 2 years?

Mr. NORRIS. There will be 2 years' additional benefit.

Mr. McNARY. Could we not extend it 2 years?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly we could; but if I were administering the law, and I were told that I had only 2 years for its administration, I should feel entirely differently than if I were told that I had 4 years in which to do it. The course which I should take would be very materially affected by the difference in time in which I had to carry out the provisions of the law.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe the Senator from Nebraska gets the point I am trying to make. If the act is extended 4 years, those who are running the soil-conservation program will be continued in office 4 years, and will spend the money we give them. If the act is extended only for 2 years, they must justify their existence when given 2 more years over the additional year they have already had, and an incentive will be afforded them to provide the wisest and best kind of program they can.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Speaker yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. At this point I desire to call a matter to the attention of the Senator from Maryland, because he has frequently spoken of extension of the act, referring thereby to an extension of the soil-conservation program, as I understand. This bill has nothing at all to do with the extension of the soil-conservation program. The soil-conservation program is already established as a permanent policy of the Government. The particular measure which we are discussing today relates only to whether it shall be continued under administration from Washington or whether it shall be turned back to the States.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. HATCH. I am told that several of the States themselves have not as yet complied with the provisions of the act and passed statutes whereby they can go ahead and administer the program. So, in reality, the Soil Conservation Act is going to be continued either from Washington or from the States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Not necessarily so. It is quite likely that Congress may in time, if the States do not want to help out, enact some sort of an allotment bill which will make it necessary for the States to provide a certain amount of money in order to share the Federal benefits. However, the point is that there is no reason why everything that the Senator argues for cannot be accomplished in 2 years under this proposed extension just as well as it could be accomplished in 4 years, and better in 2 years than in 4 years.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Maryland means by that that the States may comply within the 2-year period he may be correct, and his argument on that point may be appropriate.

Mr. TYDINGS. The longer we postpone asking the States to comply the more difficult it is going to be to get the States to comply with the Federal soil conservation program.

Mr. HATCH. But pointing out, if the Senator will pardon one more interruption, the looseness and injustices in the administration of the act really has nothing to do with the bill pending before the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; the question is just how far are we going to extend the law, whether for 2 years or 4 years.

I am in favor of soil conservation; I should like to support any appropriation or policy which would eliminate "dust bowls" and other harmful and injurious conditions which occur in many parts of the country. I do not want to take much time, but I wish to go on record as supporting any sound program which will conserve the soil of America. However, I cannot help but feel—and I am not going to go into detail—that there has not been that sort of an approach, in the main, to the subject of soil conservation; and, after the extended hearings which have been held, I believe that if we will limit the time to 2 years, that those administering the law are going to put on pressure to develop a better soil conservation program than they will if we give them 4 years of life, because 4 years will extend into another administration, and the desire to make good and have the law again extended will be absent if we give them the 4-year period.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator's contention that the time should be limited to 2 years is really born of a desire to have an accounting upon the part of those who are executing the law at the end of 2 years; is it not?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Idaho is correct, for our examination disclosed that, in many respects, the program had very little continuity or general purpose to it. That is not said by way of criticism, for it was a new program, and it was too much to expect those administering it to perfect it in 1 year. But we have to keep after them to perfect it just as rapidly as they can, because a very large appropriation is involved, and it will do the very purposes for which the money is provided great disservice unless there can be brought to the support of the program, so far as possible, unanimous public approval.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I realize the deep interest of the Senator from Maryland in agriculture, and always listen to him with a great deal of satisfaction. I should like to ask the Senator, since this program is somewhat dependent upon the action of the States, does he not believe that 2 years would be too short a period in which to expect all the States to take appropriate action? It is well known that the legislatures in many of the States meet only once every 2 years, and is it not further almost obvious that, if we are to have a program, 2 years is a very short time? It is necessary to work out such programs by experimentation and study, and it seems to me, if we are going to prosecute such a program, that 4 years is much to be preferred over 2.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot agree with the Senator from Texas, because, if 2 years are insufficient the Congress can certainly extend the law 2 more years whenever there is sufficient sentiment behind it, and it is believed that the program is worth while. If we were faced with the proposition that it was necessary to take 2 years or 4 years, and that would be the end of this program forever, then, I would adopt the philosophy of the Senator from Texas. But what is there to prevent Congress extending the period for 2 more years in 1940? In view of the few illustrations which I have given, which show that the program is not well formulated, and that the money is not being expended to the best advantage, will we not get better administration of this program by having an accounting every 2 years, and then curtailing it or enlarging it as circumstances and experience show to be wise?

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator permit just one other interruption?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says extend the law for 2 years, and then if we want to extend it we can extend it for 2 years more. That is very true. But what is the situation with regard to the bureau or department until it knows whether or not the law is going to be extended for 2 years? The Senator knows that those administering such laws are always in a state of excitement and uncertainty. Even now they will not talk to one about matters until they know what they are going to get for the fiscal year beginning next July. It seems to me that if we are going to get anything at all by reason of the experiment we have to give the department or the bureau a longer time, because they usually take two or three bites at it, and then back up and revise and modify and amend and then go ahead again. It seems to me that if we are to expect any substantial success from the program, we have got to give them 4 years instead of 2.

Mr. TYDINGS. My recollection is that the cost of administering this program—a sum which does not go to the farmers at all—is about $40,000,000. In other words, about 8 percent of the entire appropriation goes for salaries. That alone, it seems to me, is an expenditure greater than necessary to carry out this program, particularly when in many counties the farm organizations are voluntary and serve without pay. If we appropriate this huge sum of money, in my judgment—I may be wrong about it—and then give them 4 years to perfect this program, we are not going to get as economical administration or as sound administration of soil conservation as we would if those in charge knew they have got to come to Congress 2 years from now and make out a case and sustain the extension of the act.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. POPE. It happened that I was present at the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations and heard the examination conducted by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator only heard a part of it; he was there only during one afternoon.

Mr. POPE. Does not the Senator feel that the kind of examination he conducted at that time and that which was conducted in the House afforded a very good check-up on the activities during the year? When the representatives of the soil-conservation program have to come before the Appropriations Committee in connection with their appropriations for the ensuing year, does not the Senator feel that such an examination as he himself conducted with reference to routine farming and subsoil and other matters is about the most effective check-up?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is proving my case. That is the very reason I want another check up 2 years from now instead of 4. The Senator was at the committee hearing, waiting to be heard as a witness, and he himself knows that as a result of the committee's hearing in this matter many practices were uncovered which would best be eliminated, and that the soil-conservation authorities are going to try to work to those objectives. Now, if we do not have any check up for 4 years, we are going to lose what the Senator has just said was an advantage.

Mr. POPE. The point is that every year before the Appropriations Committee there would be just exactly the same careful check-up on their activities, whether the law is extended 2 years or 4 years. Each year they would give an accounting; there would be a complete check-up of their activities; and they could be called upon to explain their particular actions in connection with any feature of the program concerning which an explanation was desired. Therefore the matter of the extension for 2 years or 4 years, when we have such an annual examination, it seems to me, is not particularly in point or important.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator says an annual examination is a good thing but that there should be as few examinations as possible. I say if the annual examination is a good thing, let us have a complete reexamination in 2 years instead of 4 years. I am satisfied, as the Senator seems to be from the hearing which he attended, that from such examinations much good and very little evil comes.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to have the Senator consider the subject from this point of view: Congress determined upon a policy; it determined, presumably, that the soil-conservation program is a good thing as a policy for the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Whether or not it is properly administered, whether or not those administering it are doing the right thing in reference to it, is a question which the Senate and the Congress want to check upon annually. The medium of doing that is through the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. I disagree with the Senator there. I believe the best medium of doing that is not the Appropriations Committee but is the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, from which this very bill comes. This bill did not come from the Appropriations Committee. Our job there was to find out how much money was needed and what it was being spent for. The policy-making function should be that of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Therefore, if we have such a check and have a hearing on the policy before that committee 2 years from now, in my judgment, it will serve a good purpose.

Let me say further—and then I will yield the floor—that I have not the slightest desire at this period to criticize the administration of the law up to date, for I know a big problem was presented for solution. Nor am I trying to oppose soil conservation; I want to further it; but I believe that by adopting the 2-year amendment Senators who are greatly interested in agriculture will be furthering the interest of their constituents and the interests of the country at one and the same time.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield further to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In response to the argument of the Senator, I should like to submit a further thought. There has been considerable criticism of this administration by those who are opposed to the administration—and I might say that personally I think there is considerable ground for such criticism—to the effect that the administration does not have a policy which it follows through. Congress has enacted during the last 4 years many laws which have been of a temporary nature, and men engaged in business, men engaged in agriculture, and men engaged in other activities in this country, have complained from time to time that they never knew what the administration was going to do from one month to another.

Now we have adopted a soil-conservation program. It may be that the Department of Agriculture is 100-percent wrong in its method of administering that program, but the Congress believes—I think there is no Member of this body who does not believe—that in principle a soil-conservation program is wise. If we do not agree with the methods of its administration, it seems to me to be an absolutely fallacious way of handling the problem merely to say to those administering it, "We are going to have this program only for another 2 years." The best method of getting at defects in administration is the method pursued by the Committee on Appropriations, of bringing the administrators of the act before the committee once a year and giving them a thorough going over, pointing out to them that if they do not administer the program properly they will not get money for it. But let us not constantly be telling the farmers of the country, "This is only a temporary program. Perhaps we are for soil conservation and perhaps we are not." If the fault lies with the administration, the power lies in this body to cure it by dealing directly with the administration, and, so far as the committees of the Senate are concerned, that power lies with the Appropriations Committee and not with the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have listened with considerable interest to what the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has had to say, but it seems to me we would be derelict in our duty if we did not have an accounting annually, no matter what may be the length of the life of the activity which we have authorized.

I am impressed with the fact that this is almost a pioneering project. What might be the proper method of conserving the soil in one section of our country might be absolutely wrong in another section. Subsoiling on tight clay land might cause a capillary attraction in one section of the country and be beneficial. On sandy land the opposite treatment would be required. Those who are charged with carrying out the program have a responsibility which anyone might well feel justified in shirking, for the reason that from the tropics to the arctic we are carrying on our agricultural work, and climate differs, rainfall varies, the humidity differs, and a thousand and one elements of which we are not advised are involved. We must treat each one as it is indicated it should be treated.

In the 2 years during which we gave the Federal Government authority to demonstrate to the States what might be done under the proposed program, we have had responses from 13 or 14 States, which is a marvelous showing. If we can authorize the Government to go ahead for 4 years, keeping strict account of the annual expenditures, in order that those States whose legislatures meet only once every 2 or 4 years may come under the program, we would in that time have so far carried the work forward as to make it national in scope, probably entered into by practically all of the States.

It might appear that we had some doubt as to the effectiveness and importance of the program if we limited it to 2 years. We have had 2 years in which to demonstrate that it is feasible and beneficial. Although mistakes have been made, we ought really to admit that those in charge of the program are doing their duty. Any of us attempting to carry forward a pioneering work are necessarily going to make mistakes. I believe those who have the program in charge, as I have seen it in operation in my State, are doing their very best to find not only the process by which soil conservation can best be carried on but through their experiments they are finding the best vegetation for the various kinds of soil, the best crop to be planted to bind the soil and to prevent erosion, and what is best to build up a depleted soil.

It seems to me, if we are convinced that the program is worth while, we can check up the administrators annually with good results. We ought, however, to give all the States an opportunity to come under the program.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator what methods are available for checking up on them annually. I am not particularly concerned about the 2 years or the 4 years, because if the act is extended for 2 years, Congress will undoubtedly renew the extension; but I am interested to know whether or not there is to be any check upon those administering the act.

Mr. SMITH. I think it would be a good idea, either in this bill or in some other, to require all bureaus or agencies which are carrying on work of this nature to render an annual statement of their expenditures in considerable detail.

Mr. BORAH. I certainly think that is a sound suggestion.

Mr. SMITH. I think we ought to provide in the Soil Conservation Act, and in any other act involving the administration and expenditure of the money of the Government, that those administering the act and expending the money should be held to an annual accounting specifically setting forth how much has been spent and for what purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to comment very briefly upon the final exchange between the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. That exchange touches a point which chiefly interests and challenges me in respect to expenditures under the so-called Soil Conservation Act and kindred payments under other blanket farm grants. When the appropriation item for soil conservation was pending a few days ago I took the liberty of presenting four or five very concrete and specific exhibits to the Senate which indicated that, at least in respect to those four or five specific exhibits and all others like them, the Soil Conservation Act may be a high-grade, first-class racket, and that all of us, including the responsible administrations, will wish to clean up any such exploitation as these exhibits seem to imply.

There seemed to be some complaints about my statement in some senatorial quarters. The able Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] insisted that I had produced only five witnesses out of several million who had received checks and therefore my case lacked cumulative merit. I think that begs the question. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] insisted—and he may have been right—I was pursuing the wrong method; that I should quietly go down to the Department of Agriculture and present those exhibits and complaints and have them examined down there, lest in some insinuating way a prejudicial black eye should be given to the whole act because of a few unworthy and bad examples. It was further stated, and I agree, that the launching of this tremendous system suddenly and on a Nation-wide scale involved such ramifying responsibilities that there was bound to be some degree of errors despite all precaution to the contrary. This hazard, I may add, is inherent in all these lump-sum appropriations which ultimately depend upon administrative discretion for their disbursement.

Mr. President, I want to say this by way of supplement. I would not want a good cause—and a scientific attack upon soil erosion is a good cause—to be prejudiced unduly by a comparatively small percentage of bad administration and exploitation. I do not believe that will be the result of what I have done and what I intend to continue to do, because I think the best friend of a permanent soil-conservation program in the United States will be the one who insists that we have a soil-conservation program which clings to its pronounced purpose and is protected against all possible fraud. I think the best friend of a permanent, effective, and successful soil-conservation program will be the one who demands precisely the kind of public accounting, not quietly in the backroom of the Department of Agriculture, but publicly—the kind of accounting about which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] have been talking.

There is advantage in publicity. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] complained a little about the fact that evidently there was some publicity value being sought in the exhibits I presented the other day. There is very great advantage from publicity respecting any phase or degree of maladministration of public responsibility. Publicity puts all concerned on notice and on warning against a continuation of bad practice. One of the results of the publicity is that I am now beginning to receive more of the exhibits, so that the cumulative effect may even be impressive to my able friend the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] when the roll is finally completed.

I wish to read one letter. That will satisfy me for this afternoon. This letter came to me this morning. I am not clear as to the precise bounty program to which it refers because there is some confusion on the subject. But it generally illuminates the dangers inherent in all of these general farm grants of which the Soil Erosion Act is the latest.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator mean to say he is going to read one letter a day from now on?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot promise to confine myself within that limit until I know what the Supreme Court debate program is to be. [Laughter.]

This frank letter is from Sikeston, Mo. It is dated May 16, 1937, and is addressed to me:

DEAR SIR: I noticed in Mr. Frank R. Kent's column that you had information that farmers had received money for reducing their crop after they had harvested it. This is what I did in 1936. This is how I got it:

Some 10 days before election a man came to me on the street of Sikeston, told me he had some Government money for me. This was a great surprise to me, as I was not expecting any money. But he told me if I would go over to his car and sign a paper he would give me $15. So I went. I thought it best to read before I signed. So on reading I found it to be a contract to reduce my 1936 cotton crop. I told him I could use the money, but I did not see how I could reduce my 1936 crop when I already had it gathered and sold, but he assured me it would be all right, for he had $75 to be divided up among five of us on the same terms. So I signed and got the money. I would make this statement under oath if asked to do so.

Very respectfully,

G. W. ANDERSON.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do.

Mr. BORAH. If Mr. Anderson is telling the truth, he ought to be brought to Washington and permitted to tell the truth under oath. If that kind of crooked work has been going on in regard to the public money, the G. W. Andersons ought to be here in Washington. This is the reason no progress can be made in reducing Government expenses. This incident discloses a crime and ought to be so treated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I completely agree with that observation. The trouble is that there is only an occasional G. W. Anderson who will have courage enough and candor enough to step forward and tell what happened. We hear of case after case after case which we become reasonably sure is true, yet upon which we cannot get definite evidence, because these gentlemen frequently dislike to tell the story of this sort of a transaction.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. That certainly is the most astounding statement in connection with the allotment of benefit payments. I think the Senator ought to insist that not only Mr. Anderson but the officer who perpetrated that crime should be brought here and an example made because that incident certainly is beyond anything I have had brought to my attention.

A good many things have been done that ought not to have been done, but they did have some little semblance of complying with the law. This was an open, outright violation of the principles of the act. This man not only had not reduced his acreage, but he had made his crop and sold it; and then he got $15 because the officer had some money he wanted to give to somebody.

Mr. VANDENBERG. This case is not very much worse than some of those which I presented a few days ago and which did not seem to make very much of an impression on the Senate at that time. Furthermore, I remind the Senate that the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] specifically stated in the hearings that Members of Congress had been invited to participate in benefits for doing nothing outside of the routine farming which would have been pursued regardless of the law. The Senator from Maryland has also said today that members of the Appropriations Committee have been very much dissatisfied with what he termed the looseness of the administration of some of these funds.

Mr. President, this sort of thing cannot be excused in the high and holy name of soil-erosion control; and I do not believe that the Department of Agriculture itself will have anything but complete reprobation for this sort of thing. I have a very high personal respect for the Secretary of Agriculture, regardless of how much I may disagree with him in respect of some of his political philosophy. I am perfectly sure that he would be outraged by such occurrences, precisely as are those who have discussed them here today.

I have sent to the Secretary of Agriculture several letters that have come to me heretofore, including those which I previously presented to the Senate. I shall also present this letter to the Secretary of Agriculture; and I am very hopeful that under the continuation of the soil-erosion and other kindred programs for the next fiscal year, during which time we almost literally give the Secretary of Agriculture something like $400,000,000 to distribute as he sees fit, some method may be devised to police this distribution and all similar distributions.

I desire to make it perfectly plain that I am not claiming for a moment that this sort of thing is typical of all soil-erosion and other benefit payments. I am perfectly sure it is not typical. I am perfectly sure that a majority of the payments are an honest effort to compensate for legitimate cooperation on the part of the farmer. That, however, is all the more reason why the rackets and the racketeers should be cleaned up.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not see how this kind of thing can go on to any degree whatever without there being great looseness upon the part of those responsible for the distribution of the money and the administration of this law.

The man whose letter has been read by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] states that the person who approached him had a contract, and offered the contract to the writer of the letter for signature; that the person offering the contract had a certain amount of money to be distributed among other farmers and was willing that the writer of the letter should have his portion of it.

The man who had these contracts evidently was an agent representing the Government, and I assume that at some time or some place or other he was to make an accounting. It would seem to me that there must be a looseness which amounts almost to dereliction upon the part of those who are administering the law when such a man was permitted to travel over the country with contracts in one hand and money in the other for the purpose of buying whomsoever he thought it was possible to buy.

That is a matter which ought to be checked up. I do not agree with the doctrine that all this skullduggery and all this lawlessness and all this crookedness is down at the bottom. It cannot be possible. Somebody is responsible up toward the top. They may not know of the specific acts, but they know of the method by which these things are being carried on, if they have any system whatever.

I think Mr. Anderson ought to be brought here. I think the man who gave him the money ought to be identified. I think the responsibility ought to be fixed; and perhaps in some way or other we can stop some of this constant flowing of the people's money into the hands of those who have no right to have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY].

Mr. POPE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the proper place the following proviso:

Provided, That an annual accounting shall be made to Congress as to the expenditures of this money and for what specific projects it was thus expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HISTORY OF NAVIGATION ON THE TENNESSEE RIVER SYSTEM

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper and report, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed, with the illustrations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a letter from the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority submitting a survey entitled "A History of Navigation on the Tennessee River and Its Tributaries", made pursuant to Executive Order No. 6161 (June 8, 1933), delegating to the Board certain powers granted to me by sections 22 and 23 of the Tennessee Valley Act of 1933.

The attention of the Congress is invited to the suggestion of the Board that the report be printed as a Senate or House document.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 19, 1937.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2076) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Mo., which were, on page 1, line 7, after "1929", to insert "heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved April 15, 1932, and August 30, 1935", and on the same page, in line 7, after the word "hereby" to insert "further."

Mr. TRUMAN. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2077) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near St. Charles, Mo., which were, on page 1, line 7, after "1929", to insert "heretofore extended by act of Congress approved April 15, 1932, and August 30, 1935", and on the same page, in line 7, after "hereby", to insert "further."

Mr. TRUMAN. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. BLACK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6551, to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Alabama whether this bill is on the calendar?

Mr. BLACK. A similar Senate bill is on the calendar. The bill which passed the House has not been placed on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. The House has passed a bill similar to the one pending in the Senate?

Mr. BLACK. The House has passed a similar bill.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the intention of the Senator to ask that the bill be considered this afternoon?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; that had been my intention. We can take it up, and if there shall be any objection, or if there shall be a desire to prolong the debate, we can let it go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill taken up and made the unfinished business. If the Senator from Oregon should desire that the measure be not disposed of this afternoon, let me say that it is my intention to move a session of the Senate tomorrow, when consideration of the bill may be resumed.

Mr. McNARY. If we should dispose of the bill today, would it be the desire of the Senator to have the Senate adjourn until Friday?

Mr. ROBINSON. I had thought that perhaps it would be better to meet tomorrow, and then, unless something unexpected should arise, we would be ready to adjourn for a longer time.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. That is a very generous statement on the part of the Senator. I think we might proceed to the consideration of the bill and then perhaps, if we are to have a session tomorrow, wait and have a final vote on the bill at that time.

Mr. ROBINSON. We will have a session tomorrow anyway.

Mr. McNARY. In the meantime the Senator from Alabama can cover the provisions of the bill in a statement.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I shall have no objection. It is my belief that we could easily proceed to the final consideration of the bill this afternoon. There are very few controversial questions involved in it. I may be mistaken as to that.

Mr. McNARY. Let us proceed, and if there is a desire that consideration be postponed until tomorrow we can take that course.

Mr. BLACK. That is prefectly satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6551.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in order that we may proceed in the usual manner, and since there are some differences between the bill which passed the House and the Senate committee bill, and because the Senate Committee on Education and Labor has already reported a Senate bill from that committee, I now move that all after the enacting clause be stricken from the bill as it passed the House and that Senate bill 2102 as reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor be substituted.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I for one would like to have an explanation as to the differences between the bills before that action is taken.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to state the differences. I may say to the Senator that after this amendment shall be agreed to, if the Senate shall agree to it, the bill will still be open to amendment. There are certain committee amendments which would have to be considered, and it would still be open to such other amendments as might be suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may say to the Senator from Alabama that he has been informed by the parliamentary clerk that if the motion of the Senator from Alabama shall be agreed to the bill will not then be open to further amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I do not wish to have it placed in that situation, because it is my desire to have the bill open for such amendment as the Senate may desire to make.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the desire of the Senator to ask that the House bill be laid before the Senate, and that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and the Senate committee bill substituted?

Mr. BLACK. That is my desire.

Mr. McNARY. If that were done, it would not come within the inhibition.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate committee bill would still be open to amendment.

Mr. BLACK. That was the motion I thought I made, and that is my purpose.

Mr. McNARY. I thought the motion was simply to proceed to the consideration of a given order of business on the calendar.

Mr. BLACK. I did make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6551, and that motion was agreed to.

I ask unanimous consent that all after the enacting clause of the bill as it passed the House be stricken out and that there be substituted for consideration Senate bill 2102 as reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, with the understanding that the Senate will consider such amendments as have been offered or will be offered by the committee or by any Senator who desires to offer amendments. I am sure that will reach the question which has been raised.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is this difference, is there not, in the situation with which we are now confronted? As I understand, the bill which passed the House limits the extension to 2 years, and the Senate committee bill provides for a permanent status.

Mr. BLACK. That is one of the differences.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am using that as an illustration.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If we agreed to substitute the Senate committee bill would we not automatically agree in the first instance to the permanent establishment as distinguished from the 2-year extension?

Mr. BLACK. We would not, because I asked in my request, in order that there might be no question whatsoever about it, that the Senate bill as reported by the committee be substituted for the House bill and be considered by the Senate, with the understanding that it would be open both for committee amendment and such other amendments as might be suggested by Senators in the regular process of consideration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But the 2-year problem will not arise unless a provision covering it shall be offered as an amendment to the Senate committee bill after the substitution.

Mr. BLACK. No, it would not; that is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The motion to proceed to the consideration of the House bill having been agreed to, the Senator from Alabama may make a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the provisions of the Senate committee bill, in which event both the bill as it passed the House and the Senate committee bill would be subject to perfection by amendment. I make that suggestion to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation as the present occupant understands it. The Senator from Alabama moved to substitute the Senate committee bill for the bill which passed the House. Once that motion is adopted, the Senate committee bill will be an amendment to the bill as it passed the House, and that amendment having been adopted by the Senate cannot be perfected after that time. At any time while the Senate is considering the motion of the Senator from Alabama, the amendment which he proposes may be perfected by further amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I withdrew the motion I first made and simply asked unanimous consent, in order that everyone might perfectly understand the situation and in order that there might be no question that we substitute the Senate committee bill for the bill which passed the House, with the understanding that we would consider the Senate committee bill subject to any amendment which might be offered by the committee or by any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is not my intention to speak at any great length on the measure, as it has been reported by the committee or the measure as it was passed by the House. I shall briefly state the differences between the two bills. Then I shall be very happy to answer any questions which may be asked concerning them.

The first difference between the two measures will be found in the language appearing on page 1, in lines 5 and 6 of Senate bill 2102. The House bill provides for the creation of a Civilian Conservation Corps for the purpose of providing employment as well as vocational training. The Senate committee has recommended that the words "as well as vocational training" be stricken from the bill, and that there be substituted the words "and training for citizenship." I may state that, in my judgment, there is very little practical difference between the two proposals. Under either proposal, as I understand, the camps could continue the same vocational training and the same educational work in which they have been engaged in the past.

The first major difference between the two proposals is that under the Senate committee's recommendations the Civilian Conservation Corps is not limited to a 2-year continuance. The House, by vote after the bill was reported by the committee, limited the continuance of the corps to 2 years. So far as I can see, frankly speaking, there is very little difference between the two proposals along that line, for the reason that if we should establish a permanent Civilian Conservation Corps by law, at the end of 2 years both Houses could decline to make appropriations, and it would cease to exist, or at the end of 2 years the law could be repealed.

Certain advantages were thought by some of us to exist in connection with a permanent establishment of the camps. It is undoubtedly true that better plans could be made for purchases of goods, for mapping out a program of work, and for providing for the future activities of the camps, if it should be understood that they were not to be cut off at the expiration of 2 years. On the other hand, the argument was made in the House that it might not be desirable at the expiration of 2 years to continue this C. C. C. activity. So the House bill comes to us with a limitation of 2 years. That is the first major difference.

The second major difference—and perhaps that and the one to which I have just referred are the only real differences between the two proposals—relates to civil service. The House bill contains no provisions for civil-service employment in the corps. The Senate bill contains provisions for civil-service employment. It would authorize the employment of those who are now engaged in activities in connection with the corps upon a noncompetitive civil-service examination. The House bill provides no civil-service requirements whatever.

Those two differences—first, as to the length of time the corps shall continue to exist; second, as to civil service—constitute the real major differences between the two measures.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I understood the Senator to say that those who are now employed may pass under civil service by taking the noncompetitive examination. What about those to be employed in the future? Must they come under civil service?

Mr. BLACK. They would come under the regular civil-service rule.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me make one other observation. Great troubles are occurring, growing out of the Civilian Conservation Corps, in one respect. Many of the C. C. C. boys are put in charge of trucks. They go rushing over the highways at the rate of 40, 50, or 60 miles an hour, and are injuring many persons. They are running many others off the roads. Would placing the employees upon a civil-service basis enable the Corps in some way to get competent truck drivers, or competent drivers of other vehicles?

Mr. BLACK. It is my judgment that it would.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator.

I do know that that is a serious difficulty. Few persons, however, have any idea of the number of cases of damage and death that are caused by the Civilian Conservation Corps truck drivers. Almost every time the Claims Committee meet we have dozens of claims before us growing out of injuries caused by recklessness and carelessness on the part of the Civilian Conservation Corps drivers.

I hope that matter will be taken care of in some way. Of course, I favor the Senate feature with respect to the civil service over the House feature, and also the Senate feature making the corps permanent. I favor both provisions the Senator has mentioned as contained in the Senate bill over the House provisions.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator in favoring the Senate provisions over the House provisions. I also understand the seriousness of the other question which the Senator has raised, because, as a member of the Committee on Claims, I have not only had occasion to study cases involving injuries resulting from accidents happening in my own State, but cases involving injuries which have been inflicted by trucks in various parts of the country.

Of course, I understand, and so does the Senator from Kentucky, that it would be impossible to operate as many trucks as the corps must necessarily operate without some injuries resulting; but it has occurred to me that that is one of the loose features, if I may so express it, in connection with the operation of the corps, and that perhaps more attention should be given to obtaining competent drivers in order that fewer injuries may occur.

Mr. LOGAN. I fully agree with the Senator from Alabama on that point, and I believe it ought to be dwelt on considerably.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to ask the Senator about the changes which will be made in the existing C. C. C. law by this proposed new legislation. Are there not some substantial differences between the existing C. C. C. law and the proposed new legislation?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator will find that the differences are not very substantial, except as to placing the Civilian Conservation Corps on a permanent basis, and with respect to the civil-service feature. There are some other differences which the Senator will find outlined if he will glance at the short report made by the committee on the Senate bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have one matter particularly in mind, and perhaps the Senator from Alabama can enlighten me with respect to it. As I understand, there had to be a basis of need in order to enroll in one of the present camps, and each member of a camp had to send home a certain sum of money.

Mr. BLACK. I was just coming to that particular paragraph.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is what I wanted to know about.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to explain that.

The Senator first refers to the fact that heretofore those in charge have limited enrollees to those who are on relief. The pending bill provides that the enrollees shall be secured from citizens of the United States who are unemployed and in needy circumstances. Thus, it will be seen that it is not required that they be actually on relief.

I may state to the Senator from Michigan that there was considerable opposition in the committee against thus broadening the scope for obtaining enrollees in the camps. An amendment was offered in the committee upon which the vote was very close. The amendment proposed to strike out the words "unemployed and in needy circumstances." A number of members of the committee felt that while it was most likely that enrollees would come from that group, it was hardly fair to put that requirement in the law.

They took the position that in some way someone might consider it a reflection, express or implied, upon the enrollee simply because he was unemployed and in need. On a vote, however, the committee did not accept that viewpoint.

It may be possible that that particular amendment will be offered again on the floor for a vote in the Senate. I do not know whether it will be offered or not. As the bill is now reported to the Senate, all that is necessary is that the applicant shall be unemployed and in need. It is not necessary that he be taken from the relief roll.

Following that up, if the Senator will look at the respective sections 9 of the two bills he will find another difference related to the subject and in line with his inquiry. The Senate bill in section 9 provides that:

> The compensation of enrollees shall be in accordance with schedules approved by the President, and enrollees shall be permitted, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the director, to make allotments of pay to dependents.

The House bill, on the contrary, provides that:

> And enrollees with dependent member or members of their families shall be required, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the director, to make allotments of pay to such dependents.

The difference is, therefore, that the Senate bill gives to the administrative officers of the corps the right to permit, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by them, such allotments to be made, while the House bill absolutely requires, as a matter of law, that such allotments be made to dependents.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Most assuredly, if we are going to retain the unemployment and needy clauses, we ought to require the remission of money to dependents. I should like to say to the Senator, however, that I do not favor such a stringent requirement as to need as that provided in order that young men may be eligible to the C. C. C. camps because, if this is a good agency, I do not see why meritorious young men should be denied its advantages simply because they are not in need. I think there ought to be a liberal policy as to eligibility, but if enrollees are in need the inference is that their families are also in need, and they ought to be made to remit certain amounts to their parents.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that possibly an amendment will be offered on the floor in line with the amendment that was offered in the committee to strike out the language that enrollees must be unemployed and in need. Such an amendment was offered in the Senate committee, but was defeated.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would not be sure unless I heard the debate, but my inclination now is to support such an amendment.

Mr. BLACK. The objection to that proposal offered in the committee was that it might make it possible to take in a great number who were confronted by no necessity whatever, while others who really needed employment would be denied the opportunity to enter the camps.

Now, with reference to the difference between required and being permitted, the law with reference to the veterans has not required them to make allotments to their people at home. I assume that that is probably on the basis of the distinction just drawn by the Senator from Texas, that veterans are accepted as veterans and not merely because they are in need. So the law has not required heretofore that allotments be made to dependents back home; but in order to prevent conditions which may easily arise where numbers of men in the camps have at the end of a month or at the beginning of the next month $30 left, while others have allotted all but $5, those in charge of the administration of this agency have provided banking privileges with a department of the Government so that the members of the camps, in reality, obtain most of their pay at the end of the term, and they also obtain a part of their pay each month, as do other enrollees who have allotted a portion of their money to dependents back home. Those in charge of the administration of the camps believe that it is better to have an allotment made, and rules and regulations have been adopted for that purpose, and the allotments have been made. At the same time, they express the belief that circumstances and conditions might arise which would make it inadvisable at a particular time or place, on account of special conditions, to require a uniform allotment on the part of the enrollees. While they have heretofore required an allotment and have indicated that it is their intention to continue to require it, except under special circumstances and conditions, they do not believe, as expressed in their testimony, that it should be written into the law as an ironclad requirement. Frankly, I do not see that it is a matter of any great importance in connection with the entire subject, since they have heretofore required the allotment by regulation. The Senate bill, therefore, simply permits it to be done, while the House bill requires it to be done. That is the difference between the two bills in that regard.

There is one other section that was added in the House that is not in the Senate bill.

The House bill provides as to the pay of the enrollees that it "shall not exceed $30 per month", except as to 10 percent of the members "who may be designated as leaders, and who shall receive not more than $36 a month." It is also—

Provided further, That not to exceed 6 percent shall receive $45 as leaders.

It is my understanding that someone was fearful that unless a limitation was provided, hereafter there might be issued an order which would raise the compensation of the boys in the camps above $30, and therefore this ironclad limitation was placed in the bill. There is no such limitation in the Senate bill, although I know of no purpose at this time—none has been developed—to increase the compensation of the enrollees in the camps.

I may state with reference to the remainder of that limitation that I am informed it would be perfectly possible for the camps to continue their activities along the same lines they heretofore have followed if there should be adopted all this amendment, which provides that not more than 10 percent of the members of the corps may be designated as leaders, and which fixes their compensation and provides that a certain number shall receive not more than $45 a month. Personally, I see no reason to have that limitation in the bill, and it does not appear in the Senate bill.

There is one other very slight difference which occurs at the end of section 16 of the bill. That section provides for the first time for settlements to be made by the corps for injuries up to the amount of $500, which shall be final and conclusive if accepted by the claimants. In order to make it sure that the settlement must be accepted by the claimants, a slight amendment was made to the language of the bill as originally introduced and to the language of the bill as it appears in the House measure.

Those are the substantial differences between the two bills.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I understood the Senator to say a settlement made by the court. What court?

Mr. BLACK. Not by a court but by the administrative officials of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. HUGHES. We have before the Committee on Claims many bills arising because of injuries due to Civilian Conservation Corps activities and, in my opinion, it would be an excellent thing if such claims could be passed on by someone familiar with the facts.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator is correct. Having passed on a number of such bills, I was anxious to extend that opportunity, but I did not desire that the language be possible of such construction that a claimant would be forced to accept a settlement which was offered to him by this agency of the Government. If the agency of the Government reaches the conclusion that a claimant is entitled to $400 damages by reason of the injury, and the claimant is willing to accept that sum, that will, of course, obviate the necessity of offering a bill in Congress. That is exactly what is provided in this measure.

These are, in reality, the differences between the House bill and the Senate bill. One of the chief differences between the bill as it is now presented and the original legislation is that under the pending Senate bill the Civilian Conservation Corps is to be permanent. There is also the change with reference to taking as enrollees those who are on relief rolls.

It is not my purpose to attempt to tell the Members of the Senate what the C. C. C. camps have done. It is my belief that all Senators are familiar with the C. C. C. program, which, in my judgment, has been one of the greatest achievements during the past 4 years. It has given young men, and will continue to give young men, between the ages of 17 and 23, and certain veterans, opportunity for employment which they would not otherwise have and, at the same time, is adding, in a constructive way, to the wealth of the Nation and to the happiness of its people. I would consider it utterly futile to attempt to argue that question in this body, for I know that the bill will be passed. There may be differences as to the exact language that should be adopted in order to carry out the ideas of the Members of the Senate; there may be, and doubtless will be, differences as to whether we should, in the law, limit the continuance of the camps to 2 years or whether we should provide in the law for a permanent authorization; there may be, and will be, some differences as to the civil-service provisions; there may be other differences with reference to the language, but——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill as to whether or not the committee gave any consideration to the question of establishing a uniform policy with regard to the service of reserve officers with the C. C. C. camps? At the present time I understand that is dependent wholly on the views or the whim or the fancy of the general who is in command of the corps area in which the camps are located. In some of the areas the orders require service to be limited to one term of 6 months, and in other areas the officer is entitled to serve two or three different terms. It seems to me that may cause a great deal of confusion, and I have been wondering whether or not that was brought to the attention of the committee when the bill was under consideration.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; the matter has been brought to the attention of the committee. Numerous communications have come to me from Reserve officers, as I have no doubt they have come to other Senators. I have discussed the matter with officers of the corps. In addition to that, testimony was taken on the question. I have been informed by the present officials of the Civilian Conservation Corps that they prefer to have the privilege of utilizing the services of the Reserve officers over a longer period than 6 months. I have been informed by them that frequently they have been compelled to change when the change meant an actual injury to the efficiency of the service.

The Senator is absolutely correct in his statement that there have been different rules in different corps areas. However, the officials of this agency would prefer that no ironclad legislation be enacted which would require them to continue these services. They are making an effort at the present time to secure the thorough cooperation of the executive department, the President of the United States, and the officials of the War Department, in order that they may not hereafter suffer from losing the services of valuable men.

Of course, we all understand there are different ideas about where officers should serve. Some of the generals believe this service is so excellent for the Reserve officers that it is proper that it should be distributed over the country, looking to the training of the Reserve officers. Representatives of the Civilian Conservation Corps believe, however, that the chief end and aim is not the training of the officers but their good services in aiding in carrying out the authorized work. They realize, of course, that incidentally the officers themselves are greatly benefited by the training.

If my information is correct, I believe I can assure the Senator from Georgia that it is not necessary to attempt to perform the rather delicate task of providing in the bill a specific term of service for the officers in C. C. C. camps. I say that because I know the officials of the Civilian Conservation Corps have realized the advantages which are derived from continuous service by the Army officers.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am delighted to have that assurance. The services of the Reserve officers with the Civilian Conservation Corps do not constitute a military function. The facilities of the War Department are merely utilized to carry on the very great task of organizing a large number of young men into units where they may do work which will be of permanent value to the country. For my part, I have heartily disapproved the efforts of some corps area commanders to shuffle their officers around more from the standpoint of military training for those officers than having in view the benefits which might accrue to the young men in the camps by virtue of having experienced officers to direct their activities.

Mr. BLACK. I have been informed, from sources which I consider to be thoroughly authentic, that changes have been made in some instances which have greatly increased the expenses of operating the camps. This was true because while the services of an officer who had become familiar with the work were needed to continue the activities in the camp, nevertheless the officer was taken away. On the other hand, we can readily understand that if it were required under the law to keep these officers a certain length of time it would frequently be exceedingly difficult to make a change which might need to be made in the interest of the public service. I can assure the Senator from Georgia and other Members of the Senate that those in charge of this agency thoroughly realize the value of continuous service by officers who are engaged in these activities. It is their desire to obtain more uniform action throughout the Nation along this line and to continue to receive the services of such Reserve officers as perform their duties efficiently and well.

I shall be very glad to answer any questions that any other Senator may wish to ask in connection with the matter.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I can say to the Senator from Alabama that I am in general greatly in sympathy with the work that has been done the Civilian Conservation Corps, but two or three questions have suggested themselves to my mind. The first one is as to the size of the organization.

I understand that in the body at the other end of the Capitol a great deal of dispute occurred as to whether the organization should be limited to 350,000 or 300,000 or some other figure. I should like to have the Senator from Alabama explain to the Senate what the testimony before his committee showed in that regard, particularly in view of the fact that day before yesterday I received a letter from the head of the Forestry Service connected with the Civilian Conservation Corps in which he said it was necessary to abandon certain camps because applications for enrollment in the Civilian Conservation Corps had fallen some 30,000 below the needs of the C. C. C. In other words, it would appear that there has been a 10 percent falling off in applications for membership in the C. C. C., which it seems to me might have some weight in determining the size of the Civilian Conservation Corps to be authorized in this bill.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator was kind enough to show me the letter, and yesterday afternoon I discussed the situation with Mr. McEntee, who is assistant to Mr. Fechner. Mr. McEntee is here now. I asked him to be here so that if I needed him to answer any questions asked by Senators we could have the advantage of his presence.

I may say to the Senator that Mr. McEntee has informed me that the camps which have been abandoned, such as those about which the Senator received the communication just referred to, would have been abandoned whether or not the enrollment had fallen off.

Mr. CLARK. So far as I am concerned, I have no disposition to quarrel with the authorities as to the location of a camp. In other words, if one camp should be closed and another one opened, I have no disposition to quarrel with the authorities of the Civilian Conservation Corps on that issue. However, if it be true that camps are being closed all over the United States because there is a substantial falling off in the number of applications for enrollment under the allotment, it seems to me that is a matter which should be considered in connection with the limit to be put on the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. BLACK. The reason why I prefaced my remarks as I did was that these camps were not abandoned because of the failure or falling off of enrollment, although they were abandoned at an earlier date than they would have been but for the falling off in enrollment. That is what I had in mind.

So far as I am able to determine, the authorities have no doubt that they will receive enrollments sufficient to reach the number fixed in the bill. However, this is the maximum limitation and not the minimum. The C. C. C. authorities express the belief that there may be times hereafter, and so far as I understand they express the hope that there will be times hereafter, when by reason of general conditions throughout the United States there may not be 300,000 enrolling, but the law does not require that there shall be 300,000 in the camps. It fixes that number as the maximum limitation. There seems to be no doubt on their part that at the present time there will be a need for 300,000 enrollees.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to ask the Senator whether there is anything in this bill which prohibits giving military training in the C. C. C. camps.

Mr. BLACK. There is nothing in the bill which authorizes giving military training. An amendment was offered in the Senate committee which would have provided for military training.

Mr. CONNALLY. And the Military Affairs Committee turned it down?

Mr. BLACK. The Committee on Education and Labor turned it down. This bill went to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CONNALLY. It did not go to the Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. BLACK. It did not.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me this bill ought to provide for military training in these camps. We are spending nearly a billion dollars a year to provide an Army and Navy, and yet we are refusing to let the young men in the C. C. C. camps have military training. They have military commanders—a captain or a major, with uniforms and boots on—but they do not train anybody.

I know that the so-called pacifists and others possibly would oppose that idea. There is no Member of this body who is stronger for peace than am I; but it seems to me that if the Government is to establish C. C. C. camps, both for physical reasons and for the future needs of the country and for the welfare of the young men themselves at least some character of military training ought to be given in the camps, because every young man in America, whether he wills it or whether he does not, whether we will it or not, is a potential soldier in some future war; and I would rather that he would face it with some degree of training than to be rushed off and fed to the cannon without any preparation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I may state to the Senator from Texas that, as I said before, this matter was presented to the committee. It may be again presented on this floor. I do not know. The vote in the committee was overwhelmingly against the proposal. As I recall, it received only one vote in the committee. If that was a cross section of sentiment in general, it would indicate that it was opposed to that idea with reference to these camps.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senate bill is passed instead of the House bill, the question of the 2-year period will be in conference, will it not?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to say a few words on that question before the debate closes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. From glancing over the bill, I take it that there is no change in the control of the camps; that they will continue to be under the military authorities.

Mr. BLACK. The camps are under the control of the Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is the same as the military authorities.

Mr. BLACK. No; Mr. Fechner is the Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps, but the bill continues to give the privilege of utilizing the services of other departments. Heretofore the services of the War Department, the Agricultural Department, the Department of Labor, and the Department of the Interior have been utilized; but if the Senator will read the bill he will note that the rules for the operation of the camps and the control of the camps come under the administration of the Civilian Conservation Corps itself.

In that connection, if I may be permitted to digress for just one moment, and then I will answer any other question that may be asked, there is one other difference between the two bills to which I did not call attention. The House bill provides a salary of $10,000 for the Director. The Senate bill provides a salary of $12,000. Twelve thousand dollars is the salary which has been drawn by the Director since the first day the camps were in existence.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator explain to the Senate why Mr. Fechner should get $12,000, and the Director of the Works Progress Administration and the Relief Administration, for instance, should get $10,000? Is there anything about Mr. Fechner or about his activities which particularly entitles him to a greater salary than a Member of the House of Representatives or a Member of the United States Senate, or the heads of most of the bureaus of the Government, or Mr. Hopkins, for example? Just where does Mr. Fechner get his particular qualifications to draw this excess salary?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator has asked a question with reference to comparisons the answer to which, as of course the Senator realizes, would depend upon the person who was asked. For instance, take the difference between the salary of a Senator and that of Mr. Fechner: I have no doubt that we could approach many persons who would tell us that Mr. Fechner draws a better salary because he is entitled to more than a Senator is entitled to. The Senator and I would not agree to that but a great many persons might do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, how much does Mr. Fechner draw?

Mr. BLACK. Twelve thousand dollars. A great many persons would make that reply. If we should compare Mr. Fechner's salary with that of Mr. Hopkins I think we could readily find persons in this body and outside of this body who would disagree as to whether or not Mr. Hopkins ought to draw as much salary as Mr. Fechner. So, when we come down to individuals, the answer would depend largely on the viewpoint of the person inquired of with reference to a particular individual.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will yield, I have no desire or disposition to compare the relative ability of Mr. Fechner and of Mr. Hopkins. It would be presumptuous for me to engage in anything of that kind, of course. What I desired to point out, however, was the relative importance of the work they have been doing. It seems to me to be very difficult for anybody to make it appear that the administration of the C. C. C. is more important than handling the vast billions which have been passed out through the relief agencies and through the W. P. A. As a matter of fact, I think it might be a good thing to cut the salaries of both these men for the purpose of keeping them from having so much time to make radio speeches having to do with legislation pending before Congress which is none of their business and has nothing to do with their activities.

Leaving that question aside, however, I cannot see any particular argument for granting Mr. Fechner $2,000 more than Mr. Hopkins, or $2,000 more than members of the Maritime Commission, or $2,000 more per annum than the members of other great commissions and other great governmental agencies whose work, to say nothing of the character of the individuals, is certainly not less important than that of Mr. Fechner.

Mr. BLACK. I may state to the Senator, as to radio speeches, that again there would probably be a disagreement as to viewpoint between those who favored what the radio speaker said and those who were opposed to what the radio speaker said.

Mr. CLARK. I am sure there would be. I have no hesitancy in disclosing my position on that subject.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that recently I heard a speech by one of those gentleman which I thought was an excellent speech. I am by no means sure that the Senator agrees with me.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will yield, let me say to him that I have no disposition on the face of the earth to interfere with the expression of opinion by any individual in the United States on any important public question, or any public question, whether it is important or not. My objection to the expressions of Mr. Fechner, Mr. Hopkins, and others was that there was no possible reason for their being put on the radio except in an effort to coerce the employees or the recipients of relief into a belief that it is necessary for them to conform to the views of the persons who are passing out public funds in order to retain their positions on the public pay roll.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may answer the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BLACK. I myself should like to answer him, because I have an idea that I would disagree with the answer of the Senator from Texas. [Laughter.]

I may say to the Senator that with all due deference to his inferences——

Mr. CONNALLY. Deference or difference?

Mr. ROBINSON. Insinuations.

Mr. BLACK. The word "insinuations" has been suggested. No; they were not insinuations. They were just straight inferences.

Mr. CLARK. "Conclusions", we might say.

Mr. BLACK. In my judgment it is a big jump, and one that a man is not justified in taking, to say that because a man holds a Government job, and happens to be the head of the relief agency, or the head of the C. C. C., and makes a speech on one side of a public question, he is trying to coerce everybody that he or his agencies may assist.

If that were true, I think it would be very improper for a Senator to make a radio speech on one side or the other if he had recommended anybody for a judge, or for a marshal, or for a deputy marshal, or for any other place, because it might be said that the Senator was trying to coerce those men, and I do not believe a Senator would try to do so. I would disagree with that idea.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. When I finish.

Mr. CLARK. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to finish my reply to the statement of the Senator, because I may say to the Senator—for whom, as he knows, I have the very highest regard—that it is perfectly in order to make a motion to reduce Mr. Fechner's salary to $10,000, and the Senate can vote on it.

Mr. CLARK. I may say to the Senator that I intend to make such a motion at the proper time.

Mr. BLACK. With reference to that matter, I may say that the question was not raised in the committee. I introduced the bill, and as it was drawn it provided the same salary that Mr. Fechner had been drawing. It is my judgment—and Mr. Fechner is a gentleman with whom I have come in contact very little—that he has done an excellent job in connection with the C. C. C. camps. I have heard very little criticism of it. Naturally, there is some criticism when a man makes a speech on a highly controversial subject. If he had made a speech on the other side, perhaps I might have thought it was a terrible thing for him to be making a speech. I have heard some speeches on the other side which contained some statements that seemed to me to be pretty bad.

Mr. CLARK. From my viewpoint, he would have been equally worthy of blame if he had made a speech on our side.

Mr. BLACK. I doubt if the Senator would have taken occasion at this time to criticize his action. He might not have remembered it.

Mr. CLARK. There are some other instances to which I shall refer when the Senator has finished his speech.

Mr. BLACK. I may state to the Senator that it is my desire at this time to secure action on the C. C. C. bill; and I am not going to engage in any controversy with my colleague from Missouri or anyone else at this time on the Supreme Court or anything connected with it. It may be that later on we shall have some differences of opinion to express on the floor of the Senate.

With reference to the question of salary, I started to tell the Senator that the salary of $12,000 was placed in the bill because that is the salary Mr. Fechner has been drawing. All of us realize the basis and the soundness of the argument made by the Senator with reference to the difference in these salaries. I think some of the differences in governmental salaries are wholly indefensible and inexcusable.

I do not refer merely to the salaries in the higher brackets. It is to me absolutely amazing to note in various governmental activities the differences in salaries paid to men who are doing practically the same things. I have been one of those who, like the Senator, have thought that it was a little out of the ordinary, at least for Congress to create various agencies whose officials draw salaries in excess of those of the Members of the Senate and of the House. Perhaps I am prejudiced in that because I draw a Senate salary. But I know that a great many Senators, and I may say, in my judgment, all of them, because I think it is impossible for them not to do it, devote as much of their time to their official duties as does any other man in the Government service.

When a bill is presented, however, and I find a man has been employed at a salary of $12,000 a year, and has drawn the salary from the first day he has been in the service, and, so far as I know, has rendered excellent service, when I know there is no question as to the type of his service, I would waive the general attitude I have in connection with salaries and vote for a continuance of the salary to him while he continues to serve well. I know that in anything the Senator from Missouri has said he has not intended to reflect upon the nature of the services rendered by Mr. Fechner.

Mr. CLARK. I most certainly have not. Let me say to the Senator from Alabama, however, if he will yield——

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. A few moments ago he drew an analogy between the position of a United States Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives in addressing the country over the radio or in any other manner on public questions pending before Congress and the position of a Government employee—for, after all, whether Mr. Fechner is the head of the activity or anything else, he is still a Government employee and should be the servant of Congress—addressing the people, particularly the members of his own camp, over the radio on subjects which do not concern his activity in any degree whatever but are only for the purpose of trying to influence action of Congress on other matters pending before them. It is an extremely faulty analogy, in my opinion. It seems to me to be entirely proper for a Member of Congress, who will have to vote upon any question which may be presented to Congress, and who at least presumably, under our theory of government, controls his own vote, although that may not always be true, to express himself, either in the Senate or in the House of Representatives, or in any other place, for the purpose of explaining his position and, if possible, making converts to his position. That is an essentially different thing from an employee of the Government——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Alabama has the floor; that is an essentially different thing from an employee of the Government who, by reason of a position given him by Congress, undertakes to coerce Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I merely desire to express my utter astonishment at the attitude of the Senator from Missouri at not wanting the opinion of Dr. Fechner on this great constitutional issue. It seems to me we ought to welcome information from whatever source we can get it, and if Dr. Fechner knows more as to how the Supreme Court ought to decide these cases than does the Supreme Court, we ought to have the benefit of the doctor's advice. I do not think he has been working at the Court business a great deal, but he is getting $12,000 a year.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator does not think we ought to pay him $2,000 extra for his services in advising Congress, does he?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; but I think the doctor by his exhibition of himself has shown that he knows more than Senators do. We get only $10,000, and a schoolmaster to the Senate ought to get more money than the students, and if the doctor is going to lecture the Senate on its duty with regard to how the Supreme Court ought to be constituted, and then is going to tell the Court how cases should be decided, instead of cutting his salary we ought to increase it, because the members of the Court get $20,000 and the doctor is getting only $12,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I say with reference to the comparison of the salary of Mr. Fechner—or "doctor", to which degree the Senator from Texas has elevated him—and the salaries of members of the Supreme Court, I am by no means sure that if the Senator should submit that to a vote of the people of the United States there would not be many who would feel that Mr. Fechner was entitled to more salary than are some of the Justices of the Supreme Court. So it depends altogether upon the viewpoint, and who is expressing it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not doubt that that is the view of the Senator from Alabama from what he has said heretofore about the Supreme Court. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. I am inclined to think, from some statements I heard made by the Senator from Texas several years ago, with which I heartily agreed, that at that time he, too, might have voted that way.

Mr. CONNALLY. No. The Senator knows I voted against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Justice Hughes to be Chief Justice. I voted against that nomination as did a good many other Senators, and the speech I made at the time appears in the RECORD. I acted on my belief at that time that Mr. Justice Hughes after leaving the Supreme Bench some years ago had become so saturated with the corporate viewpoint, having represented great monopolies and trusts, that, however honest he might be, he would carry his predilections into the courtroom with him. Mr. Justice Hughes has since by his conduct on the Court shown that the Senator from Texas was mistaken in that viewpoint.

The Senator from Texas is standing just where he stood before. He was then against putting on the Court one man with his mind already made up to decide cases a certain way, and the Senator from Texas now is against placing on the Court six, or four, for the same purpose.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I really do not know of anything in the pending bill at this time that has any connection with the Supreme Court, and it is my intention now to return to the subject under discussion.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to ask the Senator another question, because he undoubtedly has a good deal more information about the matter than have I. The information I have is in the nature of hearsay.

The only substantial criticism I have heard advanced against the Civilian Conservation Corps—and it has been very widely advanced—is to the effect that Mr. Fechner has established in the C. C. C. camps a substantial censorship through the employment of his so-called educational system, by which the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps are permitted to receive in the vast majority of cases only the type and character of information on public questions that Mr. Fechner, through his educational department, desires to have them receive. Has that matter come before the Senator's committee? I frankly say that I have no first-hand information at all about it, but the charge has been very widely made in the press; and if it be true, it seems to me to be a very serious matter, which ought to be considered at this time. I ask the Senator in all candor as to what, if anything, developed before his committee in that regard.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that nothing whatever on that subject was developed, and no suggestion along that line was made. I think I have read practically all the debate in the House; I may have missed one or two of the arguments, but in reading the debate in the House I saw nothing with reference to the subject mentioned by the Senator from Missouri. I am not familiar with the criticism and know practically no more than what the Senator has just stated.

So far as I am concerned, I believe in absolute freedom of speech, not only on the part of Mr. Fechner and Mr. Hopkins, but anyone else who desires to speak on a public subject, and if any evidence were presented which indicated things of the nature the Senator has mentioned, I should be opposed to such action.

Mr. CLARK. I did not mean to say that I had heard any intimation that any attempt had been made in the camps to restrain freedom of speech, or freedom of expression, or freedom of views, but that through the educational department Mr. Fechner did in effect control the literature and did control the viewpoint on a great many questions of public import, in fact, on practically all; and that seems to me to be an extremely important element in the constitution of such a corps as the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is absolutely correct. If there were any evidence or any indication that something was being done to limit the information received by the men in the camp to any one particular line of thought, it would be reprehensible, in my judgment, and should not be permitted. I assume it is true as to any institution that someone is compelled to determine the particular magazines, if they subscribe to magazines, to which subscriptions shall be made, and to that extent, where funds are limited, it is always necessary to choose between different magazines or different subjects for reading. But it is my belief that no effort has been made to limit unfairly the information which goes to those in the camps to any one line of thought; and if anything like that developed, I should be happy to join the Senator—and I agree with him fully—in voting for such legislation as would be needed to prohibit such action.

I shall be very happy to answer any questions any Senator may wish to ask me about the bill or the camps. Later on, if any Senator wishes to ask me about the Supreme Court, when we come to consider that bill, I shall be very glad to discuss it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let us not involve the Court issue in this bill.

Mr. BLACK. I really prefer to discuss that question at some other time, because I have been informed, or at least I read somewhere, that some speeches on that subject will require 5 days. I do not feel sufficiently strong physically to talk 5 days continuously now, so I would rather talk on the C. C. C. camps.

If Senators have no further questions to ask me, I shall surrender the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think it is understood that the bill which the Senator from Alabama has in charge will not be disposed of today; so, unless there is some other business to come before the Senate——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to offer an amendment, in order that it may be pending when the bill shall come up for consideration again. On page 2, line 3, I move to strike out the numerals "12" and insert the numerals "10", so that the sentence will read:

The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint a Director at a salary of $10,000 per annum.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, when we consider the work of Thy hands, the moon and the stars which Thou hast ordained, we tremble before the revelation of our littleness. Yet more than all Thy works or spheres of light is man, because Thou hast crowned him with glory and honor. We rejoice that we are linked to Thee by bonds stronger than death and greater than the glory of the ultimate skies. We pray that we may be brought nearer to Thee by the abundance of Thy love and by a sense of duty and obedience. Help us to realize life in its fullness—the flow of the emotions, the visions of the intellect, and the raptures of the spirit. We live in our Father's house with its unlocked treasures. Bless those who sacrifice pleasure for the comfort of others and those who labor in the desolate and the wasted places of human life. Do Thou direct and harmonize the counsels of this honorable body. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

FLOODS IN THE OHIO RIVER BASIN

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, for two generations the citizens of Cincinnati believed that the Ohio River in 1884 had reached its greatest height. In that city there is an old brick building containing a discolored bronze marker with the inscription "The flood of 1884." Grandfathers have repeatedly shown the marker to their grandsons, and, as they pointed to the old marker embedded in the corner of the ancient brick building high over their heads, they said, "There will never again be an 1884 flood."

On January 26, 1937, the crest of the Ohio had risen more than 9 feet above that marker before the yellow waters swept on to engulf cities, towns, and farms in the lower Ohio Basin, and to roar at the walls and levees of Cairo, threatening death and destruction to that important city.

It has been more than 3 months since the greatest flood in history passed down the Ohio River. At Huntington and below, the flood exceeded all previous records. The populations of the Ohio Valley suffered an unparalleled disaster. The public press, with glaring headlines, gripped the attention of the Nation as the story of unprecedented damages and great human sufferings, especially in the larger cities, was told.

It is worthy of note that the loss of lives bears little relation to the size of the disaster. The radio and the telephone are entitled to the credit. In 1889 there was no radio and there was no telephone; some 2,209 lives were lost at Johnstown. In the flood of 1937, throughout the Ohio Valley, the inhabitants received warnings of the impending disaster; the Weather Bureau forecasts were most helpful, wholesale loss of life was prevented, but it was impossible to reduce materially the property losses.

The newspaper was aided by the movies. The public was advised of the losses of life, the staggering havoc wrought, especially in the larger cities of Wheeling, Cincinnati, and Louisville. We recall the vivid stories of swirling waters as they reached into the second stories of homes and stores, as they submerged waterworks, as they crippled light and sanitary systems. We recall the deaths by drowning and the greater number of deaths resulting from exposure and undernourishment. We remember the refugee camps. The relief forces of the Nation were mobilized.

LARGE CITIES

Pittsburgh is the largest city in the Ohio River Basin; it has a population of 700,000. The Golden Triangle, one of the most important and highly developed business and commercial areas in the United States, is located at the confluence of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers as they form the Ohio. Allegheny County, in which the city of Pittsburgh is located, has a larger assessed valuation than the great Commonwealth of Tennessee. In the last 84 years 97 floods have occurred. There has been a flood on the average of once every 10 months at Pittsburgh, and 10 of these floods were major floods.

In 1936 Pittsburgh alone suffered damages in excess of $30,000,000. Congress, in the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, made provision for the construction of nine reservoirs above Pittsburgh, but there have been no appropriations; moreover, as was pointed out and emphasized by the Chief of Engineers, it is necessary that flood walls be constructed to supplement the reservoirs for the protection of 60,000 people, 15,000 homes, 1,500 stores, 11 schools, 16 churches, and 200 industrial plants. Plans have been prepared. The value of the property that can only be protected by flood walls in the city of Pittsburgh is estimated at some six hundred or eight hundred millions of dollars.

The city of Wheeling, W. Va., is 90 miles below Pittsburg; it has a population of 62,000 and a large metropolitan district. Fifty floods have come down upon Wheeling in the last 55 years; half of them have been major floods. In the great flood of 1936 practically the entire city south of Wheeling Creek was inundated 20 feet and more. In 1937 there was a repetition of the flood of 1936; damages aggregating more than $10,000,000 occurred. At Wheeling the situation is particularly hazardous to human life. Protection can only be provided by levees and flood walls for which plans are available.

Cincinnati is located largely on high ground, but there is a commercial and industrial area within reach of the floods. Many have their homes in this area. The Army engineers had predicted an 83-foot flood stage for Cincinnati; their warnings had gone unheeded. We recall many Black Fridays, but Black Sunday in the great flood of 1937 will always be remembered in Cincinnati. An important commercial and industrial district of the city was flooded to a depth of 21 feet; business activity was largely suspended; water, electric light, hospital, and communication services were interrupted; gasoline storage tanks were undermined, spreading their contents over the waters. There was a $2,000,000 fire in the midst of the raging flood. The greatest loss was in the highly industrialized Mill Creek section; it resembled an inland lake. There were damages to 1,400 homes, 500 stores, and 200 industrial plants.

Cincinnati should not remain subject to recurring floods. The building of levees and flood walls have been planned; they are to be supplemented by reservoir control on the tributaries of the Ohio. Flood hazards can be eliminated at Cincinnati, with its population of 450,000.

The entire business and industrial districts of Louisville were overflowed; over 50 percent of the city was flooded; the waters were 8 feet deep; many lives were lost; fire and police alarms did not function; there was no drinking water available from local sources; 160,000 of the 308,000 population were made refugees without heating facilities or adequate food supplies. Railway service into the city, except to the outskirts, was suspended for 10 days, and all main highways, with one exception, were under water. Over 30,000 homes, 1,600 stores, 78 schools, 8 hospitals, and over 400 industrial establishments were subjected to overflow. Louisville will benefit from reservoirs along the tributaries of the Ohio, but Louisville needs flood walls and levees, for which plans have been prepared.

DAMAGES

Nobody knows the amount of damages in the Ohio Valley. When the floodwaters receded, Louisville estimated a loss of $71,000,000. At Paducah the estimate was $25,000,000. The losses on thousands of farms and in hundreds of smaller towns and villages will never be estimated. It is believed that the direct damages along the Ohio River amounted to more than $400,000,000. But this is not the whole story. Families were made bankrupt; citizens lost the savings of a lifetime; there was a cessation of business. It is difficult to estimate the loss of life through accident, through disease, and sickness caused by the flood, through undernourishment and lack of clothing and other necessaries of life through the destruction of the means of livelihood. The floods often came at night; they occurred during the winter. By what yardstick can we measure the intangible losses? The discouragement to Americans who lost their all through no fault of their own will drag into the years. Some day we may be able to estimate in dollars and cents the direct losses; but it will be difficult, if not impossible, to measure the intangible and the indirect losses.

SMALLER COMMUNITIES

Little has been said about the smaller communities where people were driven from their homes and from their farms; where many were drowned; where farming and small manufacturing were destroyed; where occupations and means of livelihood stopped for months. There were many smaller communities where churches, schools, stores, water supplies, and food were buried under 15 or 20 feet of mud and water.

We sympathize with the unfortunate; we provide for the unemployed. We have spent billions for relief. I am thinking of American citizens who have pinched and saved and denied through the years, who have earned their bread in the sweat of their brow, and have lost the accumulations of a lifetime. I am thinking of the poor man, not on relief, earning his livelihood, who has been driven from his home, who has been deprived of an opportunity to work, who has been left to rehabilitate his wife and children and to clear his home of mud and slime. I am thinking of the type of citizen who is the backbone of America; apparently they are the forgotten men and women of 1937.

The floods have been occurring in the Ohio Valley for centuries. John James Audubon tells us of seeing a cow swim through the second story of a house 7 feet from the ground and 62 feet above the normal level of the Ohio River in the great flood of 1828.

It is safe to estimate that in the great Ohio flood of 1937 the direct and the indirect losses aggregate the staggering total of $800,000,000.

A great flood can only be compared to the advance of a mighty army. Hundreds of thousands were driven from their homes and their farms by the onward sweep of the yellow waters of 1937. We sent the flower of American manhood across the Atlantic in 1917 to make the world safe for democracy; we expended billions of treasure. What has the United States of America done about making the Ohio Valley safe for American citizens? What will the Congress of the United States do about it? Is the answer, "Nothing"?

The conscience of the Nation has been aroused. The American people who contributed $20,000,000 through the American Red Cross and expended millions and millions of dollars more in rehabilitation know that the flood losses must ultimately be absorbed by the Nation. Will Congress approve a do-nothing policy?

I am thinking of the apparently forgotten citizens of the Ohio Valley. I regret that my time is limited today. Under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am giving intimate and detailed information respecting the losses and damages, especially in the smaller towns and cities. The story of devastation should appeal to every American. The mere recital should stir the Congress to action.

DEVASTATION

The Allegheny River rises in Chautauqua and Cattaraugus Counties, N. Y., flows through western Pennsylvania by the towns of Warren, Meadville, Kittanning and New Kensington, Pa. The other tributary of the Ohio, the Monongahela, rises in West Virginia, flows past the cities of Morgantown, Fairmont, Clarksburg, and McKeesport, to join the Allegheny at Pittsburgh. In 1936 the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers were visited by the most destructive flood in their history. New Kensington suffered a damage of $8,000,000, McKeesport $12,000,000, Pittsburgh $30,000,000, Cambria County, Pa., including Johnstown, $43,000,000, and the entire basin of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers, $130,000,000. The need for flood control in these basins has been recognized; some reservoirs have been authorized; the Tygart Reservoir on the Monongahela River is now under construction. This reservoir will reduce flood heights on the Monongahela River and will provide an additional water supply for navigation as well. In 1936 Congress authorized the construction of nine other reservoirs in the Allegheny and Monongahela Basins; plans are ready so that their construction can be undertaken without delay. The act was not signed by the President until June 22, 1936, after Congress had adjourned, but thus far there have been two deficiency appropriation bills and no money for these reservoirs has been appropriated.

Below Pittsburgh the Beaver River, with its tributaries the Mahoning and Shenango, drains an important industrial district in Ohio and Pennsylvania, including the cities of Warren, Niles, and Youngstown, Ohio; and Sharpsville, Sharon, and New Castle, Pa. Floods along the Beaver River are always accompanied by large damages. The reduction of flood heights in this important industrial area can be obtained by the construction of reservoirs that have been planned on the Shenango and Mahoning Rivers.

On the right side of the river about 50 miles below Pittsburgh is the town of Wellsville, Ohio. This town has a population of 8,000 and has suffered 70 floods in the past 84 years. In 1936, 50 percent of its area was inundated. Levees have been planned to protect this important railway and industrial town.

Below Pittsburgh the Beaver River, with its tributaries the Mahoning and Shenango, drains an important industrial district in Ohio and Pennsylvania, including the cities of Warren, Niles, and Youngstown, Ohio; and Sharpsville, Sharon, and New Castle, Pa. Floods along the Beaver River are always accompanied by large damages. The reduction of flood heights in this important industrial area can be obtained by the construction of reservoirs that have been planned on the Shenango and Mahoning Rivers.

On the right side of the river about 50 miles below Pittsburgh is the town of Wellsville, Ohio. This town has a population of 8,000 and has suffered 70 floods in the past 84 years. In 1936, 50 percent of its area was inundated. Levees have been planned to protect this important railway and industrial town.

Follansbee, W. Va., is a small manufacturing center, but it has a population of 5,000. During the past 84 years it has had 70 floods. This locality has been flooded on an average of once every 14 months. The great flood of 1936, the maximum of record, drove the entire population from their homes and the water was 11 or more feet deep. Levee and flood-wall protection against frequent flooding is the remedy for the intolerable condition of Follansbee.

One of the most beautiful cities along the Ohio, located at the mouth of the Muskingum River, is the celebrated city of Marietta, Ohio, with a population of 16,000. It is a city of industries and commercial establishments; a famous college is located there. Major floods cover 60 percent of Marietta to a depth of 17 feet, often washing away many homes and places of business. When Marietta is cut off by major flood, its hinterland suffers correspondingly by reason of the isolation of this shipping and trading center.

Along the Muskingum River Basin above Marietta and Zanesville the flood of 1913 caused direct and indirect damages estimated at $20,000,000; 11 lives were lost. The United States is now cooperating with the State of Ohio in the construction of a system of reservoirs which should largely solve the local flood problems of that region.

Parkersburg, W. Va., is located at the mouth of the Little Kanawha River; its population has doubled since 1920 and is now over 35,000. More and more people are being concentrated into flood zones and the floods of the future, unless controlled, will surely cause greater damage and loss of life. This city provides employment for a large area, including Williamstown, Waverly, and West Parkersburg in West Virginia, and Belpre, Ohio, all of which were seriously affected by the 1937 flood. Nineteen times in the past 55 years, Parkersburg has been damaged by floods. Great floods cover one-sixth of the town to a depth of 11 feet. Sixty percent of the business district is flooded, causing the suspension of practically all business activity. There are about a thousand dwellings, 350 stores, 3 churches, 1 hospital, 13 industrial plants, and 3 public buildings, with an estimated value of more than $36,000,000, that are affected by floods. The situation is intensified by the floods of the Little Kanawha River, which may swell the Ohio River floods after traversing the central part of West Virginia, where they cause considerable damage. Reservoirs planned on the Little Kanawha will ameliorate flood conditions at Parkersburg and levees and flood walls will complete its protection.

The Hocking River in the State of Ohio drains one of the smaller tributary basins of the Ohio River. Large floods inundate the Hocking Valley from Lancaster to its mouth. Its greatest flood in modern times caused tremendous property damage and considerable loss of life. Flood damages in Athens County of the Hocking Valley during the past 15 years have been over $2,000,000. A reservoir above Athens will alleviate flood conditions in the Hocking Valley.

Point Pleasant, W. Va., has a population of 3,000 who earn a livelihood from river traffic, local industries, and in local mercantile establishments. Floods occur here every 2 years. The major floods of 1913 and 1937 reached about the same record height. This year's flood buried 85 percent of the town under 12 feet of water; over 400 homes, stores, public buildings, and local industries were severely damaged by the raging waters. Public health conditions were placed in a sad plight through interference with the sewer system; gas and traffic services were discontinued; 2,000 people, of whom 1,500 became refugees, were endangered. This little city can be protected by levees.

The Kanawha River Basin, lying principally in West Virginia, is a region greatly favored by nature. There are abundant coal, natural gas, and mineral resources. As a result there is a high degree of industrial development and the territory is thickly populated. The flood situation is unique. I have but time to sketch it. There are records of great floods in the Kanawha occurring when there was only a small population and limited development in the region. Cities, towns, and industries have now filled the valley.

The floodway of the river has been encroached upon. In the absence of recent disaster the people are lulled into a false sense of security. Great floods will surely visit this populous valley with little warning, find a restricted floodway and will rise to greater heights than ever before. This is especially true with respect to the industrial area centering around Charleston. It has been estimated that a repetition of a record flood would cost the valley more than $25,000,000. Some idea of the possible consequences here are indicated by two minor floods on tributaries of the Kanawha. These occurred in 1916 and in 1932 and caused the loss of 40 and 20 lives, respectively, and over $6,000,000 damages. Under the act of June 22, 1936, Congress authorized three large control reservoirs for the Kanawha Basin, but no funds have been made available for their construction. Other reservoirs in addition to the three authorized have been planned for the protection of the Kanawha Basin.

The plight of the city of Huntington, W. Va., located at the confluence of the Ohio and Guyandot Rivers, was well covered by the public press in the flood of 1937, but I should like to give you a few facts regarding the flood damage there. Huntington is a rapidly growing city; its population has almost doubled in the past 15 years, it has increased from 50,000 in 1920 to over 80,000 at the present time. It is a large shopping center, serving the surrounding territory with 35 industrial plants and numerous wholesale and retail establishments. It is an important center for interstate commerce. During the past 55 years it has been visited with 23 floods. The recent flood inundated one-half of the city to an average depth of 11 feet, was responsible for the loss of five lives and made 25,000 people homeless. In addition to the suspension of practically all business, the domestic water supply was discontinued and for about 2 weeks the population was without fuel gas. Rail traffic was interrupted except for a limited supply service from the east maintained over one railroad. Traffic over all highways into the city was interrupted. There are 40,000 people, 7,000 homes, 1,100 stores, 13 schools, including 1 college, 34 churches, 3 hospitals, 35 industrial plants, and 11 public buildings subject to overflow in this city. Property valued at $123,000,000 would be protected by a flood wall that has been planned for Huntington.

Catlettsburg, Ky., located at the mouth of the Big Sandy River, has a total of 5,000 inhabitants and is a rural-trading center. A large part of its population finds employment in industries located in Huntington and Kenova, W. Va., and at Ashland, Ky. Floods are a constant menace to the community. In the past, the flood stage has been exceeded 23 times in 55 years. The flood of 1937 covered 80 percent of the town to a depth of 17 feet, resulting in loss to hundreds of dwellings and stores. About 4,000 people were driven from their homes and others were forced to move to the second stories of their houses. Serious flood conditions at Ashland, Huntington, and Kenova brought the industries there to a standstill, adversely affecting the population of Catlettsburg. This situation will be reproduced by future floods unless levees as planned are provided to protect this community.

The Big Sandy River with its tributaries, the Tug and Levisa Forks, forms in part the boundary between West Virginia and Kentucky. The main valley of the Big Sandy is subject to floods which cause damages to crops and to farms located along the river.

On the forms a number of mining towns are affected by overflows. Among these are Pikesville and Prestonburg, Ky., and Williamson, W. Va. As is well known, the economic fabric of our mining towns is not of sufficient strength to bear the burden of flood damages, flood refugees, and rehabilitation. Flood-control reservoirs which have been planned for this basin will materially improve flood conditions there and benefit the situation on the Ohio.

Ashland, Ky., has been flooded 25 times during the past 55 years; it has a population of 29,000; it is the home of several nationally known products. In January 1937 a considerable part of the city was overflowed to a depth of 9 or more feet. Ten thousand persons were driven from their homes and great damage was done to business and residential property, not to mention the losses due to the disruption of normal activities and the failure of all means of communication. The only contact Ashland had with the outer world during the crest of the flood was radio communication maintained by an amateur operator.

Ironton, Ohio, is located across the river from Ashland. There are several large manufacturing industries here, and the population is 17,000. Despite the fact that the inhabitants have been flooded 25 times in the last 55 years, they have provided their city with a network of modern improved streets, an excellent water supply that is filtered and stored in reservoirs, and a complete sanitary sewerage system. This year the depth of the overflow which covered four-fifths of the city averaged 11 feet, and 14,000 people were made refugees. The water supply and sanitary sewerage systems were seriously crippled; traffic on the main-line railroads and important highways that pass through the city was completely stopped. Ashland and Ironton should be protected by the levees and flood walls planned for these communities.

Portsmouth, Ohio, with a population of 42,560, is a manufacturing and shipping center. It is situated at the mouth of the Scioto River. The basin of the Scioto in central Ohio is a thickly settled agricultural region with a considerable industrial development located in its cities and larger towns. Inasmuch as the basin largely escaped the destructive effects of the flood of 1937, the inhabitants are prone to forget the flood hazards that exist. A mere mention of the 1913 flood should recall them to mind. One hundred and forty-five lives were lost in the Scioto Basin in that flood. Columbus, Delaware, and Chillicothe suffered total damages of $18,000,000. The small river villages in Pike, Ross, and Pickaway Counties also suffered considerable loss, while the farm damage was estimated at $2,500,000. The loss to this relatively small basin from the 1913 flood aggregated $26,000,000. In the past 25 years the population has increased and the industrial development has multiplied. A recurrence of a great flood on the Scioto like that of 1913 would cause much greater loss in both life and property. Reservoirs planned on the Scioto will greatly reduce flood hazards.

For many years Portsmouth, Ohio, stood secure behind its flood wall. At the time it was built it was conceded to be inadequate. It has protected against floods for 25 years. With the lakelike Scioto River on the one side and the uncurbed Ohio on the other, the city of Portsmouth soon became a mere harbor of rooftops. The flood wall was overtopped by 10 feet; 5,000 dwellings, 600 stores, 34 schools and churches, 1 hospital, and 67 industrial plants were flooded. Portsmouth can be protected by having its flood walls raised and enlarged.

Manchester, Ohio, with a population of 2,000, has small manufacturing industries. Twenty-five times in the last 55 years this community has been affected by flood waters, and 13 times extensive damage has been done. Ninety percent of the town was inundated to a depth of 16 feet by the 1937 flood. The entire population was made homeless, all activities were stopped, and the surrounding rural territory suffered greatly. Walls and levees could be constructed to protect this town.

The Little Miami, just above the city of Cincinnati, adds its water to the Ohio. This basin is small and largely rural, but in spite of this three serious floods from 1913 to date have caused damages at more than $3,000,000. Several reservoirs would alleviate trouble along the Little Miami.

Newport and Covington in Kentucky, just across the Ohio River from Cincinnati, having a combined population of 95,000, really form a part of the Cincinnati manufacturing center. During the past 80 years 42 floods have affected these two cities. There has been a flood every 2 years. In 1937 the flood inundated a large part of Covington, including the business district, to a depth of 19 feet. Fifty percent of Newport was covered with 17 feet of water. Over 20,000 persons were made refugees; all business was suspended; water, electric, and hospital services were interrupted. Twenty-six hundred homes, 500 stores, 30 schools, 2 hospitals, and 82 industrial plants were overflowed; rail and highway traffic was interrupted. The toll of flood loss falls heavily on an industrial population dependent upon daily employment in the factories when the factories are shut down. Levees and flood walls would save from overflow the homes and personal effects of the poor people in Newport and Covington as well as the factories where they earn a living.

Between the mouth of the Wabash and Cincinnati there are a number of tributaries of the Ohio. Among these are the Green, the Salt, the Kentucky, and the Licking. Floods from these rivers add to the burdens of the swollen Ohio and greatly damage their own valleys.

The Green River, with its tributaries, the Barren and the Rough, drains over 9,000 square miles in west central Kentucky. The basin, while largely agricultural, is noted for its important asphalt deposits. The Green River Valley is subject to destructive floods. The flood of 1913 inundated about 300,000 acres of land, with damage to homes, highways, bridges, and utilities. Overflows during the crop season frequently cause serious damage to agriculture. The flood of 1928 covered some 125,000 acres of lands and caused a crop loss alone which was estimated at $2,000,000.

The Salt River is a smaller stream which lies near the center of the State of Kentucky. Its basin of 3,000 square miles is largely agricultural. The flood of 1913 appears to have been the largest ever experienced on Salt River, but more recently the flood in 1928 destroyed crops on some 75,000 acres and caused damages estimated at $3,600,000. This flood also damaged highways and the towns of Shepardsville and Taylorsville.

The Kentucky River takes its source near the Virginia State line and flows through Frankfort. Its drainage basin of 7,000 square miles includes a large area of the famed Kentucky blue-grass country. Low-lying parts of the cities of Frankfort, Irvine, Ravenna, and Beattyville are subject to flooding from this stream. At Buckhorn, on the middle form of the Kentucky River, Witherspoon College, which is operated by the Presbyterian Church to educate young people from the mountains, is partly subject to overflow.

The Licking River enters the Ohio at Cincinnati and flows from eastern Kentucky through a drainage basin of 3,700 square miles that is largely agricultural. The lowlands along the Licking from Yale to Wyoming, including parts of the towns of Farmers and Salt Lick, are subject to overflow. The town of Sherburne and the surrounding territory are inundated by large floods, and there is a serious flood problem at Salyersville. During the period from 1915 to 1930, inclusive, eight floods have occurred in the Licking Valley and caused an aggregate damage to farm lands and crops of $3,000,000.

In the last 25 years floods from the Green, the Salt, the Kentucky, and the Licking Rivers have caused damages of over $10,000,000. Two reservoirs authorized for the Licking will control its floods. Plans for one more reservoir on the Licking, seven on the Green, one on the Salt, and three on the Kentucky would alleviate flood dangers on these rivers.

Lawrenceburg, Ind., has a population of 4,000 and has been flooded 42 times in the last 80 years. Of these 42 floods, 25 have been of serious proportions, and the most disastrous was that of January 1937, which overflowed 85 percent of the town to an average depth of 26 feet. Three thousand five hundred persons were made refugees. All business activity was suspended; water, electric light, telephone, and hospital services were stopped. Entrance by land to the community during the flood was impracticable except over one secondary road in only fair condition. Of the 1,000 homes flooded, many were completely destroyed and 160 stores, 12 schools and churches, 1 hospital, and 16 industries were completely overflowed. The modification and enlargement of existing levees which will protect Lawrenceburg is sorely needed.

Cloverport in Breckenridge County, Ky., with a population of 1,300, is a rural trading center that has a tile plant, flour mill, and several smaller enterprises which together furnish a livelihood to the townspeople and a source of income to the adjoining countryside. The flood stage is exceeded here once in every 2 years. Thirty-five percent of the town was flooded this year, including the business and industrial district, to a depth of 10 feet. Three hundred and fifty persons were driven from their homes. Stocks of merchandise were destroyed. Business and industry were stopped. In ordinary high waters dangerous health conditions occur at Cloverport. The remedy is a levee and flood wall.

Evansville, Ind., is an important shipping center, both by rail and water. The flood of 1913 covered an important part of this city, and the flood of this year was the worst it had ever known. It has a population of 108,000, contains a large number of manufacturing plants, and has a wide variety of small industries which afford employment to the population. Forty thousand persons were subjected to flood hazard and 35,000 were evacuated before the rising waters. Seven thousand homes, 400 business establishments, 8 industries, 14 schools, 27 churches, 1 college, and 1 hospital, as well as railroad and public buildings, were overflowed. All business and means of earning a livelihood were brought to a complete standstill for 30 days. Property damage was $7,000,000. A flood but little higher than that of 1937 would greatly increase the area of inundation. Levees and flood walls will protect Evansville.

Uniontown in Union County, Ky., with a population of 1,200 people, is subject to damaging floods with a frequency of once out of every 7 or 8 years. The 1913 flood covered four-fifths of the town to an average depth of 7 feet and the 1937 flood practically annihilated the community, inundating it to an average depth of 15 feet. Every inhabitant of the town was moved, business was paralyzed, all communication was disrupted, and the town was isolated from high ground for more than 2 weeks. Levees will protect Uniontown; they are warranted.

The Wabash River flows along the line between Indiana and Illinois and empties into the Ohio. Its basin includes the greater part of the State of Indiana, and its tributaries, the Vermilion and Embarrass, drain the eastern counties of Illinois. Only the lower part of this rich basin, where it joins the main Ohio Valley, was affected by the great flood of January 1937. While Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Peru, Vincennes, and other cities were spared this year they are subject to possible overflows and damages from floods. In the Wabash Basin alone the flood of 1937 caused damages estimated at $25,000,000, and the relatively minor floods of 1919, 1926, 1927, and 1930 each destroyed property in this area valued at from four to six million dollars.

As night follows the day, the Wabash Basin will some day be visited by destructive floods. A system of reservoirs in the Wabash Basin, together with local protective works already authorized, will go far toward curing the flood problems of this splendid valley.

Shawneetown, Ill., is a county seat, has a population of 1,500, and is an important trading center. The entire town was covered with water to a depth from 14 to 30 feet in 1937. In some blocks buildings were entirely submerged. The destruction of property was great due to the strong current. The entire population was evacuated. The cost of rehabilitation will be a burden to the people for years to come. The prospect for the future is not a bright one unless the existing levees are rebuilt and strengthened by the Government.

Harrisburg, Ill., is located about 25 miles from the Ohio River on the right bank of the Middle Fork of the Saline River, but it is subject to the wrath of the Ohio floods. It has a population of 12,000 people. The backwaters on the average of once every 10 years in the last 60 years have covered one-half of the town from a depth of from 3 to 15 feet. In 1937 the city was entirely cut off from all railroad and highway service during the flood; the waterworks were out of service, the fire protection was seriously impaired, and there was no telephone connection. That part of the residential and commercial districts not flooded was entirely surrounded by water; there were insanitary conditions, extensive damage to property, and intangible loss to the locality constitute a situation deserving of human sympathy. Levees can prevent a recurrence of the destruction.

Golconda, Ill., is the county seat of Pope County and is a rural trading center with small industries; it has experienced a number of damaging floods in the past 64 years, overflowing from one-quarter to three-quarters of the town 5 to 18 feet deep and drowning out the filtration and pumping plant. In 1937 the waterworks were flooded and rescue activities were hindered. The town was placed in complete darkness; typhoid and dysentery threatened the town after the floods had receded. The victims found their homes covered with mud. Levees would probably prevent a future repetition of Golconda's experience.

Paducah, Ky., is a city of about 30,000. Ninety percent of the city was overflowed in 1937. The storekeepers moved their stocks to the second floors and then they saw the waters move upstairs to make their losses complete. Practically every street in the city was a canal bordered by partially submerged houses. Wholesale evacuation took place, but many families insisted on moving to upper stories. Fortunately the Army engineers have a large base at Paducah, and with their supply of steamboats, barges, work boats, and launches, the inhabitants were either evacuated or fed, and the loss of life was cut to a minimum. Paducah was paralyzed by the flood of 1937. It is situated at the mouth of the Tennessee River.

The Cumberland joins the Ohio but a short distance above Paducah. This valley has played an important role in our national development. The city of Nashville has been a great sufferer. Sixteen floods since 1901 have caused losses exceeding $10,000,000 along the Cumberland River. The situation can be remedied by means of reservoirs. Paducah can be protected by levees and river walls.

Cairo, Ill., has a population of 15,000. The city is completely leveed. During the flood there was no egress except by water. In 1937 the water rose within 5 inches of the top of the wall. As fear mounted in the hearts of the people whose homes were lower than the raging waters on the other side of the levees, the town was evacuated. The city was saved by topping the levees and the flood walls with sand bags and by the operation of the New Madrid floodway.

North of Cairo, Mounds and Mounds City, Ill., were overflowed this year from 10 to 15 feet deep. The crests of floodwaters will always be above the street levels of Cairo, Mounds, and Mounds City. The problem for this region can be satisfactorily solved by raising and strengthening the levees around Cairo, and also extending them to high ground along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers so as to place Cairo on a peninsula instead of an island and thus protect Mounds and Mounds City.

PLANS FOR FLOOD CONTROL

At its crest at Cairo about 1,900,000 cubic feet of water went by each second. During the 50 days that the river was above flood stage there were 80,000,000 acre-feet of water in excess of the below-flood flow of the river. This amount of water staggers the imagination. If poured into an inland depression, with an average depth of 20 feet, it would make a lake two-thirds the area of Lake Erie. The problem, therefore, in the lower Mississippi Valley is to carry two and a quarter million cubic feet per second, representing the combined maximum flows of the Mississippi and the Ohio, and representing more than 20 times all of the water flowing over Niagara Falls, from Cairo to the Gulf of Mexico.

The Flood Control Committee has been requested to delay a flood-control bill until the next session of Congress. Additional authorizations to provide for the stricken areas in the Ohio Basin are necessary. Previous relief bills have provided that only flood-control works that have been approved by Congress can be constructed out of relief funds. I repeat to emphasize that an authorization to prevent a recurrence of the 1937 flood is necessary before funds can be allocated from relief appropriations or before Congress can appropriate. [Applause.]

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, this is the most important problem we have in the Ohio Valley. The gentleman from Mississippi is perhaps the outstanding authority in the United States on this subject. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I may say this means a lot to us in West Virginia, and I echo the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for just one question?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. For a question.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman is not going to be able to exhaust this subject. I also appreciate that he is the outstanding authority on this subject. I should like to know whether in his extension of remarks the gentleman is going to include a statement showing the financial situation, and showing how practical and how entirely possible it is for us to get some relief in the Ohio Valley and still act in consonance with the plan of economy?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have already stated, and I emphasize by repeating, that a conservative estimate of the direct damages caused by the flood of 1937 in the Ohio Valley alone is $400,000,000. The report of the Chief of Engineers shows that the cost of complete protection for the entire Ohio Valley would not exceed the losses of the one year of 1937. The expenditures by Congress would be over a period of 10 or 15 years. The annual appropriations would be comparatively small.

Reservoirs are to keep the water away; levees and flood walls are to keep it out. It is manifest that reservoirs alone will not do the job. It will take a combination of both.

Floods are not more frequent than formerly, but because of the improvement of the county and increase in population, the damages are greater.

The records at Pittsburgh on the Ohio and at St. Louis on the Mississippi, while the lands were covered with grass and forests, tell us of floods, the equal of any we have experienced in recent years.

In the early days the damages from floods were not so large as they are now. The ravages of floods have increased because of the development along rivers. These damages during the past 100 years will fade into insignificance with the damages that will occur in the next 100 years to our river valleys with their increased population and industrial development.

There is a reason for settlement along rivers. Throughout the centuries man has dwelt in the valleys and settled along the gulfs and oceans. Proximity to water is essential to the developments that provide for labor and the means of earning a living. The elimination of such settlements will never be humanly practicable.

As a citizen of the lower Mississippi Valley, I know from experience in the greatest of all floods in this or any other land, the damages and destructions from floods. During the past 200 years the people of the lower Mississippi Valley and, in the past 10 years, the Federal Government, have expended large amounts for flood control in the lower Mississippi Valley. The annual expenditures have been relatively small, but the valley has developed from a region of swamps into the most fertile area in the world. Sugar and cotton are produced; it is dotted with thriving towns and successful cities. But for flood protection the lower Mississippi Valley would be largely swamps.

The money spent for protection against the ravages of floods is relatively small. Larger amounts have been spent for highways and railways. None of these expenditures, however, has resulted in as much revenue to the people, to the States, and to the Federal Government as has accrued by reason of flood-control works.

The Ohio Basin, from the earliest days of the Republic, was regarded as a great empire; its forests, its fertile fields, and its unlimited mineral resources afford opportunities for great development. The industries along the Ohio and its tributaries surpass those of any other river in this or any other country. This development must not be destroyed or retarded by floods. Protection should and must be given to the valley.

Congress has not been idle respecting the flood problem. More than 10 years ago plans were made for studies for flood control, navigation, power, and reclamation on more than 200 rivers in the United States. The Ohio and its tributaries, the Mississippi and its tributaries have been studied and investigated. Congress has appropriated, and the Corps of Engineers of the United States, who have had more experience in flood-control works than any other engineers in the world, have expended $12,000,000 in studying and making plans. We have had enough planning; it is time for construction. It is always possible to restudy, but restudy means delay. There has been enough studying, enough examination, and enough planning.

The Chief of Engineers of the United States, in response to the resolution of the Committee on Flood Control, has submitted a plan to prevent a recurrence of the 1937 record flood. The committee has been requested to delay and not to report legislation at this session of the Congress, but delay is dangerous. In some areas there have been three successive floods. We are closer to another flood. The lives of the people are in constant jeopardy. The Government was ordained and established to do what the people and the communities could not do for themselves. Congress has declared a national policy of flood control. That policy should be expanded and enlarged; there should be a liberalization of the Federal contribution to the construction of reservoirs. Floods know no State or county lines.

I know of no more satisfactory way for the expenditure of public funds to relieve unemployment than to provide for protection from flood hazards. In addition to providing for protection against flood hazards, flood-control works, and especially reservoirs, provide for conservation, reclamation, and the development of hydroelectric energy.

It has been said that one-third of the people of the United States are ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-nourished. It is the poor who suffer most in great floods. The rich are able to move their homes up to the hillsides, but it is the poor who dwell in the valleys and along the rivers and close to the industries where they earn their daily bread in the sweat of their brow who suffer most. If there are to be public expenditures for unemployment, I know of no better way to disburse these funds than in a flood-control program that will provide for the emergency and priority works to prevent a recurrence of the 1937 record floods in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys.

I have traced the ruin and desolation of the 1937 flood in the Ohio Valley. I have spoken of the farmer who is undertaking to wrest a living from the bottom lands along the river because such a living could not be obtained in the barren hills. I have spoken of the industrial worker who earns his livelihood by working in the factories that must be located on river banks because only near water can these industrial plants survive. As I speak, floods, like the sword of Damocles, hang over thousands upon thousands of men, women, and children who occupy their modest homes in the valleys of the Ohio Basin. Three months have elapsed since these people were driven from their homes by the greatest flood in the history of the Republic. Three months have elapsed since many lost their all; 3 months have elapsed since they were deprived of work to enable them to earn a livelihood. What reason is there for delay? Plans have been submitted. Why should the execution of these plans be postponed? For my part I believe that the administration will be recreant to its duty if it does not promptly approve and adopt at least priority and emergency works to prevent a recurrence of the 1937 flood. [Applause.]

There were floods along the Ohio River when Columbus discovered America, when Yorktown fell, and there were destructive floods in 1937. Unless the American citizens living along this mighty river are provided with flood protection, thousands upon thousands will be periodically driven from their homes or reduced to starvation because of the devastation of ever-recurring floods.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Existing law provides that the lands, easements, and rights-of-way for reservoirs for impounding floodwaters are to be furnished by the local interests.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I anticipate the gentleman's question. It was not my purpose to discuss the details of legislation in my remarks today, nor do I intend to point out the amendments that, in my judgment, should be made to the Flood Control Acts of 1936. I am convinced that there should be a liberalization of the Federal contribution to reservoirs. Floods know no State lines. Kentucky borders the Ohio River on the south; Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio on the north. The allocation of the costs for reservoir construction is most difficult; it is impracticable; it is my view that the act of 1936 should be amended respecting reservoirs. That act provides that penstocks or similar facilities for the development of electric power shall be installed in all dams that may be adaptable in the future to the development of hydroelectric power. Such provision has been made in the Tygart Reservoir. I favor the Federal Government retaining control of the development of hydroelectric power in every reservoir built by the Federal Government. Where practical, I favor dams for flood control and for the development of hydroelectric power. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment. I repeat that there should be a liberalization of the Federal contribution to reservoirs. I am also of the opinion that Congress should make adequate appropriations, as provided by the two flood-control acts passed in 1936, for the construction of flood-control projects in New England, in southern New York, eastern Pennsylvania, and elsewhere as provided by the omnibus Flood Control Act. The act contemplated an appropriation of $50,000,000 the first year.

I also advocate increasing the appropriation for flood control in the lower Mississippi Valley so that the project may be completed within 6 years as provided by the act. But I must stick to the thought I have in mind; I am emphasizing that no additional flood-control projects can be provided for by the Congress or by the President out of relief funds in the policy that has heretofore obtained unless legislation for such works is passed by Congress. Additional flood-control authorizations are imperative. I am urging that the present session of Congress should provide for at least the priority and emergency projects in the light of the flood of 1937. This will include levees, river walls, and reservoirs along the tributaries.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I am asking that he yield, for I strongly agree with what the distinguished chairman of the Flood Control Committee has just said relative to effective flood-control measures on the tributaries of the Ohio River. I believe the program should include small dams on stream headwaters.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment I shall be pleased to yield, if I have the time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will be glad to yield when I have finished my statement. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that Congress has provided for reservoirs in New England, including flood-control projects along the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers. I favor adequate, immediate appropriations for the prompt construction of these reservoirs. I believe they are priority projects.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

We are citizens of a common country. I like to think of America not so much as a land of banks and factories, not so much as a country of great cities and magnificent highways, but as the home of the greatest and best people in all the world. The first duty of the Government is to protect the lives and property of its citizens.

Public works obtain in all progressive countries. I know of no more beneficial improvements than those for the control of floods. They will provide for unemployment; the funds will not be wasted or dissipated; permanent improvements will result.

I saw in a recent issue of one of the great metropolitan papers a picture of Uncle Sam as he looked at the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers during the great flood of 1937. He was represented as saying to 130,000,000 people, constituting the greatest and wealthiest nation in this or any other age, "Well, what are you going to do about it?" Is the answer, "Nothing"?

Our rivers are among the principal material foundations of our civilization; they are larger and our floods are more destructive than in other countries. The mastery of the flood problem will, therefore, be without precedent in human history. The costs will be great, but the savings will be greater. The losses from destructive floods should be replaced by gains from productive economy.

I conclude as I began: What will the Congress of the United States do to make the Ohio Valley safe from floods? Delay means—nothing. I repeat, is the answer, "Nothing"? For my part I oppose delay. I am ready to go forward. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I was particularly interested in the gentleman's statement that there would never be any dams built in Kentucky on the branches of the Ohio River, and in his further statement that we were going to have a combination of flood-control dams and hydroelectric dams. For the information of the gentleman I may say that I have been sponsoring the construction of a few of these flood-control dams in my own district and I have discussed the matter thoroughly with the Chief of Engineers of the War Department and he agrees with me.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am glad to have the gentleman's views.

Mr. MAY. And he agrees with me in the idea that flood-control dams and hydroelectric dams will not go together. You have got to have an empty dam to catch water, and if you have it full of water you cannot catch more; and if you have a hydroelectric dam you have got to have it full of water.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. My impression is that the exact opposite of the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] is true. In the first place, a dam to be built at all, if its construction is to be economical, must be of maximum size.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. And in that case a dam of any proportion which would attempt to generate hydroelectric power would certainly be large enough to always retain enough water in the bottom of the dam where the machinery would be placed to generate hydroelectric energy and yet be large enough to take care of the floods.

Furthermore, let me make this statement while I am on my feet:

It seems to me it would be the sheerest waste and the sheerest nonsense for us to authorize the construction of dams at a cost of millions of dollars, and then lay aside the generation of hydroelectric power, which would amortize the cost of those dams in a period of from 20 to 30 years.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the gentleman's views. [Applause.]

Under permission granted me to extend further, permit me to say that I favor the utilization of dams that may be constructed for flood control where it is practical also to develop power. The report of the Chief of Engineers, with plans to prevent a recurrence of the 1937 floods, now in the hands of the Committee on Flood Control, recommends that provisions be made for the development of power in all flood-control dams where power may be developed. This is especially true along the tributaries of the Mississippi River, including the White, the Arkansas, and the Red Rivers.

As I have already stated, I have confined myself to floods and their damage in the Ohio Valley. At a future date I shall be glad to discuss the remedies. I will be glad to discuss floods in other valleys. I may state that enthusiastic advocates of power development insist that all dams should provide for the generation of hydroelectric power. There are dams where hydroelectric power can be generated and flood control promoted. This is especially true in the great West, but often flood control and the development of power are incompatible. Arthur E. Morgan, Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority and author of the Miami conservancy flood-control project, recently said:

> There is a popular overexpectation as to the possibilities of power development associated with flood control in the eastern United States. Few rivers are so favorable in that respect as the Tennessee, and the possibilities of that river system fall far short of those on the Pacific coast. Moreover, flood control and power in some cases are mutually exclusive.

Again, in the same article in the Engineering News Record of March 18, 1937, Mr. Morgan stated:

> In my opinion, there has recently been exaggeration of the possibilities of flood control by soil management, forestry, and the construction of reservoirs on very small headwater streams.

There is no single remedy for flood control. All possible solutions must be explored. Power, navigation, water storage, and conservation have their places. Soil protection and reforestation must not be ignored. Flood-control works, however, mean river walls, levees, channel rectification, and reservoirs.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN PETROLEUM

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution for printing under the rule, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 216

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5366, a bill to repeal section 13 of the act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes", approved February 22, 1935. NAVIGATION OF TENNESSEE RIVER, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a letter from the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority submitting a survey entitled "A History of Navigation on the Tennessee River and Its Tributaries", made pursuant to Executive Order No. 6161 (June 8, 1933), delegating to the Board certain powers granted to me by sections 22 and 23 of the Tennessee Valley Act of 1933.

The attention of the Congress is invited to the suggestion of the Board that the report be printed as a Senate or House document.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 19, 1937.

WORLD'S FAIR, NEW YORK, 1939 (H. DOC. NO. 252)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, House Joint Resolution 304, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing Federal participation in the New York World's Fair 1939."

The disapproval on my part springs from two causes.

The first reason is the amount of the appropriation. I have been fully advised of the importance of the World's Fair and celebration to be held in the city of New York during the year 1939. I have given full support and encouragement to the plans for holding this exposition. Nevertheless, in view of the efforts of the Congress and the administration to bring Federal expenditures within the scope of Federal revenues as rapidly as possible, I am compelled to conclude that the sum of $5,000,000, proposed to be appropriated by the Federal Government, is excessive. Consultation with executive departments leads me to believe that a sum definitely smaller would be sufficient to provide adequate representation of the Federal Government at the World's Fair in New York City in 1939.

The second reason is equally compelling. The joint resolution establishes a commission to be known as the United States New York World's Fair Commission, to be composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the chairman and the ranking majority and ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, the two United States Senators from the State of New York, and the chairman and the ranking majority and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives. It is proposed that this commission shall appoint a commissioner general and the latter shall appoint two assistants, with the approval of the commission. The commission shall prescribe the duties of the commissioner general, delegate powers and functions to him, appoint clerks, and so forth, fix their salaries, purchase materials, contract for labor and services, and, in general, conduct, either directly or by delegation, all of the administrative functions of the Government of the United States in the expenditure of the appropriation authorized.

In other words, the commission composed in greater part of Members of the two Houses of Congress is specifically given complete administrative authority for the expenditure of public funds.

I have consulted with the Attorney General of the United States and am advised by him as follows:

In my opinion those provisions of the joint resolution establishing a commission composed largely of Members of the Congress and authorizing them to appoint a United States commissioner general and two assistant commissioners for the New York World's Fair, and also providing for the expenditure of the appropriation made by the resolution, and for the administration of the resolution generally, amount to an unconstitutional invasion of the province of the Executive.

I shall be glad at any time to furnish a copy of the complete opinion of the Attorney General to the Congress.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 19, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal of the House.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill with the message of the President be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed. I am thoroughly in accord with the President's intention of economy, and I think this House will have a chance, perhaps, to do something about that when the relief bill comes in here on Thursday. I am glad to say that I believe in cutting down, not only on this, but on other amounts and letting the world know that we are for economy, and that we are not assuming executive power in this House, but are doing what we think is best for the country.

As to the second section, I am going to look into it very carefully and I think possibly they are right about that. That is the way I feel about it. I move the previous question on the motion I have just made.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me before the previous question is ordered?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield, yes, for a question.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Does the gentleman think, in view of the message, that it might be more appropriate than referring it to the legislative branch of the Government, to send it down to the Director of the Budget or somebody in the executive branch?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I will say to the gentleman that all these bills recently have been cleared through the Budget, and we have tried to follow each proceeding and find out what they have to say about it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion to refer the message to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

FARMER-LABOR VIEWPOINT ON THE BUDGET

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, today I want to offer a Farmer-Labor viewpoint on the Budget. I want to state our views on economy, on the social needs of the great majority of our people, and on increasing national income so that expenditures balance our needs. My views are Farmer-Labor views, but I offer them in no narrow partisan spirit. The Farmer-Labor approach to the Budget problem is based not only on the needs of workers and farmers, but gives weight also to the needs of small-business men, home owners, young people, and all others who are threatened by insecurity and the disaster of flood, drought, forest fires, and destruction of national resources. This approach calls for the support of all progressives on either side of the House.

Today one-third of our Nation is ill-clad, ill-housed, and ill-fed, according to the President of the United States. Facts and figures gathered by administration bureau chiefs support the President's statement. Without looking at the figures, you and I know that the President does not exaggerate the misery that exists. Millions of plain men can testify to that misery from everyday observation. Millions more can testify to it from bitter experience.

The President has listened to the voice of the people, speaking at the polls, at mass meetings, in the press, and in hundreds of thousands of messages, directly to Franklin D. Roosevelt himself.

On March 4 of this year, at the Democratic victory dinner, the President told us what the voice of the people is saying. It is saying that the needs of the wage earner, the farmer, the small-business man, the jobless worker, and the youth of our country "will not wait."

On March 4 the President told us he heard the voice of the people saying they would not wait. But lately it seems that he has been listening to other voices.

These are the voices of those who last November supported the campaign of Landon and Knox. Today those voices, speaking through the Liberty League, the self-styled Jeffersonian Democrats, the Old Guard Republicans, are trying to shout down the President's proposal to unpack the Supreme Court. They are calling for an economy drive—a drive to cut Federal expenditures at the expense of the needy, to increase war and navy appropriations, and to keep hands off excess profits piled up by the money lords.

The President repeatedly assured us that he will not listen to these voices. He says we have "only just begun to fight." "We cannot postpone nor run from that fight", he told us, "on advice of defeatist lawyers."

It is clear today that the forces of reaction, defeated at the polls in November, have in truth only just begun to fight. But how vigorously is the present administration returning blow for blow? How much is shadow boxing? We in Congress are asked to pull our punches. On whose advice? On the advice of the President himself and his defeatist Budget makers.

It is the Supreme Court, said the President, which bars the way to any effective program for meeting human need. Progressive people, in Congress and out of it, agreed with him. We Progressives and Farmer-Laborites have fought, and will continue to fight, for the President's plan to unpack the Court.

RED LIGHTS STOP MARCH TO PROGRESS

But that narrow section of the road to progress and prosperity left clear by the Court is not altogether open to us who would travel it. The reactionaries are putting new barriers in our way. This Congress faces a red light at every cross road. If the Court does not flag us to a full stop with its veto, we are halted by the cry of "economy."

WORKERS WANT BUDGET BALANCED

Mr. Speaker, I am wholeheartedly in favor of a balanced Budget. I believe that a balanced Budget should be realistically planned for, and achieved at the earliest possible moment.

As a workingman I know nothing of the wizardry of high finance. I have never spent more than I earned. Living beyond your means is a trick only the rich can master. Workers' families balance their budgets—or else. So when we plain people demand a farmer-labor budget we are not calling for reckless extravagance. The sound, common sense of a balanced National Budget is perfectly clear to every worker, farmer, and hungry man in the United States.

How shall the Federal Budget be balanced? There are only two ways. One is by taxing those who can afford to pay; the other is by junking the high promise of the New Deal and balancing the Budget with the flesh and blood of those who have no money but only life itself to throw into the scales.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE EIGHTH DISTRICT

Mr. Speaker, in my district, the Eighth District of Minnesota, seven-tenths of the people are ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-nourished.

Let me tell you something about my district. In 1935 the F. E. R. A. made a study of six rural problem areas. All of the five counties in my district are "problem areas." They are in what the F. E. R. A. calls the Lake States cut-over area.

In my district the F. E. R. A. found wide loss of employment in mining and lumbering and bankrupt small farming on marginal lands. They found poor, stony soil, and acres of dead tree stumps, reminders of the days when the entire region was virgin forest.

My neighbors and friends back home did not destroy the virgin forests or ruin the mining industry or willingly bankrupt themselves on dead acres heavily mortgaged.

What made northern Minnesota a "problem area"? The F. E. R. A. answers:

Three waves of economic exploitation which have swept through the area since it was opened to occupancy.

I quote further from the survey:

The first phase occurred with the development of copper mining, and later of iron mining; the second during the mushroom growth and rapid decline of the lumber industry, which left in its wake unused railroads, depleted timber resources, and stranded towns. This decline led to a third, an overemphasis on agriculture brought about by the colonization schemes of States and large landholders, who induced families to settle on unfavorable soils and under poor climatic conditions.

Seven-tenths of the people in my district are in need. Their need was created by no fault or failure of their own, but by the Mining and Steel Trusts, the robber barons who laid waste the forest, and the land speculators.

The economic depression brought the climax of defeated hope and fruitless struggle and forced many of my neighbors to seek relief. From 1920 to 1930, according to the F. E. R. A. study, tax rates increased until some farmers were paying one-third of their net income to the county treasurer. The indebtedness of individual farmers ranged from 85 percent to 150 percent of their total assessed value of all property. In some instances the indebtedness was as high as 600 percent. I shall come back to these appalling figures when I talk about the tax problem and the kind of taxes we need to balance a Farmer-Labor budget.

The people in my district are hard-working and thrifty. But thrift did not save them when the depression came. The F. E. R. A. study already quoted says:

Part-time farmers, lumbermen, and mine workers and the more frugal families who laid aside funds for old age were forced onto the relief rolls by the failure of the banks.

These are my people, the people who sent me to Washington to fight for the things they must have, the people who believed that here was one President who keeps his promises, the people who, in the President's own words "cannot wait." These are the people for whom I speak today. But I do not speak for my district alone; I speak also for the women's brigade, mothers, wives, and daughters of W. P. A. workers, who yesterday came to Washington to make their demands known to Congress. I speak for all those who are ill-clad, ill-housed, ill-nourished, and jobless.

INHUMAN BALANCE

Remember these people, and consider if you want to balance the Budget at their expense. Here is how it can be done, according to the advocates of that inhuman kind of balance.

Those who last November gave us the choice of Roosevelt or ruin, propose now that we take from that one-third of our Nation which is ill-housed any hope of a housing program.

They propose that we take from that one-third of our Nation which is ill-fed and ill-clad any hope of more food or better clothing.

They propose that American farmers continue to climb down the ladder from ownership to tenantry and get along without feed or seed and production loans in the sacred name of economy.

They propose that the Dust Bowl and the floodwaters become conversant with Budget requirements. That floods and drought and dust storms and soil erosion waste our national capital, while we save income for a few privileged citizens.

They propose that we cut relief appropriation to a billion dollars in the coming year, without regard to what this saving in dollars will cost in human suffering.

FARMER-LABOR BALANCE

In contrast, a Farmer-Labor budget calls for appropriations balanced to all the needs of all the people in the United States. We already have introduced in this Congress some bills which meet those needs. Let us look over that list of bills. Let us set up the expense side of our Farmer-Labor budget first, and then see how it can be met out of income.

PUBLIC WORKS AND RELIEF STANDARDS

There is the Public Works and Relief Standards Act (H. R. 5822) introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin, my friend [Mr. BOILEAU]. This bill appropriates $3,000,000,000 to create 3,000,000 jobs. It provides for the maintenance of proper standards of hours, working conditions and wages on those jobs. It provides $1,000,000,000 for the relief of persons unable to work. It provides for a permanent public-works program of useful projects to be carried out by workers and farmers for the benefit of the country as a whole and their own communities, and to add to our national wealth and the purchasing power of our citizens. I endorse this bill as the cornerstone of sound budget making—the number 1 "must" bill of a Farmer-Labor budget.

There has also been introduced by the gentleman from Washington, my friend Mr. COFFEE of Washington, H. R. 6655, a bill appropriating two and one-half billion dollars for public works. I feel sure my two good friends can work out a compromise agreement on these bills which will come near to meeting the requirements of the people they both seek to serve.

As a matter of fact even administration spokesmen do not pretend that a billion and a half is really adequate. Mr. Hopkins, testifying before the House subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, estimated that if this bill is passed it will be necessary to drop over half a million persons from the W. P. A. rolls. Mr. Hopkins and the President have expressed the hope that these people will find jobs in private industry. But they must know that the hope is unfounded. Almost six and one-half million jobless workers are certified and eligible for W. P. A. jobs today. Only a little over 2,000,000 of these are actually at work. What about the other four and a half million?

Hearings held by the subcommittee give the answer.

"You are reducing the number on the relief rolls", said Representative CANNON. "Is that because of the employment of the people in industry or is that an arbitrary curtailment of the rolls?"

"I would say both," replied Mr. Hopkins. In many cities, he said, it meant simply that these people got no help from anywhere.

"What did they do?" asked Representative WOODRUM.

"They were hungry", said Hopkins. "They did not have money to pay their rent and they lived very miserably."

THEY WERE HUNGRY

They were hungry. Studies made by the F. E. R. A. and the W. P. A. show that people dropped from relief or work rolls are always hungry. People dropped from F. E. R. A. or W. P. A. in Georgia, in New Jersey, in the District of Columbia, in South Dakota, in Baltimore, in Arkansas and in eight other areas studied by W. P. A. did not fulfill the hope of officials that they would find jobs in private industry. Cases "closed for administrative reasons," in the polite language of official bulletins, all tell the same story. Months after they were dropped from the rolls these people were jobless, without money for rent, clothing, medical aid. They were hungry. And now the Budget cutting the appropriation to a billion and a half, adds another half million to the hungry list.

A Budget that dooms 500,000 more American citizens to go hungry is on the way to being a starvation Budget. It does not balance with the needs of the people. And, in the President's own words, those hungry people won't wait. They must be fed now.

Workers are hungry and farmers are hungry. On many farms there is not enough food for folks or beasts. Only in the storage bins of food speculators are the surpluses piled up. Farmers need feed and seed loans, production loans, lower mortgage rates, and above all the assurance that they will be paid for growing food America must have.

Secretary Wallace went down South and found tenant farmers living in conditions more shocking than those endured by the peasantry of Europe. Morris Llewellyn Cooke, former R. E. A. Administrator, and H. H. Bennett, head of the Soil Conservation Service, have grown hoarse warning us that not only farmers but farms are in danger. The very soil itself is going, and when it is gone the people must go. There may be no posterity to worry about balancing the Budget.

In the face of the admitted threat to farmers and to our national survival, what does the Administration propose? It proposes that we put the findings of its expensive studies and surveys on ice. It proposes that farmers "wait." That all but a few continue as landless, miserable peasants. That wind and water erosion, flood and forest destruction also "wait." But wind and water will not stop for budgets. And hunger feeds the impatience of farmers.

FARMERS' SECURITY

H. R. 6836, introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], is based on the findings of the President's own committee and offers a solution of the tenancy problem. It must be included in our Farmer-Labor budget.

The Jones-Bankhead bill, though falling far below requirements of the situation, would make a start in the right direction. But the administration now threatens to throw this, its own baby, to the wolf of "economy."

No adequate soil-conservation measures have been as yet proposed. H. R. 204 and H. R. 207, introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota, provide for feed and seed loans and crop insurance for farmers. They, too, are essential to our budget.

All these farm measures must be passed and supplementary ones introduced if our budget is to meet the needs of farmers.

There is the workers' unemployment and social insurance bill. This bill was introduced in the last session of Congress and attracted the support of millions of workers and farmers and their organizations throughout the country. This session it has been introduced again by Mr. CELLER and by Mr. MATTHEW DUNN. This bill also belongs in a Farmer-Labor budget.

HOUSING

We have three housing bills before the House—the Scott bill, the Ellenbogen bill, and the Steagall bill. Of these, I prefer H. R. 4292, introduced by Mr. SCOTT. But remembering how the people in my district live, what it is like there to be ill-housed, I will work and vote for any bill for better housing which the majority of the membership will pass.

AMERICAN YOUTH ACT

Five hundred thousand young workers annually swell the labor supply of the country. Five hundred thousand young workers come of age each year in a world which has nothing to offer them, no work for their young energies to turn to. The American Youth Act has the support of young people all over the country. Three Members of this House think so well of it that they have each introduced it this session. I refer to the gentleman from Washington, Mr. COFFEE, the gentleman from California, Mr. VOORHIS, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MAVERICK.

THESE WILL NOT WAIT

Farmers will not wait. Workers will not wait. Flood and drought and erosion control will not wait. Housing will not wait. And the youth of our land will not wait.

In the words of the President of the United States:

> If we would keep faith with those who had faith in us, if we would make democracy succeed, I say we must act * * * now.

FARMER-LABOR VIEW OF TAXES

Acting now means planning a Farmer-Labor budget. I have briefly outlined the expense side of that budget. Where shall we get the money to pay for the things our people must have? We shall get it by three main revisions of our present tax system, which I have time now to discuss only briefly.

The President himself has recognized the need for tax revisions. In his message to Congress he said:

> The Treasury will be prepared by November next to present to the appropriate committees of Congress information as to such loopholes as may exist in the present revenue laws, and suggestions for such new or additional taxes as may be necessary to meet deficiencies, if any, in the revenue-producing power of the present levies.

The people will not wait for next November and the Treasury Department, if waiting means that they must make up the deficit.

A Farmer-Labor budget demands tax revisions—now. First, the loopholes in our present laws. It is necessary only to mention a few gentlemen who have driven a coach-and-four through those loopholes. Loopholes let Charles Mitchell rob the Treasury of $700,000, Messrs. Raskob and Du Pont snitch another million eight hundred thousand, and the Van Sweringens escape with still another million seven hundren thousand. The people of the United States have been cheated out of hundreds, if not thousands, of millions of dollars in the last few years by tax dodgers who knew their way among the loopholes. In the good old days, when Andrew Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasury itself provided a guide to the loopholes. There need be no mystery about the $60,000,000 disappointment in revenue returns. I firmly believe that most of the disappointment is due to an illegal raid on Treasury funds by big tax dodgers.

Second, our present tax laws must be changed so that they no longer bear heaviest on those least able to pay. I spoke of the heavy taxes borne by poor farmers in my district. What corporation or millionaire industrialist carries a tax load equal to 100 to 600 percent of his total assessed value? But that is the kind of tax burden many farmers carry. It is generally agreed that taxation in this country is regressive—that is, that the poorest section of the country pays heaviest for all Government expenditures, including its own relief.

Third, our tax laws must be revised so that progressive taxation on big incomes and corporate profits will balance the Budget. We have heard a great deal lately about England. England has been held up to us as a fine model of how to hamstring the trade-unions by making them responsible. But those who favor copying the English Tories balk at adopting even Tory forms of progressive taxation. The corporation income tax averages 25 percent in England, and, at most, 15 percent—more probably 11 percent—here. Income, gift, and inheritance taxes in England are far higher than in this country, except for taxes on that small proportion of the population with incomes of over a million dollars a year. We could increase our Federal income to $6,000,000,000 from direct taxation alone by simply raising our tax rates in the higher brackets to the English level.

The question of taxation is too vast and complicated for adequate discussion in the short time allowed me today. I hope soon to have an opportunity to talk at greater length on this important phase of a Farmer-Labor budget and to introduce a Farmer-Labor tax bill.

But the problem of raising enough money to meet necessary expenditures is not an impossible problem for the richest country in the world to solve.

It can be solved by rigid enforcement of existing tax laws and heavy penalties, including, as in England, long prison sentences for lawbreakers. It can be solved by revising present tax laws, lifting the burden of indirect and regressive taxation from workers, farmers, and small-business people, and placing that burden where it belongs—on the big corporations and industrialists who have cornered the national wealth.

WE MUST ACT NOW

Acting now means acting together. Unless we act together the people of our districts will hunger separately. I call upon all progressives in the House for common action—now. I urge you all to speak, to act, to vote for a Farmer-Labor budget, a budget that will meet the needs of the people not only in my district but in every congressional district in the United States. Together we can defeat the starvation budget which has the backing of all those forces of reaction which in the last election strove for the defeat of Franklin D. Roosevelt and for our defeat. In my district those forces were led by the Steel Trust. The people of my district licked the Steel Trust and sent me to Congress. They expect me to carry on the fight here to help defeat the Steel Trust and its counterparts in other sections of the country; to get relief, public works, farm aid, and security for those who must have help—now; to support progressives from other sections and to win their support for my section—now; to balance the Budget—now; and to balance it at the expense of those who can afford to pay—now.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago Mr. Newton, of St. Louis, a former Member of the House, delivered before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a very able and informative address. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks to insert that address in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I also desire, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks to include a very able and informative address delivered before the same committee by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LUVENIA FLOWERS

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1790) for the relief of Luvenia Flowers, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the committees.

NAVAL AIR BASE AT TONGUE POINT, OREG.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia (when the Committee on Naval Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I call up the bill H. R. 198, on the Union Calendar, authorizing an appropriation for the development of a naval air base at Tongue Point, Oreg.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, this bill being on the Union Calendar, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 198) authorizing an appropriation for the development of a naval air base at Tongue Point, Oreg., with Mr. BOEHNE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the proponents of the bill will be entitled to 1 hour and those opposed to the bill will be entitled to 1 hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to request the time in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs opposed to the bill? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD], for 1 hour.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this bill does not have the endorsement of the Navy Department. While I entertain the highest regard for the opinion of the naval officers, yet, nevertheless when the facts have been submitted in a case of this kind—that is, to determine whether or not a shore base should be established for patrol seaplanes—I think that the 25 members of the Naval Affairs Committee are just as competent to reach a decision as the naval officials.

At the very outset let me call to your attention that this bill has not received the endorsement of the Budget. For one Member of this House, I do not think it is treason for Congress to pass bills that have not received the approval of the Budget. Have we reached the point in this great body that we will not legislate unless some clerk in the Bureau of the Budget in writing up the report on the bill advises us to do so?

What are we sent here for? Are we sent here only to think as the Budget thinks and to conclude only as the Budget concludes?

The Budget says that this bill authorizing an appropriation of $1,250,000 is not in accord with the financial program. It said that last March, when the Navy Department submitted its adverse report on the bill—and yet within the last 60 days it has given its approval to naval bills which are now pending before the Naval Affairs Committee calling for authorizations amounting to nearly $100,000,000.

Just think of it, with an annual expenditure for this fiscal year of approximately $7,700,000,000 we find that an expenditure of $1,250,000 as called for in this bill will upset the financial program.

If you are interested in economy, I will prove to a mathematical certainty it will be a saving of approximately $11,000,000 by establishing this shore base.

The object and purpose of the bill is to authorize an appropriation of $1,250,000 for the development of a naval air base at Tongue Point, Oreg.

Tongue Point is situated near the mouth of the Columbia River in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg. The mouth of the Columbia River is 560 miles north of San Francisco and 245 miles by water from Seattle. Tongue Point as a site for naval development was first considered about 37 years ago.

It was in 1900 that this site was considered by a special naval board headed by Admiral Bradford. The report of that board said:

Its position, 560 miles from San Francisco and the only available point between San Francisco and Puget Sound, makes it highly important as a harbor of refuge and repair for naval vessels; more especially as the entrance to the Puget Sound naval station lies between shores, one of which belongs to another nation.

The report further stated:

The only site on the river for a naval station is at Astoria and the Navy needs a base there with the least possible loss of time.

In 1917 the Helm Navy Yard Commission, headed by Admiral Helm, after visiting the Columbia River, recommended the acquisition of the Tongue Point site. That part of the report being as follows:

> It is the final opinion of this Commission that the Tongue Point site, taking all things into consideration, is the most desirable one to be found near the mouth of the Columbia River for submarine and aviation purposes, and it recommends, as noted hereinafter, that this site be acquired and developed for this purpose, at a total cost not to exceed $1,200,000.
> For the acquisition of the necessary site and the immediately necessary development of same on the Columbia River, as hereinbefore recommended in this report for a submarine and aviation base, this development to include the necessary wharves, storehouses, shop facilities, electric charging plant, temporary barracks for men, etc., with provision for meeting the necessities of at least 12 submarines at one time, and possibility of expansion to double that number, and for the necessary hangars, launching ways, etc., needed for aviation purposes, there is recommended the sum of $1,200,000.

In 1919 the special board of inspection of naval bases, headed by Admiral Parks, concurred in the recommendations of the Helm Commission with the further recommendation that the base be for submarines, destroyers, and aviation and that—

> An appropriation of a million and a half be obtained from the present Congress, with authorization of a completed project not to exceed five millions, to be completed within 3 years.

As a result of these reports the city of Astoria purchased and donated to the Government 115 acres of hard land and 256 acres of submerged land at Tongue Point to be used as a submarine, destroyer, and aviation base; therefore, in the appropriation bill of 1920 Congress provided:

> Submarine and destroyer base, Columbia River: Toward the development of a submarine and destroyer base, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept from the city of Astoria, Oreg., free from encumbrances and conditions and without cost to the United States Government, a certain tract of land at Tongue Point, Columbia River, for use as a site for a naval submarine and destroyer base, and containing 115 acres, more or less, of hard land and 256 acres of submerged land, $250,000.

As a result of this appropriation there was built at Tongue Point some wooden buildings, piers, and a limited amount of dredging was done. Since that work there has been no further naval development at this site or in this area. From that time down to today the Navy has completely forgotten the development of this base. It has let its buildings and piers and other development go to wrack and ruin; therefore, the Government loses the entirety of the $250,000 spent there. Yet, nevertheless from a national standpoint Tongue Point is the key to the defense of the Columbia River Valley and the great Pacific Northwest.

I grant you that Tongue Point at the mouth of the Columbia River near the little town of Astoria is not as fashionable a place of abode, nor does it possess the social atmosphere now established at Coronado and Long Beach, where the Navy is so well entrenched, yet it is of the greatest strategic importance in the scheme of national defense for the Northwest.

The purpose and object of this bill is not to make this a submarine or destroyer base, but to utilize this site as a naval air base for patrol or sea planes.

The plan of the Navy Department calls for the establishment on the west coast of three primary naval aviation bases. One base on North Island at San Diego, one at Sand Point, Seattle, Wash., and the third in the San Francisco Bay area at Alameda and Benton Field. The first two, North Island and Sand Point, have been established and in operation a great many years, and recently Congress authorized an appropriation of $15,000,000 for the establishment of a base at Alameda; however, no funds have been made available for this base, as the title to the site has not passed to the United States.

In considering this bill Admiral King, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, testified:

> I think I am ready to say that once the three primary air bases on the west coast are established that the region in the mouth of the Columbia River or covering the mouth of the Columbia River has the next call. But I would like to say that that is my personal, although also my professional, opinion.

The Tongue Point base provided for in this bill is a secondary base. It is proposed to furnish accommodations for only two squadrons of seaplanes.

You will note that in the testimony of Admiral King I have just quoted he stated that the Columbia River area would have the next call after the three primary bases are established. In the judgment of the committee we are of the opinion that the authorization for the establishment of this secondary base at Tongue Point should go hand in hand with the establishment of the last primary air base on the Pacific coast at Alameda. There is a difference of opinion as to when the secondary base should be established.

The officers of the Navy feel that the secondary bases should not be started until the primary bases are completed; however, in our judgment, we feel that we should construct the primary base at Alameda and the secondary base at Tongue Point at the same time, especially in view of the fact that on Monday of this week the House approved a bill (S. 2049) reducing by $1,500,000 the original authorization for Alameda; therefore, from the committee's standpoint we propose to develop the primary base at Alameda and the secondary base at Tongue Point within the amount that was originally authorized for Alameda. The act of June 24, 1936, authorized $15,000,000 for Alameda. The bill passed by the House on Monday reduced the amount of this authorization to $13,500,000. This bill authorizes $1,250,000 for Tongue Point, thus now making a grand total for Alameda and Tongue Point of $14,750,000, or a saving of $250,000 over the original authorization for Alameda. The construction of both will not cost as much as the Department requested and Congress authorized for Alameda.

Patrol or seaplanes must either be based on a tender or on a shore station; it is the contention of the Navy Department that patrol or seaplanes should in this case be based on a tender, while it is the position of the Naval Affairs Committee that two squadrons of patrol or seaplanes should be based on a land base at Tongue Point.

Now, from the economy standpoint, let us see which will be the more preferable as a base for these two seaplane squadrons.

To build a tender of 8,000 tons will require from 2 to 3 years and will cost, fully equipped with machine shops, gasoline and oil storage and other necessary equipment, about $15,000,000. In addition, such a tender will require, exclusive of the flying personnel for the planes, between four and five hundred naval personnel to man her.

To establish a land base for these same planes will require the construction of machine shops, and machine shops on shore are far more efficient and satisfactory than those in cramped space on a tender; barracks, quarters, hangars, ramps, and other accessories to a limited extent, which can be put up for $1,250,000. Another item of considerable moment would be the saving in personnel. To man the base for two seaplane squadrons, exclusive of operating personnel for the planes, would require about 214 men, as against the four or five hundred required for a tender.

In this case is it self-evident that it is economy and common sense to use Government-owned property at Tongue Point with a limited amount of development as a base for the two squadrons.

A fair yardstick to determine whether or not we would be justified in establishing a seaplane base is to compare the maintenance cost between a shore base and a floating base or a tender. Now, let us do so and see how it works out.

At Sand Point we have a seaplane base designed for two squadrons, or 24 seaplanes. The ground force, both enlisted and civilian, consists of 96 men, and the maintenance cost, exclusive of military personnel, is $130,000. Including military personnel, it is approximately $125,000 more, making a total maintenance cost of about $255,000.

The maintenance cost for the last fiscal year of an aircraft tender, the Wright, was $717,678. Both furnish accommodations for the same number of seaplanes; that is, two squadrons, or 24 planes. So, therefore, you can readily see it will be a saving in a shore establishment of the size of Sand Point of the difference between $255,000 and $717,678, or $462,678.

The issue is clear-cut—we must either pass this bill providing for $1,250,000, or else the committee will be obliged to bring in a bill providing for an aircraft tender at an estimated cost of over $12,000,000. The men operating the planes cannot base in the air; they must have a base either on shore or on a tender. So you can readily see we will make a saving of approximately $11,000,000 by authorizing this shore base instead of a floating base. The House is beginning to preach economy. Now, this is an opportunity for them to practice it.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Did not the gentleman's committee approve the establishment of the naval air base at San Diego?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman go on record before the House as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House that if this bill becomes a law he will do everything he can to oppose the bill which he says he introduced?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will say to the gentleman that if this committee follows my advice on this bill we will build a land base and will construct one less tender. We will save the difference between $12,000,000 and $1,250,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Can the gentleman speak for the entire membership of his committee and say that under no circumstances will they recommend to this House the passage of the bill that the Navy Department wants?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I cannot speak for any man at any time except myself, no more than the gentleman from Missouri can.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Did I understand the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to leave the impression upon this Committee that the purpose of the tender to be constructed under the bill introduced by the distinguished chairman is for use at Tongue Point?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; of course not.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that no more tenders will have to be constructed for use of the Navy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does the gentleman not know, as a matter of fact, that the passage of this bill will not have anything more to do with the building of tenders for the Navy than an owl's hoot?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina, if this House goes on record and approves the establishment of a land base, as one member of the Naval Affairs Committee I shall vote for one less tender.

Mr. UMSTEAD. How many tenders is the gentleman going to vote for?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am not going to vote for any at this session of Congress if the pending bill is passed. The building program of the Navy calls for the construction of eight tenders, and the House would be justified, if this bill passes, in voting for only seven tenders, thereby saving $11,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. I take it the gentleman is basing his statement on the premise that either this base must be built or a tender must be placed in the Columbia River?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Has the gentleman otained an estimate from the Navy Department or from the Bureau of Yards and Docks or from the Bureau of Aeronautics as to what can be done with $1,250,000 at Tongue Point?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I asked the gentleman if he had obtained an estimate from either of the two Bureaus of the Navy Department.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Permit me to answer the question. I want to be fair with the committee. There is one weakness to this proposition. There is located at Seattle, 90 miles away, a seaplane base.

Mr. MAGNUSON. May I correct the gentleman? It is about 200 miles away.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is 200 miles by water and 90 miles by air. Permit me to say also you have to fly over three separate and distinct ranges of mountains in going by air from Seattle to Tongue Point.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman has an hour. Will he yield me some of his time?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I will yield for any question I can answer while I am on the floor.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am not as familiar as the gentleman with the details of ship construction, as he well knows. Do I understand the gentleman to be leaving the impression with this committee that a $15,000,000 tender is necessary to do what may be done at Tongue Point?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am leaving the impression with the committee that if you build it for $15,000,000 you will be lucky because the cost is going up by leaps and bounds. Admiral Leahy testified before a Senate committee in support of the bill for a tender that it will cost $12,000,000 or more.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman does not answer the question.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I propose to this House that it be built on land and save the difference between $1,250,000 and $12,000,000. If you want economy, here is your opportunity. Let us practice a little economy instead of indulging in this lip-service economy. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to come onto this floor and oppose a bill coming out of a great legislative committee of this House.

When I was appointed to a place on the Committee on Appropriations 2 years ago I did not ask to be assigned to the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Navy Department. If I could have selected the subcommittees to which I was to be assigned, I confess I would not have selected the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Navy Department. However, I was placed on that subcommittee, and by a series of events over which I have had no control, I have become chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Navy Department. This is a very serious responsibility these days, when we are faced, on the one hand, with the necessity of having an adequate national defense and, on the other hand, with an annual appropriation, amounting this year to $526,000,000, for the Navy Department. Therefore, when a bill such as the one before us is reported from the legislative committee, I think the Members of the House have the right to know the facts.

I have no personal feeling about this matter one way or the other. After you have heard the facts it is immaterial to me whether you vote the bill up or down. However, if you vote the bill up, next year when we come in with an appropriation bill carrying funds to do what you will have told us to do, and thereafter we come in with an annually recurring maintenance and operating appropriation for the new station, do not blame the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, but place the blame where the blame belongs, upon the Congress of the United States.

Someone on this floor referred this morning, yea, it was the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], to economy. The President of the United States has just vetoed a bill concerning his own State. Now we are faced with an authorization for the building of a naval air base at Tongue Point.

I am quite certain the gentleman from Georgia intended to give you all the facts. I know he could not do so in the limited time which he consumed, and the gentleman was most gracious in yielding to me. I repeat now what I stated a moment ago, that I have no such storehouse of information at my disposal about naval vessels as has the gentleman from Georgia, but I think I know enough about the naval appropriation bill and the Naval Establishment in the United States to be able conscientiously to urge upon you that you go slowly about creating any more shore establishments at this time.

Who is charged with the development of a system of defense? The Army and the Navy. I was astounded to hear the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who, since he became the chairman of that great committee, has relied upon the naval authorities to support every bill he has asked this Congress to pass. The gentleman has believed their evidence. The gentleman has told you and has told me that we ought to believe this evidence, that the naval authorities were the ones who knew and who ought to know, and whose duty it is to know, what is necessary to build up a coordinated system of shore defenses in this country. Now, the gentleman comes to you today and states, under the rather strange doctrine of self-assertion, if you please, that in order for Congress to assert itself under his leadership he must vote for something which the Navy has never recommended. No man in this House believes the gentleman from Georgia, with all of his power, wisdom, and experience, would simply pick out a naval officer to trample upon in order to ascend the heights of self-assertion again as a Member of Congress, but this is what he has done. The gentleman has gone further than this. He has intimated to you—in fact, he stated to you—that one of the reasons the Navy Department would not approve a naval establishment at Tongue Point was because it was not a proper social place for the naval officers to spend their hours of leisure.

I am astounded that the chairman of the committee charged with the conduct of the Navy Department, having voted out bill after bill, having called upon Congress time after time to appropriate billions of dollars, should now come in and state the very unit of the Government with which he has been dealing is a social organization and not an arm of defense. If the gentleman means what he said, in fairness to himself and to the House which votes the money for the gentleman's program, the gentleman ought to investigate this charge.

Let us look at this project for a moment. The gentleman from Georgia stated he wished for you to know the facts. The Navy Department has at Seattle a naval air base. The chairman of the legislative committee stated on this floor a moment ago that Seattle is only 90 miles from Tongue Point. Less than 100 miles from this point, at Tacoma, the great Army of the United States has its main northwestern air base, and an appropriation was carried in the recent appropriation bill to extend and enlarge its facilities there. The Army's activities in this area will be presented to you by another distinguished Member of this House.

What is the naval air base situation on the west coast? At San Diego a naval air base, in San Francisco Bay a naval air base, and at Seattle a naval air base. The Navy Department has recommended these three places. Two of them are now in existence. One million dollars was carried in this year's appropriation bill to begin the construction of the naval air base at Alameda, which will be the San Francisco Bay base. The Navy Department has recommended, as you will see from the report, that no secondary stations be built on the Pacific coast until the three primary stations to which I referred have been established and completed. Upon what does the committee rely by way of expert testimony except the chairman of the committee? It relies upon a statement made by Admiral King 2 years ago, when he was acting as Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics. The statement is set forth in the report, and I beg of you to get a copy of this report and read it before you vote upon this measure. Admiral King is their witness, the one on whom they are relying, and the only one whose testimony they have produced in the report. The report was submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], in whose district this proposed air base will be located.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. It is true that Admiral King——

Mr. UMSTEAD. I will yield for a question, not for a statement; I am sorry.

Mr. MOTT. I just want to correct the gentleman's statement. The gentleman stated we have produced the testimony of no witnesses except Admiral King.

Mr. UMSTEAD. In the report.

Mr. MOTT. I say to the gentleman that in the short report filed that is the only witness quoted, but the hearings are very voluminous and they are on the desk and they are available to the gentleman and to everyone else.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not yield further. I made no reference to the hearings. I said, and I repeat, that as I read the report the only witness relied upon is Admiral King, and he states that he would recommend it only after the establishment of the three primary bases at San Diego, Seattle, and San Francisco, and the one at San Francisco has not yet been started. The first appropriation to be used for that purpose is in the appropriation bill for 1938.

Let me now remind you of one thing more. I ask you to read the letter addressed to the chairman of this committee and set forth in the report from the Secretary of the Navy. He not only does not favor the construction of this naval air base, but he states, unequivocally, that the Department is against it, and he states further that H. R. 198, which is the bill under consideration, is not in accord with the program of the President.

The gentleman from Georgia has stated that the air base at Tongue Point would compare with the air base at Seattle. I cannot believe the distinguished chairman of the legislative committee meant to imply that you could take a million and a quarter dollars and do with it what has been done at Seattle.

I undertook this morning to get some information from the Navy Department. I asked the distinguished chairman when he was here in the Well of the House where he received his estimate of $1,250,000 and what he could do with it. He has never answered. I will tell you what the Department told me they could do with it. I do not know myself, but I was informed this morning that with that amount of money the Navy Department probably would be able to maintain the tremendous number of six patrol planes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The total amount of expenditure——

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield for a question.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am going to state the facts and then ask the question.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield. The gentleman was very nice to me.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The total amount that has been spent, outside of dredging, for building, repair shops, and all that sort of thing, at Seattle or at Sand Point, where there are 24 planes, is $755,200.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman stated that a few moments ago. That is not convincing, because the gentleman took out a lot of exceptions and we do not know what is included in your exceptions, but you know you cannot build at Tongue Point an establishment that will take care of 24 patrol planes with this amount of money.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The total amount that has been spent at Seattle or at Sand Point of every character is $2,200,000.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Then why do you say you can do it for $1,250,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is the amount that has been expended ever since the station has been established.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Why say you can do it for $1,250,000?

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Not now. I am waiting for an answer to my question.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is all that I think should be spent, and it may not be necessary to have 24 planes. One squadron of 12 planes may be sufficient to meet all the naval needs.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Then the gentleman admits that when he undertook to say to the House that you can build at Tongue Point for $1,250,000 what you have at Seattle, the gentleman was woefully in error?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And, further, it would not cost as much to maintain it at Tongue Point as at Seattle.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am not talking about maintenance, I am talking about the cost of plant.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will not cost as much to build there, because you will not have as large an establishment.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman knows that never in the history of this Congress, during the last 2 years, has any estimate of the Navy Department turned out to be within 30 percent of enough money, to say nothing of an estimate that has been made up by some people who have not even consulted the Navy Department about what it would cost. The Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department is the most competent agency to determine the cost of a Naval Establishment in this country. They have not even been asked for an estimate as to the cost of this measure. They have not even been requested to furnish the committee which reported this bill, according to the testimony I received this morning, to submit such an estimate.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 more minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman advise this Committee, if the House rejects this land base, whether he will then support the construction of a tender to take the place of it?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I may say in answer to that question, first, that there is no evidence in this world that a tender will be necessary to take the place of this base, if it is not built, and I may say, secondly, when the time comes to vote on the measure providing for a tender, I shall dispose of that matter then, so far as I am concerned, and not until then.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAAS. Of course, there is a difference in the cost——

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield for a question and no more.

Mr. MAAS. I am repeating the gentleman's own testimony.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Well, that is not necessary, if I have made the statement. Just ask me your question.

Mr. MAAS. All right; why do you have to have as much money at Tongue Point as you do at Sand Point?

Mr. UMSTEAD. It is not up to me to answer that question.

Mr. MAAS. You are going to answer it.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am not going to answer it and I cannot answer it, and no man on the committee can answer it——

Mr. MAAS. I can answer it if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not yield, for the reason that no man on this committee has come in here with any figures from any responsible source to justify $1,250,000 or any other amount.

Mr. MAAS. I will tell the gentleman if he will give me a chance.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I do not yield to the gentleman any more, though I shall later if I have the time. No one has shown that any estimate was requested of the Navy Department. I am not expected to know or to have more information than the legislative committee which has reported the bill out. All I know is what I heard this morning from the Navy Department, that this would provide sufficient funds to establish a base which would accommodate six patrol planes.

What are we faced with in this measure? First, we are faced with not the slightest necessity for the establishment of this naval air base. It has not been approved, but on the contrary it has been disapproved by the Navy Department. It has not been approved, but on the contrary it has been disapproved, by the Budget Bureau. It is in the heart of an area within 90 miles of a now existing naval base. It is within 100 miles of the largest Army aviation base in the Northwest. I ask you Members of the House a serious question as to whether or not you are going to vote today to increase an already overheavy naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Not now. It was estimated 2 years ago that the Naval Establishment would cost $555,000,000 a year when we completed our building program to treaty strength. Since that it has been admitted by the Navy Department that they made an error of $29,000,000 in the estimate of pay and subsistence costs. Since then this House and this Congress has passed leave and sick laws adding upward of $7,000,000 a year to the cost of the United States Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield myself 1 minute more. Since then this Congress has passed authorizing acts and since then the cost of everything the Navy has to buy has gone up, I should say, around 25 percent in this country, so that today it is a conservative statement, in my judgment, that if we go on and complete the Navy to treaty strength, if we maintain the shore stations we now have, by 1942 it will cost a minimum of $625,000,000 per year.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. One other question and I am through, and then I shall yield. In every naval air station in the United States today, in every naval training station, at every Government navy yard, the Committee on Appropriations and the Navy Department know that there are improvements which must be made. There are repairs needed now. Let us, if you please, before we build more shore establishments, preserve and let us be sure that we can financially maintain those we now have, the necessity for which, in most instances, has been thoroughly established.

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. Is it not true that naval bases are also contemplated along the Alaskan shore and that preliminary surveys have been made and that they will require additional expense?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I understand that is correct. I appeal to you Members, not personally. I wish to see this country have a navy adequate to its needs. Every man who is for this bill knows my attitude as to that, but I feel it is my duty to place before you a picture of what the annual cost of the Navy will be under the present plan of construction, and I hope, if you authorize any additional projects, before you increase the shore stations, you will be sure that we have money enough for the maintenance of those which we have as well as to operate our Navy and keep it in a proper state of repair, so as to be ready should emergency demand. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGELL. I want to ask the gentleman whether the Tongue Point naval air base was not actually authorized as far back as 1901.

Mr. UMSTEAD. That was for a submarine base.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, in 10 minutes it is, of course, impossible to cover this subject, and I shall try, therefore, to confine my remarks to those things which are of the most importance and which I think the membership of the House ought to know. I also want to reserve some of this brief time, if I can, to answer questions, because I know there are many questions my colleagues will want to ask, and I would like to answer them.

This is perhaps the most modest authorization bill for the establishment of a naval air base that has ever been presented to the Congress, and yet, in the opinion of the committee, for the small amount here asked to be authorized, a million and a quarter dollars, the largest and one of the most valuable undefended areas in the United States can be adequately protected.

It has been stressed here that the Navy Department has submitted to the Naval Affairs Committee an adverse report, and, of course, that is true. However, notwithstanding that formal report, I am prepared to say to you that the Navy, in my opinion, is not as much opposed to the establishment of this base as the report would indicate. I believe that is the opinion of every member of the Naval Affairs Committee who listened to the testimony of the Navy Department's witnesses at the hearings. And I think I can assure you that, in spite of the adverse departmental report, if this bill becomes law, the Navy Department is not going to shed any tears over it. I am aware, however, that an adverse departmental report on any bill is dynamite and that that is the chief objection we have to overcome in this debate.

But in that very connection, it seems to me, the fact that the Naval Affairs Committee has unanimously reported this bill in the face of an adverse departmental recommendation should be exceptionally strong and convincing proof to you that the bill has exceptional merit. I am informed that this is the only bill in years that the Naval Affairs Committee has reported favorably upon which did not have departmental endorsement. That fact alone is sufficient to entitle this bill to special and very thoughtful consideration by the House.

Let me call your attention to the further fact which I also think is important: That, although there is an adverse departmental report, yet it is a fact, which every member of the Naval Affairs Committee will vouch for, that whenever the Navy Department has sent up a witness before the committee in support of its Department report, that witness has been ultimately obliged to admit that the establishment of this base will be not only necessary but inevitable.

In that respect your attention is called to the testimony of Admiral King, who, when he testified last year, was chief of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics. Admiral King was detailed by the Navy Department to appear before the committee and to oppose this bill. This he did. And yet in the course of his testimony, in answer to a direct question by Mr. Darrow, a member of the committee, Admiral King declared that it was his personal, as well as his professional, opinion that when the three major air bases on the Pacific coast were established a secondary base should immediately be established at Tongue Point. Two of those major bases have been built and the third has been authorized, and that is one of the reasons why, in spite of the Department's adverse report, the Naval Affairs Committee of the House has twice, in a period of 2 years, reported this bill to the House with a unanimous recommendation that it be enacted, and it is here on that recommendation today.

May I now call your attention just for a moment to the geography of the Pacific coast, which may not be so familiar to some of you from the East as it is to us who live there, and also to the general defense situation on the Pacific coast.

The Pacific coast of the continental United States is approximately 1,200 miles in length, a distance as far as from Portland, Maine, to Savannah, Ga. On that coast, unlike the Atlantic coast, there are but four large harbors. There is a harbor at Lost Angeles, which is not a natural harbor, but which was made by the ingenuity of the Army engineers and the people of California. The engineers did a marvelous job at Los Angeles, and they have a splendid harbor there.

Five hundred miles north of Los Angeles is the fine natural harbor of San Francisco Bay.

Next, and 565 miles north of San Francisco, is the great harbor of the Columbia River; and the fourth, 240 miles further north, up near the Canadian boundary, is Puget Sound.

Provisions have been made for the adequate defense of all those harbors except the Columbia River. The fleet is based near Los Angeles, at San Pedro. In that vicinity also is one of the great primary naval air bases. The naval air base on San Francisco Bay has already been authorized, the authorization carrying about $14,000,000, and the money will probably be appropriated at the next session of the Congress. On Puget Sound there is also another major naval air base establishment.

Between San Francisco and Puget Sound is a distance of 805 miles, almost one-half the length of the Atlantic coast, by comparison. That entire distance of 805 miles is absolutely defenseless. There is no protection of any kind on that coast. It is the only portion of the United States of comparable area that is totally undefended.

Now, between San Francisco Bay and Puget Sound there flows into the Pacific Ocean the great Columbia River, one of the largest streams in the world and the second largest river on the American continent. Up and down the Pacific Coast run two great parallel chains of mountains, the Coast Range Mountains, which rise immediately out of the sea, and about 150 miles to the east, the Cascade Mountains. In California this range is called the Sierras, but they are all the same chain. The Cascades and the Sierras rise to great heights, some of the peaks reaching an altitude of more than 14,000 feet. The Columbia River is the only river which penetrates both of those great parallel chains of mountains. It rises far up in British Columbia on the backbone of the continent, and flows down and across the continent between the States of Oregon and Washington to the sea.

At the mouth of the Columbia River is one of the largest fresh-water harbors in the world. It is the largest in the United States and the only one upon the Pacific coast. The river at Astoria, where Tongue Point is located, is from 6 to 12 miles wide. The channel of the river where it enters the sea between the jetties is 8,000 feet, or a mile and a half wide, with a minimum depth of 40 feet. So tremendous is the volume of water in the Columbia River that even at its very mouth the water is fresh. The Columbia is one of the few rivers in the world where that situation obtains. Inside the harbor there is room for the anchorage of the entire United States fleet. That river is the natural entrance by the sea to the northwest portion of the United States, and, as I have said, it is entirely undefended.

I wish now to call attention briefly to the importance of the Columbia River area, which under this bill it is proposed to defend.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MOTT. The Columbia River Basin drains an area of 250,000 square miles, as against 70,000 square miles tributary to San Francisco Bay and 40,000 square miles tributary to Puget Sound. The area has a population of 2,000,000 people. It contains the largest amount of standing timber in the United States. Upon that river, 100 miles from the ocean, is the city of Portland, with 350,000 inhabitants—Portland, the largest wheat-exporting city in the United States!

It is the largest lumber-exporting port and the second largest wool-exporting port in the United States. On this river is the great Bonneville Dam, 80 miles up the river from Portland, and further still up that river is the Grand Coulee Dam, which, when completed, will be the largest power and irrigation project in the world.

I do not want to be an alarmist, and I try not to be, but every member of the Naval Affairs Committee knows that if war comes, it will come on the Pacific coast. That is why the fleet is there, and that is why it must remain there permanently. If war comes, we also know that the attack will come not at San Diego, not at San Francisco, not in Puget Sound, which are all defended; it will come by air from the sea at the mouth of the Columbia River.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does the gentleman think that the Government should build a naval air base or an Army air base every 100 miles on the east and west shore lines of the country?

Mr. MOTT. There has never been any contention of that kind, and no one is making any such contention now. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further because I want to follow up my statement in the very brief time remaining.

Mr. KNIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to my colleague from Ohio, a member of the committee.

Mr. KNIFFIN. Is it not a fact that there are only 24 naval defense planes on the entire west coast north of San Diego?

Mr. MOTT. I think that figure is about correct. The chairman of the committee can give the gentleman the exact figures, but I may state in that connection that we are now building planes so fast that we do not have the facilities to base them upon the Pacific coast, and it is absolutely necessary that more bases be established.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact which is admitted by naval and military authorities generally that if an attack by an enemy comes out there it will come from the sea by the air. And another fact is that the only way we can stop an air attack from the sea is by having a superior air force based upon the land at the point of attack.

That is why naval air bases have been established or authorized at San Diego, San Francisco Bay, and Puget Sound—to defend those areas from an air attack from the ocean in the only way they can be effectively defended. If such a defense is proper and necessary for those other areas it is equally proper and necessary for the Columbia River area. The members of our committee, who have spent 2 years studying this question are convinced of that, just as Admiral King was convinced of it when he said that the next point of development must be at the mouth of the Columbia River and the defense of that river must be an air base.

The Army and the Navy every few years hold maneuvers in the Pacific Northwest for the purpose of trying to work out military and naval defense problems for that area. In every one of these war games it has been demonstrated that if an enemy should undertake to capture Puget Sound, he will not strike at Puget Sound directly, but will come by way of the Columbia River. That undefended harbor is the natural and logical point of penetration. In every one of these maneuvers it has been demonstrated that we cannot protect the entrance of the Columbia River or any of the territory behind it merely by defending Puget Sound. Puget Sound, of course, should be defended. It should have its naval air base for its own protection. But the defense of the Columbia is at the mouth of that river itself, and not at Puget Sound or San Francisco or Los Angeles.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I cannot consume any more of the brief time allotted to the supporters of this bill, because there are others who want to talk, but these are a few of the high points I have thought it proper to bring to your attention. Our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], has already told you something of the amazing history of this project, how the Tongue Point base was inaugurated not by the people of Oregon, but by the Navy Department itself. He has told you how time after time, from 1900 to 1919 the Department urged upon Congress the establishment of a naval base at the mouth of the Columbia River, how Congress finally made a small appropriation to commence construction of the base after the people of Astoria had purchased the Tongue Point site and had deeded it unconditionally to the Government upon the Navy Department's assurance that it would build a base. The Navy Department did not build the base. It did not keep its word. And although the people at the mouth of the Columbia spent $100,000 to purchase and give to the Navy the naval base site which the Navy said it wanted and needed, the Navy Department has refused consistently, since 1923, to do anything with it. And the Columbia River area is still defenseless and still at the mercy of any foreign enemy which may attack it.

I wish I could go more into detail on this phase of the subject, but I cannot. Let me conclude by saying that in this proposal there is no partisanship and there is no sectionalism. We have never expected to profit financially by the establishment of this base. We are not seeking special advantage for ourselves or our communities. We are asking for only one thing, and that is protection—the same kind of protection that has already been given to the other seacoast areas in the United States. That kind of protection we think in justice and good conscience we are entitled to. It is for that protection we are asking in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is perfectly foolish for us to consider this bill on the assumption that something might happen in the way of an attack on the West coast. Nothing is going to happen. Nations are not foolish. They generally weigh with care the strength of the power they attack. What could this shore base take care of? About a half dozen seaplanes. What would that amount to if there was an attack? The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] can be satisfied that if there is ever an attack upon the western coast of this country the Army and Navy, our line of defense, will be there to take care of that attack, and it does not make any difference whether it is on the northern border of the Pacific coast or the southern border. They will take just as good care of the gentleman's section of the country as they will of any other section, and they will know if such an attack is planned and will be prepared to meet it. The Army and Navy has always protected us and will continue to do so. They have never failed us in the past and never will in the future. So do not try and tell us this project means protection for the great Northwest.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a suggestion?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD] said that when he went on the Appropriations Committee he did not request to be placed upon the subcommittee handling the Navy bill. I think this House should feel honored and that the people of this country should feel very grateful that he did accept that assignment and that he has become the chairman of the Navy subcommittee in such a short time. I have never met a man in this House in my years of service who learned his subject as fast and can so ably express his views as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD]. [Applause.]

Ever since I have been a Member of this House I have followed the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] when it came to bills that he brought in increasing our Navy. I followed him before 1930 when he was the ranking minority member on the Naval Affairs Committee. I followed him, why? I followed him because he always brought a favorable report from the Navy Department in support of the legislation that he advocated. In this matter today I am not going to follow him because he does not have the report of the Navy Department. On the contrary, the report shows the Navy Department opposes the bill and so does the Bureau of the Budget. Heretofore he has pleaded with the House to pass the legislation he presented because, using his language, "the Navy says it needs it and we should follow the Navy officers who understand our Navy needs." This is the first time he has ever told this House that we should accept his judgment in lieu of the officers of the Navy. His line of argument has always been the other way. He said he would convince me this bill spells economy. His argument strengthens my view that the bill should be defeated. The gentleman has had a strong following here and he should not risk the chance of losing that following by advocating such a measure as this.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to my friend because I have mentioned his name, the man whose opinion, up to this time, I have always respected and who I have followed by supporting his Navy bills in the past.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is mistaken when he says he is following me. He should state that he is following the naval officers.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is just what I was doing. The gentleman was the spokesman for the naval officers on the floor. They could not come here and express themselves. Why does he not keep up his good record and continue to speak their language. The gentleman was leading the fight on our side for legislation, approved by the naval officers, and he cannot deny it. I repeat that is just why I followed him and would do so today if he had the approval of the Navy and the Bureau of the Budget.

Although I live just as far from the ocean as a man possibly can live in this country—I live in the center of the country—still I have supported every proposition the gentleman has brought in here to provide for adequate national defense by having a strong Navy, and I will continue that policy so long as he comes in here with the approval of the Navy Department and the Bureau of the Budget. But when he wants to compare a land base with a tender I am not going to be so foolish as to listen to him. Why, the gentleman admits we have a base 90 miles by air from this very point. What is 90 miles in a sea plane these days? Just about 30 or 40 minutes. The gentleman talks about the mountains. They have a regular line of planes carrying passengers over those mountains every day in the year. No, my friend is out of line today. I do not think he has ever mislead me, but one thing is certain he is not going to mislead me today on this proposition.

A few days ago I insisted that there be order in this House when a point of order was raised in connection with some public work which it was contended was still in progress. I called the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the expenditure of millions of dollars were involved and depended upon the result of the ruling. I insisted upon order so that the Chairman of the Committee could hear the arguments and see if evidence was presented to show that the particular project involved was actually in process of construction. The evidence was not presented and the Chairman of the Committee sustained the point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], Chairman of the Committee at the time, saved the people of this country $80,000,000 by that decision because that would have been the ultimate cost.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] based that decision upon the fact that those supporting the amendment failed to produce documentary evidence that the project was in actual progress. What bearing has that ruling on this bill? It is this. If you start this project by authorizing this money, and the job ever gets under way, then an amendment is always in order to appropriate an additional amount. There is no limit. That is exactly what this rule provides. This is just a starter because once the work is in progress and work is going on, no further authorization is necessary under our rules.

That is the same situation today with many P. W. A. and W. P. A. projects that are now in progress. With very few exceptions, those projects were started from relief appropriations, and there was no authorization from Congress. Most of them were started out of the first relief bill of four and one-half billion dollars. Unfortunately there was no provision in that appropriation that required the full amount to be allocated. In the second relief bill and the one now pending, which will be up in a few days, there is such a provision. No project can be started with money from those appropriations unless a sufficient amount is allocated to complete them. Whenever it is possible to show by documentary evidence that public work is in progress, an amendment is in order. Anyone in the House who knows anything about the rules will confirm that statement. Therefore I say this is a starter. Pass this bill, start the job, and then you will find at a later date a larger appropriation to finish it. This bill should be defeated for several reasons. The most important one is that the Navy does not approve the bill; the second one is that the Bureau of the Budget says there is no money available to finance it; and the third one is that if this is ever started, more money will be required than is provided in this bill to finish the job. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I join with the distinguished gentleman who is the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations having to do with the Naval Establishment in bringing a warning to the House today with respect to this authorization measure. I, too, must express my astonishment and surprise at the attitude of the distinguished gentleman who is chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee when he comes before this Committee and makes the declaration that a recommendation of the Naval Establishment is to be ignored and that we should discard completely the recommendations of the Naval Establishment. It is the first time that I know of in my experience in this House that the distinguished gentleman from Georgia has not "wet-nursed" every program that the Naval Establishment has suggested.

He said at the very beginning of his remarks that he was going to prove mathematically that the authorization for this new base would be in the interest of economy. If I caught his remarks correctly, his proof consisted of a comparison between the cost of a tender and the cost of the establishment of this base; but when he was interrogated as to whether or not he would definitely say that in the future we would not have the additional tender, with that adroitness, with that cunning, and with that care that he can so deftly bring to his command, he evaded the issue.

Mr. Chairman, let us not fool ourselves. The establishment of this base is not going to eliminate a tender. It might be eliminated today. It might be eliminated for a few months, but during the regular course of events that tender is going to be asked for, and the distinguished gentleman from Georgia is going to be here making the request. What is the difference whether it is asked for today or whether we put it into an appropriation bill next year? We are going to pay for it in any event.

The gentleman has submitted absolutely no tangible proof and no probative evidence whatsoever that this is an economy measure. On the contrary, he has definitely said that we need this new base and tries to paint a picture showing that we will excuse a tender for the time being if this new base is established. The gentleman from Georgia would never dare suggest to the Members of this House if we put the base here that it could be floated around on the high seas the way a tender floats around. You will remember how beautifully he spread his arms and said that these tenders would take these amphibian planes unto themselves. He stretched out his arms, but he did not tell you that the tenders could be out on the high seas and that these amphibian planes could come in there. If we establish this base it will be tied down to steel, stone, mortar, and concrete, and in due time when we need a floating tender out on the high seas we will be asked to provide the money for it.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I must yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. The tender may be on the high seas or it may be at the bottom of the sea, but this base will always be there.

Mr. DITTER. The base will be there, provided we have some amphibians to come there. Why does not the gentleman suggest that we enlarge the facilities at the strategic points we presently have?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DITTER. If we have a base at the northern line, if we have a base at San Francisco, and if we have a base at the southern line, why not enlarge the facilities we have instead of inviting the possibility of new maintenance costs year by year and ultimately bringing to this Congress an outcry from the people of the country and a refusal to carry on an expensive, extravagant national-defense program?

In the interest of national defense I ask the Members of the House today to stand by the Navy Department in its recommendation, and in the interest of efficiency and in the interest of fairness and economy let us refuse to vote for this authorization.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Is it not true that the Coast Guard is trying to make their defenses less fixed? That is, they are endeavoring to make them more mobile. Would it not be true of a fixed Navy base that it would be more vulnerable to attack than a movable base?

Mr. DITTER. I think that is true, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Did I understand the gentleman to say in his remarks that he is in favor of the tender as set out in the naval program?

Mr. DITTER. I am in favor of that which I find is necessary in order to carry on a national-defense program and avoid wastefulness.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is as evasive in his answer as he stated I was in mine a moment ago.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. HONEYMAN] such time as she desires.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made here that a great deal of money has been spent in past years for naval-defense purposes on the Pacific coast. A small part of that money has been spent in the State of Oregon or on the Columbia River. I believe $250,000 has been spent in Oregon, in contrast to about $50,000,000 for the rest of the Pacific coast.

However, it is not upon this basis that I wish to urge the establishment of a naval air base at Tongue Point. The Columbia River is the second largest river in North America, and at present is a most vulnerable area in the event of war. In fact, it is quite generally acknowledged that in this event this area would be the first point of attack because of its position in a section of several hundred miles of undefended coast line.

Tongue Point is at the mouth of the Columbia River. There are, as my colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has stated, four major harbors and four major centers of population on the Pacific coast—Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. All are very well provided or planned for in the matter of defense except the Columbia River area. It is on this basis that I wish to offer this plea, because our program of national defense cannot be completed without the defense of as important and strategic a point as the Columbia River. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I come from the Middle West and have no local interest in this matter at all, but we in the Middle West are just as much concerned with the defense of this country as are the people on the coast.

I have made a trip out to the Pacific coast to study this question at my own expense and on my own time. I went from the Canadian to the Mexican border. I wish to say to the Members of the House that the Pacific Northwest section of this country is undefended. I do not mean by this there are no defenses out there, but there are not sufficient defenses to protect us against invasion, if it were made today. The most vulnerable spot in our whole American system of defense is the Columbia River. Do you realize there is not one single combat airplane in the triangle from Detroit to San Francisco and all the way through to Alaska? There is not one single combat airplane there, yet this is the most vulnerable part of our whole defense system.

If we are to be invaded, the invasion will come by air and will be up the Columbia River. San Francisco and Los Angeles can be taken without firing a naval shot, if an invasion is effective by passing the Columbia River Valley and following the mountains down to California. That part of the country can be severed from the rest of the United States with the possibility of not even having a chance to fire a gun in its defense. The one key to the whole situation is at the Columbia River.

The mere fact that you have an air base at Sand Point or at Tacoma does not in any way affect the necessity for having an air defense at the mouth of the Columbia River, because fog conditions very frequently will make it impossible to bring planes from Sand Point or the Army planes from Tacoma across the mountains to protect the Columbia River area. However, there is constantly a tunnel up the Columbia River regardless of fog conditions all around it, which makes an invasion by air up the river perfectly possible at any time.

The point of economy has been raised in reference to this measure. Do you not think the prevention of invasion is infinitely cheaper than the cost of driving out invaders or paying tribute as a conquered people? This is a direct economy. The chairman of the committee was perfectly correct when he stated if you do not build this base for $1,250,000, you will pay probably $15,000,000 for a tender. A tender may be sunk at any time, and that base is gone, while this base would still be there.

I call attention to the fact that Admiral King, in testifying before our committee last year, stated the following:

> I think I am ready to say that once the three primary air bases on the west coast are established that the region in the mouth of the Columbia River or covering the mouth of the Columbia River, has the next call. But I would like to say that that is my personal, also my professional opinion.

The three primary bases at Sand Point, San Francisco, and San Diego, must be served by secondary bases. In time of war we do not keep all of our planes at one main base. We must have outlying operating bases. It is absolutely essential that we have such an operating base at the mouth of the Columbia River. When war comes, it is too late to build a base. You may not then even have the chance, for this area may not be American territory after the war starts. The most effective way of defending the Columbia River, and in all probability the Nation, because the Columbia River Valley is going to be the doorway into this country, is to have airplanes stationed there to prevent an enemy force from ever getting beyond the mouth of the Columbia River.

This committee has given very serious consideration to this matter, and it was not passed upon lightly. Is it not significant that this is, probably, one of the first times the committee has unanimously reported a bill despite an adverse recommendation by the Navy Department? The members of the committee must have been impressed to have reported to the House such a bill.

This base will have to be provided some time in some way. A tender will be less satisfactory and cost 10 times that of a permanent land base. If war comes and we are able to build a base at Tongue Point at all; that is, if it is not captured and occupied by an enemy first, the wartime construction cost will be many, many times that of the construction if undertaken now.

So this is economy.

But its military necessities are of vital concern, outside of the economy question. A naval air base at Tongue Point becomes an essential advance operating base from which to send planes to intercept a possible attack by enemy ships. Such an attack would probably be timed to take advantage of such weather conditions as would prevent planes from Sand Point and Tacoma from leaving their bases. Heavy fog might make flight to sea from Sand Point or any inland station impossible.

Planes from Tongue Point could always get out over the ocean.

It is too late anyway to send for planes hundreds of miles away after an enemy airplane attack has already been launched. The damage is done by then. Air raids are sudden, without warning, and terribly devastating. Do not lock the barn after the horse is gone. Prevent these raids rather than try to fight them. The known presence of a squadron at Tongue Point will probably prevent an enemy from attempting such a raid, which will most surely be made if no defense protection is available.

Such a base at Tongue Point also means a powerful arm that can be swung in either direction if needed, to add to the defense of Puget Sound or San Francisco if either is attacked.

Bonneville and Coulee Dams can easily be reached up the Columbia River Valley. Destruction of these dams by aerial bombs would flood out Portland and the whole valley, making its conquest easy.

As to the question of the relative cost of Tongue Point and Sand Point there is a considerable difference in the size, type, and facilities needed so that there is no great discrepancy in this bill and the cost at Sand Point. That is a primary base and naturally requires a much larger expenditure to establish. Tongue Point would be a secondary base and not require nearly such an extensive plant.

The argument of the cost at Sand Point is ridiculous, immaterial, and shows a woeful lack of understanding in connection with the nature and purpose of aeronautical bases.

If all the defense planes for an area as vast as our Pacific Northwest are based in one place, such as Sand Point, and that base with its planes is destroyed by a surprise attack, or sabotage, the whole defense of the area is gone in one fell stroke. If there are secondary bases, there is still the chance to recover from the attack and drive off an invading force. It is a dangerous military policy to put all your eggs in one basket.

The cost of this base is insignificant in comparison to the cost of an air raid, invasion, or actual conquest which such an air base can prevent. The damage in property alone of a successful raid by enemy planes would be hundreds of millions of dollars. We will pay for this base whether we build it or not, only we will pay many times over in lives and property lost in event of a sudden attack if we do not build it.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal of talk today about the necessity of additional airports and air bases on the Pacific coast. I sensed the fact this argument would be made, and therefore asked the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Department of Commerce to supply me with a list of air fields and air bases on the Pacific coast.

The Navy Department has three main air bases on the Pacific coast, beginning at San Diego, then, coming up the coast, there is one at San Francisco, and, still farther up the coast, one at Seattle.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I am very sorry, but I cannot yield, Mr. Chairman.

In addition to this, they have an air field at San Clemente, another one at Terminal Island, and then air fields are leased in the vicinity of San Diego. The Navy also has Naval Reserve air bases at Long Beach and Oakland.

The Army has air bases at Hamilton Field, Calif., March Field, Calif., Moffet Field, Calif., a northwestern air base near Tacoma, Wash., and an air depot at Sacramento, Calif.

In addition, the Department of Commerce reports that there is a total of 247 listed air fields in the States of California, Oregon, and Washington, and of these, exactly 20 fields, costing more than $22,750,000, are on the coast lines of California, Oregon, and Washington.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOTT. I want to suggest——

Mr. COLLINS. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOTT. Well, the gentleman made a misstatement and I want to correct him.

Mr. COLLINS. If any misstatement has been made, it has been made by the Navy Department, the War Department, or the Commerce Department, and I submit that these Departments are fully acquainted with the subject.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman said there is an air field at——

Mr. COLLINS. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman.

Now, with reference to the base at Tongue Point, the Navy has an air base, according to the hearings on this proposal, 105 miles distant. In addition, the Congress has authorized an Army air base at Tacoma and an appropriation has been made to begin construction, which, according to the map, would look to me like it is from 50 to 100 miles distant by air.

I submit that there is no reason why there should be another air base in this immediate vicinity, unless it is because of the statement that one of the witnesses made that the State of Oregon is the "forgotten" State by the Army and the Navy as to military and naval appropriations.

I went over the hearings to find out who testified for this bill and who against it. Senator McNary testified for it, Congressman Mott testified for it, Governor Martin for it, Congresswoman Honeyman for it, Mr. Hope, the city attorney of Astoria, for it, Senator Steiwer for it, and Mr. James Gordon, the mayor of Portland, testified for it. These are the experts who favored this base according to the hearings, and these are all.

On the other hand, we find the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Swanson, against it, we find Captain Austin, of the office of Chief of Naval Operations, against it. We find Rear Admiral Cook, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy, against it. We find Rear Admiral Rowcliff, the Judge Advocate General, against it. In addition, while the Budget Bureau seems to be in bad favor with some, we find the Bureau of the Budget against it.

Now, I submit that from the standpoint of technical experts the weight of authority is against the bill.

Now as to the necessity of this base, let us turn to page 636 of the hearings and see what Rear Admiral Cook, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department, has to say with reference to the necessity for this base:

> The Navy normally accomplishes its defense of our coast through the interception and destruction of enemy forces as far removed from our coast as practicable. These effective defensive forces of the Navy, both surfaces and air, cannot therefore be immobilized by confinement to any particular base or bases on our coast, but must be permitted to base, as the occasion demands, at points best suited for the detection and interception of hostile forces approaching our coast.

And further—mark these words:

> The naval forces which would render the best protection to the Columbia River area would, therefore, be normally operating from bases far removed from this area.

Mr. Chairman, I have given some considerable study to the subject of military questions, and I submit to you that the cost of this base, if established, will not be $1,250,000, as has been intimated here and as the authorization indicates, but it will be very much more than that. For instance, at San Diego the cost of establishing that station to date has been $18,000,000, and I dare say the cost of this one, if established, will ultimately reach the cost of the base at San Diego.

Furthermore, let me say to you that, from the standpoint of military strategy, whenever war comes we are going to do our utmost to save our planes. We are not going to have them located in fixed airports and air bases. We will hide them so that the enemy will not know the direction from which they will take the air, and when war comes I prophesy that every airport and base will be depleted of airplanes and the planes that take off will take off from old fields and roads and isolated tracts of water, so that they will be able to surprise the enemy.

I appeal to the membership of this House once more, as I have done many times in the past, to give both the Army and the Navy up-to-date and effective equipment. Both services need equipment more than anything else; and if you want to do something worth while for either the Army or the Navy, do not increase the numerical size of these establishments, do not give them any more ground, but give both more equipment. This is what the Army and the Navy need most.

The following are the communications referred to by me from the Navy, War, and Commerce Departments, and give the airfields and bases on the Pacific coast and their location and cost:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1937.

Hon. ROSS A. COLLINS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COLLINS: Complying with your telephone request as to the cost of air bases on the west coast, our records show the following:

Hamilton Field, Calif. ----------		$5,083,880
March Field, Calif ----------		3,822,093
Moffett Field, Calif ----------		4,817,609
Northwestern air base, near Tacoma, Wash.:
Cost of Pierce County airport (to be donated) ----------	$484,023
Ultimate construction cost of facilities ----------	8,479,000
		8,963,023
Included in the present Military Appropriation Act, 1938, as passed by the House is $625,000 to commence construction.
Air depot, Sacramento, Calif ----------		7,000,000
$4,000,000 cash has already been appropriated, and the remaining $3,000,000 is also included in the Military Appropriation Act of 1938 as passed by the House.

It is desired to call your attention to the fact that Moffett Field, Calif., was transferred to the Army from the Navy by order. The figure $4,817,609 as shown expended on Moffett Field was expended by the Navy prior to its transfer to the Army. The ultimate cost of construction of the northwestern air base near Tacoma included acquisition of the strip of land connecting this air base with Fort Lewis.

All of the figures above include the acquisition of land where purchase was necessary. I hope the above gives you the information you desire.

Sincerely yours,

MALIN CRAIG, Chief of Staff.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY].

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Chairman, I heartily endorse the sentiment expressed by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], when he advocates an authorization of $1,250,000 for this Tongue Point airport. Last year the gentleman from Maine, Governor BREWSTER, and myself, made a trip South and West to visit these different airports, from Coco Solo, Panama City, on up to Alameda, and we found that the Panama Canal was poorly defended, and any attack by a foreign foe at that source would be a great loss to this country. Now when you realize the amount asked for in this bill—$1,250,000—as compared to other amounts we are authorizing for other expenditures, I think it is very modest. If a war should come to us, how long would it take to expend $625,000,000 or $650,000,000? We had experience in the World War. We found out that in a few months' time we spent billions of dollars, and we are still paying interest on the expenditures made at that time.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELANEY. Yes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does not the gentleman think that in view of the fact that the station at Alameda has not yet been started and will cost 13½ million dollars at the outset, we should finish that before we start another one in this time of trying in some measure to make our expenditures equal our receipts?

Mr. DELANEY. I realize that that question is a perfectly proper one to ask me, but we have just had a bill in from the other body authorizing $15,000,000 for Alameda, and our committee in the House has reduced that amount by $1,500,000, and that will easily take care of this expenditure at Tongue Point.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman understands, of course, that thirteen and one-half million dollars or $15,000,000 is not the end of the story, but that whatever amount hereafter may be necessary to construct a well-equipped naval base would have to be provided.

Mr. DELANEY. There is no question about that.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Regardless of what is stated in the bill.

Mr. DELANEY. But the shore situation at the present time is this: We are pretty well taken care of in the lower part of California. We will be pretty well fortified in northern California when the Alameda base is completed. We have nothing at Tongue Point. That place, as the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has stated, is undefended, and anything might happen from an enemy attack at Tongue Point. It is wholly undefended up there. In going over this situation with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] we found that this situation in the great Northwest needs our attention. It needs a defensive port up there, and as the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has aptly said, it will take the place at the present time of a tender costing between twelve and one-half million dollars and $13,000,000.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELANEY. Yes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does the gentleman really believe it will take the place of a tender?

Mr. DELANEY. I do not.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I did not think the gentleman did, and I thought he would answer that question frankly, and that is the first time it has been answered on this floor.

Mr. DELANEY. May I say this to the gentleman, that if the bill comes in tomorrow authorizing the expenditure of money for a tender I shall vote for it, because I believe in a very effective and very well-equipped navy, and I think it is the best insurance that this country can have.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield further? The gentleman's frankness is refreshing, and if I understand the gentleman, he is making the point that he will vote for this tender when the bill comes in at some time. He knows that the construction of this naval air base at Tongue Point will in no way affect the number of tenders the Navy Department needs.

Mr. DELANEY. I think the gentleman is correct about that; but at the same time this proposed base at Tongue Point can be developed, and it is a natural base for submarines and large ships, and ideal for an air base, and I do think this matter should be given careful consideration, as we did in the committee, and that it should be passed by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, not posing as a naval expert by any means, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that as a matter of common knowledge the very essence of naval defense and air defense is maneuverability. You cannot have maneuverability if you tie your airplanes down to land stations, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS]. In all probability under actual hostilities a land station will become more of a liability than an asset. We have two lines of defense in the Pacific, one a line running from Alaska to the Philippine Islands, and a second line of defense running from Alaska to the Hawaiian Islands. As long as we maintain those two posts in Alaska and Hawaii, with another one in the Philippines, probably, we do not need to fear any attack on the Pacific coast, because any force coming across the Pacific to attack our coast with a base at Hawaii and a base at Alaska would know that they would be liable to a flank attack from both sides before they could get back. If we maintain those two places, assisted by six or seven aircraft carriers, we can keep our hostilities thousands of miles away from the Pacific coast and provide a far better defense for the Columbia River and the land surrounding it than would any half-baked airport that we might put in there for a million and a quarter dollars.

I have every confidence in the Navy. When they come here with recommendations, they know what they want. They want equipment. They do not want memorial buildings, and they do not want political airports. They want equipment out in the water where they can use it and move it around where they want it for proper defense. If we keep a proper base in Alaska and if we keep another proper base in Hawaii, and keep our aircraft carriers based on these two points, we can defend the Pacific coast. If any hostile force comes far enough to actually attack our Pacific coast and get away with it, our war is about two-thirds over by that time. We will then have lost either Hawaii or Alaska, or both. When we are compelled to fight at the coast line we had better make peace, because the destruction of life and property will then be unthinkable. The place for us to fight this war is in the middle of the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs shows that it takes only 5 hours for a fleet to go from an Alaskan port to Hawaii and meet another fleet there?

Mr. HARLAN. I did not have the exact figures, but that has all been worked out.

Every naval power is increasing its aircraft carriers. Why was it that in a recent naval conference one of the Asiatic powers insisted that we limit ourselves so drastically on aircraft carriers? They are the best defense we have. We can move them around.

I feel somewhat surprised when a Member of this House comes here and says that our Navy Department makes a recommendation, because they like the social activities at some place. I have more confidence in the Navy. If I did not have more confidence than that in the Navy, I would not turn over a dime to them to take care of our national defense. They are in it because their own lives are at stake. They are not going to recommend something to this House just because they like the social activities at one of the posts. If my counsel is worth consideration, I say give them the equipment they ask for and forget local interests. This is too serious to play with.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the discussion on this bill has been most enlightening. I have been thinking in the past that the Naval Affairs Committee was willing to give the Navy Department everything they asked for, and because of that fact I have, on several occasions, criticized the Committee on Naval Affairs for their overgenerous attitude. I have felt that the Navy has gone wild on this idea of having a bigger Navy and spending more money year after year for naval operations, but in this case the Committee on Naval Affairs has gotten even wilder than the Navy Department. In this instance they have gone wilder than the Navy Department. I am glad to see at least the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations is exerting his efforts to hold down the authorization within the requests of the Navy Department. I hope this is an indication that next year when the naval appropriation bill is under consideration we may hope for some cooperation on the part of the Subcommittee on Navy Appropriations to cut down the appropriations for battleships, and so forth.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield briefly.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I take it that the gentleman is familiar with the fact that weeks before the President's economy message was sent to Congress the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Navy Department reduced the naval appropriation bill more, both in amount and percentage, than any other regular annual appropriation bill which has passed the House at this session?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is very commendable.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I am sure the gentleman did not mean to leave the impression that the Committee on Appropriations is solely responsible for the appropriations voted by the Congress.

Mr. BOILEAU. No, no; but I want to leave the impression that I think the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Navy Department is spending more money than they should. I am simply making my observation, that I hope the gentleman's committee will cut down the appropriations next year.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute, and I ask him to yield to me.

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Does the gentleman think that the Committee on Appropriations, when the Congress of the United States passes authorizing acts, can thwart the will of the Congress with reference to providing for national defense?

Mr. BOILEAU. In that respect I will say that year after year Members of the House say, when we are asking for an authorization, "This does not mean we are going to appropriate the money." I say to the gentleman, take them at their word next time and use your own judgment and bring down the appropriations for the Navy to where they should be, even though the Congress has made an unreasonable authorization.

Mr. UMSTEAD. On bills of this kind is the place to do that.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the gentleman and I shall cooperate with the gentleman and cast my vote with him. I am glad he is leading this fight. It is gratifying to have gentlemen of such high standing here making this fight.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I have another observation which I want to make, and after that I will be glad to yield.

I want to refer to the statement made a little while ago by the gentleman from North Carolina, in which he commended the reading by the Members of the House of the report of this committee. I suggest to all the Members that, in addition to reading it, they save it, because, to my mind, it proves to be very enlightening. We have heard in recent years a good deal of criticism of the Navy during the World War. I have heard it said without contradiction on the floor of the House that during the World War many of the battleships, when the war was over in the Atlantic, were up the James River, away from where they might be blown up. I want to call the attention of the Members to the statement in the report about the availability of this fine harbor out there in the Columbia River estuary to the effect that it is the only harbor between Puget Sound and San Francisco, a distance of approximately 750 miles, capable of accommodating a large concentration of the vessels of the Navy; that the entire Pacific Fleet could be anchored in this harbor. Why in the name of common sense, or any other consideration, do we want to anchor the entire Navy in a harbor? I thought that the Navy we are building was to be out on the high seas to protect us; but it appears that one of the reasons why we ought to vote for this bill, according to the Committee on Naval Affairs, is that we are protecting a fine harbor capable of housing the entire fleet. During the World War we did not put all of the battleships up in the James River—only part of them—but apparently the Naval Affairs Committee contemplates that in the next war we are going to put all our fleet up there.

I recognize, Mr. Chairman, that the argument I am making now is not going to influence the many Members in voting for or against this bill.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset of the debate the gentleman from Georgia said, if I understood him correctly, that unless he could convince the Committee that this was an economical measure, you ought to vote against it. Now, I do not expect him to do that because I do not expect him to admit that he has failed to show you that it is an economy measure, but I wish to call your attention to the answer given by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY] to my question. The chairman of the committee presenting this bill, in his economy argument, attempts to create the impression that without this base there would be need to proceed with the construction of a tender. He would not answer my question directly as to whether the base would take the place of a tender, but the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY], who has served on the Naval Affairs Committee for years and years and years, stated in your presence in answer to my question that it would not take the place of a tender and that, in his opinion, it would not reduce the number of tenders necessary for the Navy Department.

I dislike to call upon you to do it, but I am thoroughly justified in asking you to give just as much credence and belief to the statement of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY] as you give to the statement of the gentleman from Georgia. Both gentlemen serve on the same committee, both have heard the same testimony, and examined the same witnesses, and certainly you ought to give to one as much credence and belief as you give to the other. If you do, then if you follow the advice of the proponent of this bill, there would be nothing left for you to do, in good conscience, except to take him at his word and vote against the passage of this measure. Now, if the gentleman from Georgia has any answer to make to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY], if this be a squabble within a committee, which, we were told, reported out this bill unanimously, then all of the information has not been presented to the House. On the other hand, I dislike to stir up a conflict between my two good friends. I am not suggesting that the gentleman from Georgia get irritated or angry with the gentleman from New York for contradicting his testimony; nevertheless, the contradiction has taken place. If in the remainder of his time, and he has a good deal, he can explain how a member of his committee, with such long service as the gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY] has had thereon, can come to an exactly opposite conclusion than he, on the same set of facts, I should like to hear him.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. MAY. Sometime ago I visited a couple of airplane carriers at Norfolk and was advised that they could release 90 bombing planes in 6 minutes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Yes; we have six of them.

Mr. MAY. Could we not send one of them around to the mouth of the Columbia River in case of need?

Mr. UMSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say to the Members of the Committee that every subcommittee on appropriations, particularly this Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations, has its hands full with the authorizations that you have already given to us. We are doing the best we can with what we have, but do not pile any more on us now when the President of the United States and the Congress are endeavoring to reduce expenditures in this country, when the President has even gone far enough to veto a bill providing funds for a project in his own State, and when the measure before us does not have the approval of any agency of the United States Government.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks in presenting this bill I measured carefully what I said and meant exactly what I uttered, that if I could not demonstrate to a mathematical certainty that this bill was in the interest of economy, then it should be voted down. I pointed out to this House that you had to have one of two things: That you had either to build a tender costing something over $12,000,000, or you had the alternative of building a land base. This is the issue, clear cut. If the House rejects today the building of a land base, then it is assurance to the committee that it is in favor of a tender to house the fliers, to man and repair the machines.

To build the land base will cost merely $1,250,000. When the Committee on Naval Affairs developed these facts it occurred to me that it certainly was in the interests of economy to try to save this $11,000,000 when the military usefulness of a land base or a floating base is identically the same.

That is the clean-cut issue.

Let us look at the personnel. It will require 500 men to maintain this tender. It will require some 214 men to man the land base. It will cost some $700,000 annually to man the tender and it will cost $250,000 to man the land base.

The military mission and the military performance are absolutely the same.

If this House wants to practice economy instead of merely talking about economy, here is an opportunity to start. I join with the gentleman from North Carolina in holding down the Budget as much as humanly possible so far as these enlarged naval expenditures are concerned and that is the very reason that I have refused to follow the dictates of the Navy Department in this instance. I can see where economy could be brought about by authorizing a land base in lieu of a tender.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500,000, to be used for the development of a naval air base at Tongue Point, Columbia River, State of Oregon; for constructing hangars, ramps, barracks, shops, storehouses, and any other facilities required for the use and maintenance of naval aviation squadrons and their personnel; for dredging; for maintaining existing piers and shore facilities heretofore constructed; for enlarging existing piers and shore facilities heretofore constructed, if found necessary and desirable by the Secretary of the Navy.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,250,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOEHNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 198) authorizing an appropriation for the development of a naval air station base at Tongue Point, Oreg., had directed him to report the same to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOTT) there were—yeas 68, noes 101.

So the bill was rejected.

AUTHORIZATION OF FUNDS FOR WORK AT GOVERNMENT-OWNED ESTABLISHMENTS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 6866) authorizing the obligation of funds for work at Government-owned establishments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as, follows::

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing contained in title VI, part II, of the Legislative Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1933 (47 Stat. 417), as amended by section 8 of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (49 Stat. 1648), shall be construed as modifying or amending the provision in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1923 (42 Stat. 812), which reads as follows: "That all orders or contracts for work or material, under authorization of law heretofore or hereafter placed with Government-owned establishments, shall be considered as obligations in the same manner as provided for similar orders or contracts placed with private contractors, and appropriations for such work or material shall remain available for payment therefor as in the case of orders or contracts placed with private contractors."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Naval Affairs has no other bills to call up at this time.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6958, the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways: For continuing the construction and maintenance, under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat., pp. 1519–1522), of the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $3,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $40,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That not exceeding $500,000 of this appropriation shall be available for construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 111, beginning in line 9, strike out all of the paragraph ending in line 18.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment to strike $3,000,000 from the bill. The President of the United States has indicated this morning that he believes in economizing. It is up to the House of Representatives now to indicate that it believes in economizing and that it is ready to go ahead and reduce the expenditures of the Government down to where the Budget of this country may be in balance so that we can go back home and look the taxpayers of America in the face.

Unquestionably this highway is a fine thing. All highways which lead through a scenic country are fine things; but we cannot go on adding more and more to the ultimate cost of everything and have a balanced Budget or ever approach a balanced Budget. It is true that these things were authorized by a vote of the House a year ago. It is true also at that time there was not such a spirit of economy abroad in the land as the President has submitted here today.

The appropriation directly out of the Federal Treasury for this highway proposition involves embarking upon a new kind of procedure where the Government pays 100 percent of the cost of construction. We have had Federal-aid highways before where the Federal Government gave a part and the State a part, but this embarks upon a new line and a new program in which the Federal Government pays the whole thing.

I think this Congress ought to take advantage of an opportunity to establish a policy of economy and should refuse to appropriate money to go along with this proposition and build this highway totally at Federal expense.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. I should like to know the gentleman's response to this situation: The gentleman knows, of course, that the establishment of the park and the highway on this basis was definitely authorized by an act of Congress, which was fundamental legislation, and upon this basis the States of Virginia and North Carolina have acted in good faith.

They have furnished the right-of-way, and the project has gone ahead. How can the gentleman now state that the Federal Government should repudiate not only a moral obligation but a legal, contractual obligation which it has with these communities and with the citizens who have acted on the theory the Government would live up to its obligations?

Mr. TABER. I do not believe any such moral obligation or contractual obligation exists until the Congress of the United States appropriates money. I do not believe we should establish the principle of going down the line and building a highway totally at Government expense anywhere in this country.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this item has been fully considered and is fully authorized. It is a matter of policy which was definitely established under the terms of the act passed last year, which was the so-called Federal Aid Roads Act. As a matter of policy which has been fully endorsed by the Congress, this road should be built. I therefore ask that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto end in 25 minutes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are several amendments to this paragraph. I hardly think 25 minutes will give us an opportunity to discuss the amendments. I ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he will not extend this time somewhat.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Will 30 minutes be sufficient?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I think 40 minutes would be better.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The only reason I am asking to expedite this matter is that we are practically duty bound to complete the bill this afternoon. It is now quite late and we have only a short time, and we have gone through only 111 pages.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Will not the gentleman ask to make it 30 minutes?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Chairman how much time we on this side of the aisle will be able to get out of this 30 minutes?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. How much does the gentleman want? We are perfectly willing to be reasonable.

Mr. WOODRUM. It is up to the Chairman to determine that; it is not for the gentleman to yield time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will we be recognized for at least 15 or 20 minutes out of that time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to be as fair as possible in according recognition, which is as much as the Chair can promise.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I question if this is time enough.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. How much time does the gentleman want? Our sole object in limiting debate is to complete consideration of the bill today.

Mr. RICH. Forty minutes. I may say to the gentleman there are so many controversial things in this bill that unless the gentleman wants to go on 3 or 4 hours longer, I question whether we will get through this afternoon.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Will 40 minutes be agreeable?

Mr. RICH. I think so.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I again modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 21, noes 123.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOUGHTON: Page 111, line 14, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. This is a perfecting amendment, and the committee having voted on a motion to strike out the paragraph, a perfecting amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair invites attention to clause 7 of rule 16, which provides as follows:

A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert.

On the basis of the rule just quoted, the point of order is overruled.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered to the pending bill proposed to increase the amount provided in the bill for the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000, which was the amount carried in the Budget for the Blue Ridge Parkway. The fact has perhaps been overlooked by many that the present law was amended on June 16, 1936, authorizing the expenditure of $10,000,000 per year for the fiscal years 1938–39 for highways to connect the parks. This amount the Director of the Budget cut in half but specified that $5,000,000 be used for the Blue Ridge Parkway. The committee has again cut this amount in half, leaving only $2,500,000 to carry on the work of the Blue Ridge Parkway for 1938, just one-fourth the amount originally authorized by Congress. Therefore, it is clearly seen that the amount I am asking for in my amendment is not something new but an appropriation already authorized in more than double the amount. If the amendment is adopted, we will then be $500,000 below the Budget estimate.

Moreover, I have discovered by examining the report on the pending bill, which I have before me, that the total cut in the bill from the Budget estimate was $4,741,340, the bill carrying $115,871,264.85. The amount of the cut is $4,741,340, and of this $2,500,000, or more than one-half, comes from the appropriation on the Blue Ridge Parkway project.

I submit, in all fairness, that there can be no defense or justification of this huge cut of 50 percent, and I am sure it was made due to a misunderstanding or misapprehension of all the facts concerning the matter, as much as I have endeavored to get the facts before the committee and Congress, but I do feel that if this House understands the situation that it will gladly and willingly correct what I conceive to be a great injustice.

The Blue Ridge National Parkway was originally conceived by President Roosevelt. It originated as a public-works project under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1933. To date total allotments of $6,816,000 of Public Works funds have been made under the authorization of the above-mentioned act. All of these funds are obligated at the present time, and no further funds are available under the act, which terminates on June 30, 1937.

At the present time 133 miles are actually under construction. The 1937–38 program, as presented to the Bureau of the Budget, included $1,500,000 for completing sections now under construction as to surfacing, bridges, and roadside improvements.

A total of $3,802,000 was estimated to provide for additional construction, amounting to 86 miles and includes drainage and bridges but does not include surfacing.

The road construction is actually 30 feet, instead of 800 feet as has been stated, and includes 20 feet of pavement with 5-foot shoulders on each edge. The right-of-way is approximately 800 feet wide, which gives the necessary protection from roadside desecration by preventing the construction of hot-dog stands, calico horses, and other disfigurements which spring up along the sides of ordinary roads. The 800-foot right-of-way is being purchased by the States of Virginia and North Carolina and is being donated to the United States. There will be no expense in maintaining these rights-of-way, because it is the purpose to keep these lands in their natural condition except for the occasional campgrounds where the parkway visitors may camp out to escape the humid heat of the low line of valleys on each side.

The general elevation of the parkway averages about 2,500 feet, rising in some points to over a mile in elevation. The mountains in this section are considered the most beautiful mountain scenery in eastern United States, and the parkway takes full advantage of the scenic areas.

Since 1934 the National Park Service has been constructing roads in the national parks of the West, and Congress has also authorized the construction of park approach roads where they cross Government-owned lands to the extent of 90 percent. While these approach roads have been limited to the extent of 60 miles in length, the aggregate would probably equal the Blue Ridge Parkway.

The States of the West have not contributed to the cost of the acquisition of the necessary rights-of-way.

This parkway, when completed, will connect the Great Smoky Mountains and the Shenandoah National Parks, and in reality the parkway will be a part of the parks and will be the property of the United States.

The States of Virginia and North Carolina have donated to the United States Government the two great parks, and to fail to complete this project now would be a mistake, almost equal to a tragedy. The State of North Carolina has already expended $6,000,000 for the purchase of the rights-of-way and the survey of the road; this not costing the Federal Government one penny, and to fail to complete this parkway would not only be a waste of the money thus far expended but a failure to keep faith with the States of Virginia and North Carolina, which have gone to the enormous expense that I have indicated.

This parkway, when completed, will be one of the most beautiful drives in the world, and is unexcelled in scenic beauty and grandeur; also in its exhilarating climatic advantages it is unequaled. This road also opens up and brings to the underprivileged and long-neglected people of Virginia and North Carolina, who live along this mountain range, opportunities which they have been denied since the country was first settled. It will give relief and employment to people who need it most, and will conform and comport in perfect manner with the relief policy of the President of the United States. It will take and keep thousands off the relief rolls and will be in perfect accord with a sound relief policy. It will also afford to the people residing in the congested cities and centers of population an opportunity for travel and recreation which they have been denied far too long, and will, in reality, be a great national asset.

If this amendment is not adopted, and no more than two and one-half million dollars is made available for the next fiscal year, most of this will be used for bridging and surfacing the sections of the road already graded and little or no construction work can be done.

So come on, friends, and help adopt this amendment. It is only in harmony with every policy and principle of a square deal. When this road is finally constructed, if you will all take a drive over it and by experience realize its real worth and what a great asset it is, not only to the people who live along the parkway but the entire country, I am sure you will appreciate the fact that you had a part in this great enterprise.

Ponce de Leon spent much time in a vain effort to find the Fountain of Youth, of which he had been told, but, of course, he died a disappointed man. If he had, however, been told of the mountain of youth, such as to be found in western North Carolina, and along which this parkway traverses, and had visited that section of our State, he would not have been disappointed and would have doubtless lived to have been a centenarian. So come on and help us, and when the road is completed come down through Dixie over this beautiful mountain drive down through the States of North Carolina and Virginia, where the old grow young and the young grow great—down in Virginia and our old North State. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, there is no one that I would rather accommodate in this House than my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], but I cannot treat my friends to the money they want from the Government. I must be fair to all people. I want all to be my friends, so I have to turn in today and oppose this proposal. When you talk about this highway between the Smoky Mountain Park in North Carolina and the Shenandoah National Park in Virginia, 470 miles long and 800 feet wide as a highway, you all know that it is a parkway.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is not that. The right-of-way is 800 feet wide, every bit of which was donated by the State. It did not cost the Government one cent. And it is supposed to be kept by the State. It will not cost the Government one cent by purchase or to maintain. The parkway proper is only 30 feet wide, and out of that there will be the roadway 20 feet wide.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I just ask the Members of the House to remember those words, that it will not cost anything to maintain, because I will only have to call your attention within a year to the fact that the Government is maintaining this highway the total length; because, as I understand it, it was intended and it was the purpose of the law when it was passed that this was to be a toll road, but Senator BYRD and Senator GLASS are already trying to get opposition to its being a toll road, and they want it a free highway.

When Congress put this bill through last year, it was on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent and we objected to it, and in the last days under a suspension, in 40 minutes, they came in here and put the bill through, but very few knew what they were doing when they voted for the proposition. It is 800 feet wide, the parkway. We have highways down this valley that now go in between these two parks, and this is establishing a precedent for the National Park Service. Last year you passed the Natchez Trace, and we will not any more than get through with this amendment to increase Government spending until the gentlemen from Mississippi will be here and ready to get up and ask for an additional $5,000,000 for the Natchez Trace, and I am surprised that the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who is responsible for telling the people where they are going to get the money, and has been unable to do so, would come in here now with this proposition and ask you to increase this amount to $5,000,000. Here is the Treasury Department report for May 14 showing that we have gone in the red $8,777,000, and that every day we are going in the red, yet we are appropriating money and every day by seven or eight or nine or ten million dollars we are spending more than we are taking in. Members of Congress, remember that within a few minutes after this goes through, the boys from Mississippi are going to ask you for $5,000,000 for the Natchez highway. All we do is spend, spend, spend.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. No; unless the gentleman will get me more time.

Mr. COLMER. I should be very glad to give the gentleman more time, but of course the gentleman must understand that I do not promise to get it.

Mr. RICH. I hope the gentleman is going to do that. Anyway, let the gentleman ask his question.

Mr. COLMER. Does not the gentleman consider both projects are on a parity? They are both in the same category.

Mr. RICH. That is just what I told you. They are starting right now. He is going to ask for that money for the Natchez Trace Highway. The projects are probably in the same category.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman has 20 minutes by mutual consent. If he wants to use all of his time, very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Oklahoma that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in control of the time in opposition to the amendment. The Chair will endeavor to be fair and to recognize all those seeking recognition. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the establishment of this parkway between national parks is going to be one of the greatest disappointments which the Congress has enacted into law, because people from all sections of the country will be asking for these 800-foot highways between the various parks over the country. It will cost a fabulous sum of money. We have a highway system under the Department of Agriculture. Now you are asking to establish a highway system from park to park all over this Nation, and it will be under the park system of the country instead of the highway system—duplication of highways and duplication of expense and duplication of departments. If you do not rue that, I will certainly be disappointed, because the amount of money involved will be tremendous. There are Members of Congress just waiting to have passed into law authority to go from one park to another.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It is a fact, is it not, that the total ultimate cost of this proposed highway amounts to something like twenty-seven and one-half million dollars?

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is just speaking of the Doughton highway between these two parks? [Laughter.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. RICH. It ought to be named after Mr. DOUGHTON. [Applause.] You could not do a finer thing. It will require over twenty-seven million to finish just the parkway from Virginia to North Carolina.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield. We are going to name this one from Mississippi the Rankin Highway or the Ford Highway. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for all concerned to spend this money in this way than to spend it through the W. P. A.?

Mr. RICH. I agree with the gentleman; yes; if you have the right project, but the trouble is this is not the right project.

Mr. RANKIN. Now, of course, the gentleman might select a project himself, but I submit this is a useful project for the benefit of all the American people. Would it not be better to spend this money for something useful for the American people than to spend it raking leaves or chasing mosquitoes?

Mr. RICH. I agree with the gentleman, but I can see no use building a highway 800 feet wide when there are two highways down the valleys now, almost paralleling each other.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield further. You now have highways that are parallel to this. It is not a fact that we need the highway so much as we are trying to establish a system of parkways which will ultimately run into hundreds of millions of dollars. I believe Members of Congress should be very careful in allocating funds now for this particular purpose. Eventually, possibly, these two highways will be built, but why try to spend money so fast on a project that is not necessary?

I submit to you that you ought to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], because I do not know and I do not believe the gentleman knows where you are going to get the money. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am glad to support the amendment of our friend and distinguished colleague from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] to increase the item for the Blue Ridge Parkway to $5,000,000, which was the amount recommended in the President's Budget. As a matter of fact, by an overwhelming vote in the House and by a unanimous vote, I believe, in the Senate, authorization was given last year for an appropriation of $10,000,000 per year for 2 years for this important project.

In the general debate on this bill my good friend from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] discussed this project on the assumption that it involved the construction of free arterial highways for the States of Virginia and North Carolina. Evidently my friend has never driven over the Skyline Drive, of which the Blue Ridge Parkway will be an extension, or over the several highways of the Shenandoah Valley which parallel it. Virginia now has a splendid highway system and does not ask and does not need for the Federal Government to give her any new commercial highways. The Blue Ridge Parkway is 100 percent a scenic highway and will never be used as a commercial highway, or even as an arterial highway for tourists moving north and south between Virginia and North Carolina.

It should be a source of commendable pride to every American citizen that our country was the first country in the world to establish a national park, namely, the Yellowstone National Park, which was established over 50 years ago. Since then, we have established 25 additional national parks, and if our great maple sirup State of Vermont will agree to donate to the Government the 130,000 acres reported by the Park Service to have genuine park value, I will be among the first in this House to support a bill to establish it as a national park. Following the lead of the United States, every major nation of the world has established national parks, and singular to say one of the smallest, Belgium, has established in Africa one of the largest and one of the most interesting of all national parks. When the great Teddy Roosevelt visited Africa he brought to the attention of the world the very real threat of the extermination of big game animals in Africa, and it was largely on account of his representations to the Belgian King that the action was taken in Belgium to establish a perpetual refuge for the protection of many species of the best game animals of Africa.

It should likewise be a source of pride to us that we are the first and only nation in the world to construct along the top of a great mountain range a tourist drive that combines safety with great scenic value. An American engineer laid out for the Philippine government a beautiful mountain highway to Baguio which offers to the tourists some wonderful scenery, but is a relatively short drive which merely goes to the top of the mountain and comes down again. Switzerland has built across the Alps a beautiful scenic drive, but it is very narrow and very crooked, and its primary purpose is to cross the Alps. There are many other scenic highways built primarily for commercial purposes that cross high mountains, but, as I have stated, I know of no highway in the world comparable to what the Skyline Drive and the Blue Ridge Parkway will be when completed. That is confirmed by the statement made last Sunday by the great Japanese photographer,

Natori, editor of one of the largest publications in Japan, and here to make pictures for the new magazine called Life. After traveling from one end of the Skyline Drive to the other, Mr. Natori said that he had traveled all over the world and that the Skyline Drive was the most remarkable mountain drive he had ever seen, far superior, in his opinion, to the road over the Alps, because of its superior engineering qualities. Incidentally, Mr. Natori took over 100 pictures of striking scenes on the Skyline Drive which will eventually find their way into the principal tourist magazines of the world and thus present to many in foreign lands a new picture of our Uncle Sam. Many foreigners think of Uncle Sam as a shrewd Yankee trader interested only in his money bags, but foreigners who have visited the United States know that many factors have contributed to the fact that our peculiar form of government is older, as pointed out 2 years ago by the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. WADSWORTH, in an address at the University of Virginia, than any other present government of the world. And one of the fundamental undertakings of our democracy has been the efforts of our Government to make available to the masses of the people beauty spots and outdoor recreational opportunities which are unsurpassed. In addition to our great system of national parks, comprising some 15,000,000 acres, and many national monuments and battlefields, we have set aside for public use a great public domain comprising some 175,000,000 acres and have established as national forests an area almost as large.

Sitting at luncheon several years ago with the English scientist, Julian Huxley, grandson of the more famous scientist of that name, he commented to me upon the remarkable natural resources of the United States and of the opportunities of our people for outdoor recreation, and in that connection mentioned his efforts to secure the passage by the British Parliament of a bill known as The Right of Mountain View. In explanation of that bill Professor Huxley told me that it had been the practice of a hiking club in Manchester to visit a nearby mountain for the purpose of securing an exhilarating view, but was stopped from doing so by British trespass laws. And so a bill was introduced in Parliament to permit a British subject to merely walk to the top of a mountain to get a view, not to camp on it as American citizens can do in our national parks and national forests, not to fish, as they can do in national parks, not to hunt and fish, as they can in national forests, but merely to hike and to look and to get the inspiration referred to by King David when he said, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my strength." An American poet has embodied the same thought in these lines:

> I think God made high hills so burdened men
> Might lift their eyes and find new strength again.
> Hills breathe sweet peace, in winter-whitened dress;
> They sing of faith, in summer's loveliness.
> Brave hills the majesty of God proclaim;
> In autumn glory they can set aflame
> Unkindled dreams; and from their spring-clad sod
> New dreams drift down to lift the heart to God.

In any period and in any land it promotes good citizenship for the rank and file of the people to have opportunities to find peace and contentment. But especially is that true in a period of economic stress and storm and mental unrest. We have felt the strain here in Washington during the past 4 years. Business leaders have felt the strain. In all walks of life nerve tension has been high. This tension is reflected, I find, in the number of mental cases now occupying the hospital beds of the country. The Surgeon General advises me that we have 1,096,721 beds, of which 548,952 are occupied by nervous and mental patients. And I have recently seen the statement that during the past 50 years the percentage of mental disorder cases has increased 10 times as fast as the percentage of increase of the population. There are, therefore, sound biological reasons for the establishment of recreational areas for the people.

And there are also sound economic reasons for such a program. The cherry trees of the Tidal Basin in Washington annually attract at least 100,000 visitors to our Capital, who put in circulation here not less than a half million dollars each year. In 1936, 10,000,000 people visited our national parks, the largest in the history of the Nation. Those visitors, at a conservative estimate, put in circulation at least a hundred million dollars. Fifteen years ago less than a million people visited the national parks of the country. In 1936 approximately 700,000 visited the Shenandoah National Park alone, and it is estimated that more people will visit that park in 1937 than visited all of the parks of the Nation 15 years ago. It is indeed difficult to estimate, since it will be accessible to over 20,000,000 people, how many tourists will annually travel over the Blue Ridge Parkway, putting money into circulation.

We have more currency in circulation now than we had in the boom year of 1929 but the principal reason that we do not now have the prosperity of 1929 is that our money does not now have the velocity of circulation it had then. Of course, it may be difficult to ascertain with precision the number of times a dollar turns over in a given period, but some economists have estimated that the present turnover of dollars is 5 times against 15 times in 1929. Proponents of the Townsend plan claim that the Townsend pension dollar will turn over 34 times. I know of no facts on which to base such a claim but it should be apparent to all that if the present velocity of circulation could be increased 300 percent or up to that of 1929 it would greatly stimulate prosperity, and I know of no better means of stimulating velocity of circulation than through the expenditure of tourists. Roger Babson, after analyzing statistics on the subject of the tourist business of America, reported last fall that it is 11 percent greater than the clothing business, 45 percent greater than the printing and publishing business, 60 percent greater than the lumber industry, 185 percent greater than the baking industry, 222 percent greater than the shoe industry, 418 percent greater than the value of the entire cotton crop of 1933, and equal to the great steel and iron industry of America.

And he would be indeed a short-sighted man who would claim that increased prosperity in a given section of the Nation is confined to that immediate section. Representative ANDERSON of Missouri recently pointed out to the House that on any given W. P. A. project the value of indirect relief labor could be fairly estimated at 20 percent of the cost of the project. On January 22, 1927, Roger Babson stated:

> Over 50 cents from almost every dollar spent in a city is at once sent away to buy new goods, to replace those goods which the dollar has bought. The remaining 50 cents goes to local labor, to the landlord, and to the family of the merchant, all of whom in turn spend it; then 25 cents of this remainder is sent away. This means that 75 cents of every dollar soon leaves the city.
> The remaining 25 cents again goes to local labor, landlords, etc., to be respent, thus raising the 75 cents which is sent out of the city to 87½ cents. This process continues until practically the entire dollar is sent away.

I therefore respectfully submit that in the development of a project like the Blue Ridge Parkway we are making a sound financial investment and likewise an investment in better citizenship which justifies the support of the pending amendment by every Member of the House.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the time has been fixed for debate on these two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to state that the debate on this paragraph has been limited to 40 minutes. The Chair understood that equal allowance was to be made for two amendments that were to be offered. Already 25 of the 40 minutes have been used on the pending amendment. If any time is to be devoted to the second amendment, either the time will have to be extended or a vote will now have to be taken on the pending amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make any agreement that will preclude me from closing this debate. How much time has been consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five of the 40 minutes have already been consumed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that 25 of the 40 minutes have been used in discussion of the pending amendment, and in fairness to the gentlemen from Mississippi who are later to offer an amendment, I move that all debate on the pending amendment do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. We had an agreement that I was to close the debate. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion. I am handling this bill, and I am entitled to some consideration.

Mr. WARREN. I withdraw the motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Could not the time be increased by 10 minutes so that an equal amount of time could be devoted to the second amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Answering the gentleman's inquiry, the Chair will state that the time certainly can be increased if the committee wants to increase it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that time for debate on this paragraph be extended 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma and Mr. WEAVER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma now desire recognition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield preference to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WEAVER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How, Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from North Carolina? If they are going to yield time on that side of the House, certainly we on this side of the House are entitled to yield time in opposition to the amendment or the debate will be out of balance.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no yielding of time. In the division of time the Chair is endeavoring to be as fair as possible.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I understand that the gentleman from Oklahoma has the floor now but has yielded time to the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman from Oklahoma could not yield him time, he simply deferred to the gentleman from North Carolina.

The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the situation in regard to time, I shall take only a couple of minutes.

I want to say to my friends that I do feel very deeply that we should be allowed on the Blue Ridge Parkway the amount of money that was set aside by the Budget and which conforms to the President's program of economy. I would be glad today, if I could, to discuss the genesis of these parks with some of my western friends and to show that this roadway and these two great parks are not in any sense local, that these parks are not the ambitious projects of myself and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], but have been conceived for the American people and are just as much national assets, just as much national parks as are the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, the Yosemite National Park, and two dozen others I could name to my western friends, parks which we have always supported.

This parkway will contribute to the health of the whole of eastern America. It is now a going concern. One hundred and thirty-three miles is under construction. The big shovels are now at work on these great hills of ours, and we ask you men from the West, the North, the East, and the South not to stop this project which will soon be completed. The policy has been established by this Congress and by the President. [Applause.]

The Blue Ridge Parkway is intended to be a great national highway, or parkway, connecting the Shenandoah National Park, in the State of Virginia, with the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, in North Carolina and Tennessee. It is a link in the great system, conceived by President Roosevelt, following from the northern limits of the Appalachian Range to their culmination in Alabama. I believe that I can state with authority that this great parkway has the loyal support of the President.

It is not a local enterprise, nor conceived for local purposes. It is for the use of untold generations of all of the people of America, and will contribute to the health, recreation, and happiness of all of eastern America. Founded upon this idea alone it has presidential support, and I hope will have the support of the membership of this House, without sectional feeling.

The background of this great highway grows out of the following facts. Some years ago a great Secretary of the Interior under Mr. Coolidge approved the idea of creating one or more great National Parks in the eastern Appalachian mountains. The West already had many of these parks, set aside or created from public lands. They have been administered for the wholesome benefit of the whole American people. I will not undertake to enumerate them now, but they include such great parks as the Yellowstone National Park, Glacier National Park, Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and many other outstanding parks of the West. It was the purpose in establishing these parks in the East to preserve for future generations, as far as possible, in their primitive condition, certain areas in the eastern Appalachian Range, to become great laboratories of nature, to afford an opportunity for the people, from the highest to the lowest, to have these areas set aside for their observation, their recreation, and their health.

These two great parks, the Shenandoah National Park and the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and this proposed connecting link between them, as I have said, are no more local and no more conceived as local enterprises than are the Grand Canyon of the Colorado or the magnificent Yellowstone Park, and other great parks of the West. They are national assets. And, it is with this view that I hope the membership of this House will hear us today in regard to the necessary appropriations for constructing this great connecting link, or parkway, between them.

Both the Shenandoah National Park and the Great Smoky Mountains National Park are donations from the States of Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee to the United States Government. The lands necessary to constitute these parks were purchased by these three States and conveyed in fee simple to the United States Government. The State of Virginia contributed the necessary acreage to constitute the Shenandoah National Park. I am more familiar with the actual acquisition of lands constituting the Smoky Mountains National Park, because of its location. The State of North Carolina, and the State of Tennessee, through their legislatures contributed $2,000,000 each for the purchase of these lands.

In addition to this, private citizens subscribed approximately $1,000,000 to the fund necessary for their purchase. To supplement these funds, the Laura Spellman Rockefeller Foundation offered to contribute, and has contributed, $5,000,000 for the purchase of these necessary lands. They include an area of approximately 428,000 acres, lying about one-half in the State of North Carolina and one-half in the State of Tennessee. This area constitutes the roof of eastern America. It is the last stand of primitive forests in the East. It is a botanist's paradise. Within its boundaries it has been ascertained to have 134 different species of trees, and 176 species of flowering shrubs and plants. In it will be preserved the bird life and the animal life of eastern America. It has more than 600 miles of trout streams. It will be open to every class of American life—not only the rich but to the poorest. It will be available for the health and recreation of them and of their families.

It is to unite these two great parks by a highway leading directly from one to the other that this appropriation is asked.

As I have said, the project was conceived by the President, and we have already had $6,816,000 allocated from E. R. A. funds to begin this work. All of this has been expended, or has been alloted for contracts already let. At the present time, at various places along this route, construction is under way and the Park Service has well-defined plans for carrying this work forward speedily. At the present time 133 miles are actually under construction; and the Park Service presented to the Bureau of the Budget an estimate of $5,000,000 as necessary for continuing this work during the next fiscal year. One million five hundred thousand of this was for surfacing, bridges, and roadside improvement of sections now actually under construction. Three million eight hundred and two thousand dollars was estimated as necessary to provide for additional construction of an additional 86 miles, which will include drainage and bridges. Unless this appropriation is granted, this enterprise, which I wish to impress upon my colleagues as being a national enterprise, will be slowed down and delayed.

The right-of-way for this road will include a width of 800 feet, and I have heard the statement that some of the Members of the House have conceived that this was to be a great boulevard of unprecedented width, when as a matter of fact the paved roadway itself will be but 20 feet, with 5 feet on each side additional as shoulders. The 800 feet is merely an easement, or right-of-way, to protect the roadside from desecration, unsightly signs, and the erection of roadside stands, so as to relieve the road of these unpleasant sights. The 800 feet additional will in most places include the natural forest. No great expenditure is proposed on this right-of-way, outside of the actual roadbed, except to preserve it in its primitive beauty and glory. There will be, of course, at intervals, camps set aside, where people may stop at night and enjoy the grandeur of these great mountains and be relieved of the heat of the lower areas.

But again I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that all of this right-of-way is furnished free to the United States by the States of Virginia and North Carolina. Under the agreement between the Federal Government and the two States, the right-of-way is being acquired by the States and conveyed in perpetuity to the Federal Government before any road construction is begun. It will be the purpose to keep these lands embraced within the 800-foot easement in their natural condition and for the enjoyment through countless generations of the increasing population of our Nation. The States of North Carolina and Virginia have already invested and set apart large sums of money for this right-of-way.

The Budget provided for $5,000,000 for the next fiscal year for the continuation of this work. And when completed, in my opinion, it will be the greatest scenic highway in the world. It will belong to the American people. It will not belong to any section.

The average elevation of his highway will be approximately 2,500 feet. At certain points it will rise to a mile in height. It will pass through the great Black Mountain Range, and the Grandfather Range, including Mount Mitchell, the highest land east of the Rockies. It will open up an area which has heretofore been isolated. It will afford markets for the mountain farmers who have heretofore had no access to markets. It contributes to the President's great plan for relief. The labor which will be necessary will contribute to the recovery plan, and it will lead directly into the Great Smoky Range, where you will find more than 50 peaks higher than Mount Washington, a land which has heretofore been isolated and where the primitive forests of spruce, hemlock, poplar, beech, and birch, and its innumerable streams of the purest water on earth will be an asset in the generations which will follow.

We are all in favor of economy, and probably it is thought by some that it is economy to cut this program, but it will not be economy in the future.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. My understanding is there remains 22 minutes on the pending amendment and other amendments which might be offered to the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is not an easy matter for me to rise at this time and oppose some of the dearest friends I have anywhere. The distinguished gentleman from North Carolino [Mr. DOUGHTON] is my personal friend, and I am sure he knows I have a deep and sincere affection for him. He has been very kind to me, and what I say about the distinguished gentleman I can also say of the other gentlemen from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER and Mr. BULWINKLE] and other gentlemen who are interested in this amendment. But I am sure they understand that I have a responsibility.

May I say that I am not trying to speak for anyone, but I know that the President of the United States expects the House to bring this bill within the Budget estimate. It has been stated that the President is interested in this and would like to see it started, and knowing that the able and distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has been active, that he has many promises of support, and I assume the die is cast. At the same time, I think the committee ought to get the facts. It is true the Budget did send up an estimate to the committee of $5,000,000 for the Blue Ridge Highway, but a later supplemental estimate came to the committee of $5,000,000 for the Blue Ridge and the Natchez Trace Highways. A representative of the Budget appeared before the committee and explained that they did not specify two and a half million dollars for each highway for the reason the Blue Ridge Highway had been started—I think 100 to 125 miles—and more than $6,000,000 spent or allocated to it, and under the circumstances it was thought best there should be more spent at this time on the Blue Ridge Highway than on Natchez Trace. Therefore, after fully investigating the facts the committee followed the Budget's suggestions.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Was that the Budget estimate of $5,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That was the Budget estimate of $5,000,000. The committee heard the evidence and made a rather drastic cut, not only in this item but in the Central Valley item and others. The Indian Office took a cut of more than $2,000,000, and all other departments and activities in this bill were cut.

Mr. RANKIN. Where were those Indians?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Some 130,000 of them reside in Oklahoma.

The committee felt in all fairness that inasmuch as not a mile of this road is actually in any national park, and that not all of the funds allocated has actually been spent, that the item should be cut. I simply want you who talk so much economy to understand this. I know your promises have been made and many think this is a road in a national park. It involves the construction of a highway from one park to another but not in either. All of us realize that every excuse and even subterfuge has been used in recent years, in order to get 100 percent Federal support. Frankly I believe both projects should never have been authorized, but the gentlemen from North Carolina say they have the votes to load $2,000,000 to this one item. When the camel gets its neck under the tent then the gentleman from Mississippi gives notice he is going to ask not for a million dollars but for five additional million dollars. That will mean a $7,000,000 increase. Then when the vocational education item comes up, and they in my judgment have a worthy cause, they will request an increase from $7,000,000 to $11,000,000 or possibly $14,000,000. No doubt other worthy requests will be made, and rightfully so, if we permit this increase at the present time.

May I congratulate the Members on holding this bill down below what the committee brought in. I admire these gentlemen who are so ably representing their districts, and I would like to see them get everything they are asking for in order to assist them personally if I could consistently do so, but we have a responsibility here this afternoon.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman. I know he is tremendously interested and I may say to him if I represented his district I possibly would be fighting for my own district like he is doing. We are all for economy unless it hits our own districts or States, then it seems to be a different story.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman explain to me why half the reduction made in the entire bill came from these two projects, or more than half came from these two projects without a reduction made in anything else?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well, the gentleman is in error about that. The Budget, as he knows, finally recommended $5,000,000 for both projects, as I tried to explain them awhile ago. The committee cut the estimate to $3,000,000. If this $5,000,000 is allowed, then the Natchez Trace boys will ask for $5,000,000, and they are in the same status, except that work has not actually begun. Many other States have worthy projects and proposals. In my State of Oklahoma we have the Platte National Park. We heard a gentleman from North Carolina talk about the beautiful streams, the flowers, the hills, and beauties of Nature in that section of the country. No one denies that. But we have a beautiful park right in my section and there lies on my desk now a request that I ask for a full 100 percent Federal appropriation to construct a highway from that national park to some of the national monuments in Oklahoma, Texas, and Arkansas. Every State in the Union will have the right to come to Congress and say, "What you can do for North Carolina you can do for us", and Oklahoma and Oregon. They will all be here from Maine to California, demanding the same treatment.

Mr. Chairman, these are the facts—it is your responsibility as well as mine.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion that all debate on the pending amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preferential motion offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Mr. WOLCOTT moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House forthwith with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the House will recall that last year we had quite a fight over the attempt of the States of Virginia and North Carolina to get 477 miles of highway constructed without those two States putting up one red cent.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I cannot yield. Of course, I have no fault to find with the delightful Members coming from these States who seek to get an appropriation under this bill, but I call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact the legislative bill was defeated first when it came up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It was defeated when the bill came up under suspension of the rules. The Rules Committee then brought in a rule and, after bitter debate, the bill was passed by the House by a very few votes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I cannot yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Will the gentleman let me correct him about that matter?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It was called to the attention of the House at that time that the Executive had gone ahead on his own responsibility and allocated about one and one-fourth million dollars to start work which had never been authorized by the Congress of the United States.

Let us not fool ourselves at all that this is a parkway or part of the national-park system. This is an attempt on the part of these States to get 477 miles of highway without having to match one cent of the money.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me right there for a correction?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman not yield for a correction?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I assume the gentleman, if he has corrections to make, will get time to make them.

Now the States of California, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota, the State of New York, and all of the other States, if they want money from the Federal Government with which to build highways have to put up 100 cents against every dollar the Federal Government gives them.

Tomorrow, when the relief bill is up for consideration, the Committee on Roads will make a recommendation that $150,000,000 of the amount be allocated to the States under the Highway Act. At the present time the States get $125,000,000 a year. The cost of constructing the 477 miles of free highway in these two States will be comparable with the amount this Congress appropriates each year for all of the 48 States in the Union.

A companion piece of legislation is the so-called Natchez Trace Highway, by which it is sought to construct a highway to commemorate the fact that Jackson took his troops down to New Orleans over this ridge. I believe it is to be known as the Jackson Memorial Highway, or, perhaps, the Rankin Memorial Highway.

Mr. RANKIN. It is the Natchez Trace Parkway, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Anyway, the justification for it is that Jackson marched his troops down the road over this ridge to subdue the city of New Orleans.

Mr. RANKIN. We were not fighting New Orleans, we were fighting the British.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This was after the war.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is mistaken in both his history and his geography.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It was not his fault that he fought the Battle of New Orleans after the war was all over. Nevertheless, he did march over this beautiful ridge across the Mississippi. Now we are spending $100,000,000 to memorialize Jackson for this feat. This is no time to be building memorials. The greatest memorial we can build to the people of the United States is to see that they are adequately fed and adequately housed.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I demand recognition in opposition to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. How much time do we have remaining under the unanimous-consent agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this preferential motion for the reason that I think every opportunity should be extended to the other side to carry on this "pork barrel" program to its logical conclusion.

I particularly want to call the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to the rather difficult position in which he may find himself later on. The Committee will recall that this afternoon we had a message from the President. Probably many of you will recall the embarrassment from which some of you on the other side suffered as you heard the admonishment from the White House with respect to an exposition.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I may say to my distinguished friend the gentleman from North Carolina that I shall yield to him in due course.

I am very fond of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and I want to save him from possible embarrassment in the future. I can well picture, as can many of you, the embarrassing position in which the gentleman will find himself if, after having sponsored this program of appropriating $5,000,000 instead of the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, he will have visited upon him the odium and the ignominy of the President of the United States saying to him what he said to some of the rest of you today. Let me read from the President's message of today, for the benefit of the distinguished gentleman:

> In view of the efforts of the Congress and the administration to bring Federal expenditures within the scope of Federal revenues as rapidly as possible, I am compelled to conclude that the sum of $5,000,000—

It is rather a coincidence that it is the same sum as the gentleman has suggested—> proposed to be appropriated by the Federal Government, is excessive.

I want to save the gentleman from future embarrassment. Then, I want to save him this further embarrassment. You will recall he is the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and, of course, as such it falls to his unfortunate lot—and I know at times he has been distressed in the past—to bring in a tax bill which is to raise money for this appropriation that he is presently requesting. I do not want to have the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means have visited upon his shoulders any more burden than has already been placed upon them by this wasteful extravagance of the present administration. I am concerned about his welfare. I am concerned about his contentment of mind. I am concerned about his conscience as a public servant. I want to save him from all possible embarrassment.

Therefore, I plead with the gentleman, with the same fervor and sincerity as the gentleman plead with the House a moment ago, to withdraw his amendment, to retrench rather than propose new ways of spending, and to have confidence in the splendid chairman of the Committee on Appropriations who opposes this new assault on the Treasury of the United States. I plead with the gentleman to withdraw his amendment now and save himself from the admonishment and the chastisement of the President of the United States. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have also been admonished to beware of the Greeks when bearing gifts.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman admonishes me and predicates his admonishment on the position of the President of the United States. No one is authorized to quote the President of the United States, but I say upon my responsibility as a Member of this House that I have it upon the highest possible authority from the President of the United States, within the past 24 hours, that he favors my amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman allow an answer to that? It was not my intention, sir, to admonish the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, but advise him. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

The question was taken and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—ayes, 141; noes, 59.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. FORD of Mississippi: Page 111, strike out lines 9 to 18, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof insert the following:
> "Blue Ridge Parkway: For continuing the construction and maintenance under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat. pp. 1519–1522), of the Blue Ridge Parkway be immediately available and remain available until expended, $5,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $40,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment, as I could not hear the amendment as read, and I want to examine it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, we demand the regular order. If the gentleman is going to make a point of order, let him make it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York stated he could not hear the reading of the amendment and wanted to examine it.

Mr. RANKIN. That is all right, but we want the gentleman to debate the point of order before we begin debate on the amendment, if he is going to debate the point at all.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amount specified in the second paragraph of the amendment is not authorized by law.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, may I submit the law? I have here the act which authorized both of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TABER. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

In the language that has already been read, four and a half million dollars has already been appropriated out of the $10,000,000 of authorization in the previous paragraph at the top of page 111. This, together with $10,000,000 carried in this amendment, would make $14,500,000 as against $10,000,000 authorized. Therefore, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that the act authorized $10,000,000 a year for each of the two fiscal years named in the bill?

Mr. TABER. There is only one fiscal year named in the bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; 2 fiscal years were mentioned.

Mr. TABER. This is for the year 1938, for which we are now appropriating.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But the authorization act stated $10,000,000 a year for each of 2 years.

Mr. TABER. Yes; but $10,000,000 in the previous paragraph and an additional $10,000,000 would make the amendment now offered unauthorized and therefore not in order.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The amendment strikes out the paragraph as amended.

Mr. TABER. Yes; and provides $5,000,000 for the Skyline Road and $5,000,000 for the Natchez Road.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That is only $10,000,000, and would meet the authorization.

Mr. TABER. Yes; but there is $4,500,000 for these park roads appropriated in the previous paragraph, which makes a total of $14,300,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

As was pointed out by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], who reported the bill originally, there was authorized $10,000,000 a year. This is clearly within that authorization, because it lacks more than $5,000,000 of absorbing the authorization. In addition to this, Mr. Chairman, this is a project under construction. It has been begun, since the right-of-way has been acquired in part, and therefore is a continuing project, and this amendment would be in order even if the authorization were not provided. So I submit the amendment is clearly in order from both standpoints.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD] upon the ground that the appropriation sought to be made in the second paragraph of the amendment is not authorized by existing law. The Chair has examined the Highway Act approved June 16, 1936, and invites attention to section 5 of that act which authorizes an appropriation of $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1938. The Chair has examined the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi and finds that the appropriation sought to be made comes within the authorization provided in section 5 of the Highway Act to which reference has been made. The Chair calls attention to the fact that this appropriation is for the construction of parkways. The provision of the bill in the preceding paragraph to which the gentleman from New York calls attention is for another purpose. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order and that the appropriation sought to be made is authorized by existing law. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order, and the gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield for that purpose?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. If it will not take too long, I will yield.

Mr. RICH. The Committee was not in order when the amendment was read and Members did not hear it. I tried my best to hear what the amendment provides, and I could not. In justice to the membership I think we ought to have the amendment rereported.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again read?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the Ford amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Ford amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUCE. This section reverses the action just taken by the Committee and my point is that that cannot be accomplished except by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late, because I had already taken the floor and had yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard further upon the point of order?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Yes, Mr. Chairman; briefly. The action which this amendment seeks does not repeal the action taken by the Committee a moment ago. It merely substitutes language which readopts language of the Committee and adds additional language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] makes the point of order against the amendment upon the ground stated by him, and the Chair is of opinion that the ground stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts is not applicable to the situation as here presented.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD] has offered an amendment striking out the entire paragraph and inserting new language. The Chair invites the attention of the Committee to two precedents of the House incorporating decisions which in the opinion of the Chair are in point upon the question here raised and invites attention to section 2904 of Cannon's Precedents, volume 8, in which it is stated:

> A substitute offered after the reading of a bill has been concluded is in order regardless of whether it includes language stricken from the bill or inserted in the bill when read for amendment.

On June 28, 1922, a question was raised involving the point here presented in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] was then the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. The Chair invites attention to a part of the ruling made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on that occasion:

> There are two methods by which substitutes for the entire bill may be offered. The first is to offer after the first paragraph has been read, a substitute for the entire bill, with the notice that with regard to the succeeding sections of the bill, as they are read, a motion will be made to strike them out. That method has been used in a good many instances. In that case gentlemen will notice that, of course, there is no opportunity for amending any subsequent section of the bill, provided the substitute is agreed to.
> The other method is to offer the substitute for the entire bill at the conclusion of the reading of the entire bill, as was done in this instance by the gentleman from Illinois. Of course, in that case all of the amendments that have been adopted by the committee, whatever they may be, are stricken out if the substitute is adopted. If the substitute contains in effect or in actual language some of the amendments that are already agreed to, that does not deprive the mover of the substitute of the consideration of his substitute. That applies practically to the case that we have before us, in the opinion of the Chair. No matter what the effect of this subsitute may be, it is the right of the Committee to vote down or to support the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. The point of order is, therefore, overruled.

Then in section 2905 of the same volume to which the Chair has referred is another decision which the Chair feels is in point on this question provides as follows:

> It is in order to propose as a substitute for a section an amendment inserting the same section with modifications and omitting amendments to the section previously agreed to by the Committee of the Whole.

This decision was rendered by Chairman Tilson, who was Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and was on a point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Without taking the time to quote the entire decision, the Chair will state that it is directly in point with the previous decision which the Chair has quoted.

On the basis of the two precedents cited, the Chair overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered strikes out the following language:

Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways: For continuing the construction and maintenance, under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat., pp. 1519–1522), of the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $5,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $40,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That not exceeding $500,000 of this appropriation shall be available for construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway.

And inserts in lieu thereof the following:

Blue Ridge Parkway: For continuing the construction and maintenance, under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat., pp. 1519–1522), of the Blue Ridge Parkway, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $5,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $40,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Natchez Trace Parkway: For continuing the construction and maintenance, under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 16, 1936 (49 Stat., pp. 1519–1522), of the Natchez Trace Parkway, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $5,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $40,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be to increase the Blue Ridge Parkway appropriation, as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], from $4,500,000 to $5,000,000, and would also increase the appropriation for the Natchez Trace Parkway from $500,000 to $5,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I tried to get the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] a moment ago when he was telling the House that this authorization barely passed the House. I wanted to call his attention and the attention of the Members of the House to volume 80, part 8, pages 8704 and 8705 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Seventy-fourth Congress, where they will find that the authorization for the Blue Ridge Parkway and Natchez Trace Parkway passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 238 to 99; yet the gentleman would not yield to me to correct a misstatement of facts which he made to this House.

Now, what are the facts about it? The people in Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, and the people in North Carolina and Virginia were interested in these two parkways when this relief money began to be appropriated. We did not get a very large appropriation for our people down in the South from the Works Progress Administration funds which this Congress appropriated. We do not have people on the relief rolls like some of you do in the industrial sections. We in the South try to work out projects that will give work to our people and at the same time do something worth while for the taxpayers. We appealed to the President of the United States and to the various agencies of this country who have the responsibility of expending relief money for the Natchez Trace in Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, and the project was approved by the President.

The Natchez Trace Parkway was one of the great interests of the late Speaker, Mr. Byrns. It was dearer to his heart and he was more interested in that than any other one project in this country. He worked hard with the Roads Committee and with those of us who were interested in trying to get a work project started there. It has been started; the State of Mississippi has purchased an 800-foot right-of-way across many counties in the State of Mississippi and has executed deeds to the Government. The National Park Service is now ready to advertise for bids for construction work on this project. The Appropriations Committee, after previous authorization by this House, is now unwilling to give us more than the little paltry sum of $500,000. Oh, the gentleman will say "You did not get the Budget to approve it." The truth about it is that the Budget turned it down first because they did not think it was authorized. I took the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and other documents down and confronted the Director of the Budget with them, and he admitted it had been authorized by law. He then sent up an estimate to the Committee on Appropriations, and asked that the Natchez Trace Parkway be included in the $5,000,000 estimate of the Budget as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] told you a moment ago. The Natchez Trace Parkway is on the same footing as the Blue Ridge Parkway and if you give $4,500,000 to the Blue Ridge Parkway you should, in fairness, give the same amount to the Natchez Trace Parkway. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] says he wants to be fair with all his friends and enemies in this House. If he wants to be fair to the people who live in the States of Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, he will get up and ask his colleagues to vote for my amendment. It is on the same basis, and seeks an equal appropriation for both Parkways. When the bill came before Congress authorizing the $10,000,000 appropriation for national parks I asked the Acting Director of National Parks to advise me how he proposed to spend the $10,000,000, and to tell me how much would go to the Blue Ridge Parkway and how much to the Natchez Trace Parkway. I now read a letter which he wrote me under date of May 12, 1936.

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1936.

Hon. A. L. FORD,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FORD: In compliance with your request of May 9, a table was included in the National Park Service testimony before the Senate Post Offices and Post Roads Committee indicating a division of funds between the two national parkway projects now under construction. On the basis of the Senate amendment to the Federal road bill, the division of the $10,000,000 annual authorization contained in section 5 of H. R. 11687 for parkway construction for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1938, and June 30, 1939, would be as follows:

Name and location of parkway	Total length (miles)	Estimated cost per mile	Estimated mileage and cost of proposed work
			1938: $10,000,000 authorization		1939: $10,000,000 authorization
			Miles	Cost	Miles	Cost
Natchez Trace	460	$50,000
Mississippi			60.5	$3,026,316	67.4	$3,368,421
Alabama			4.7	236,842	6.3	315,790
Tennessee			20.2	1,048,421	23.2	1,157,895
Total			85.4	4,311,579	96.9	4,842,106
Blue Ridge	490	70,000
Virginia			32.9	2,305,790	34.6	2,421,052
North Carolina			48.3	3,382,631	39.1	2,736,842
Total			81.2	5,688,421	73.7	5,157,894
Grand total	950		166.6	10,000,000	170.6	10,000,000

Sincerely yours,

A. E. DEMARAY,
Acting Director, National Park Service.

In view of this I appeal to my colleagues to give us an equal appropriation for the Natchez Trace Parkway. It is one of the most important projects in the country; it traverses historic and scenic country. When you ask me to cut down expenditures I will join with you, but do not urge me to cut down on one of the projects that is worth much to the people of my State.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman tell us what he has voted for that has cut expenditures?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I have voted almost every time the gentleman from Pennsylvania has to cut expenditures. Let us have one little project down in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert the letter which I read to the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. There is 12 minutes remaining on this paragraph.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the thing has happened that I predicted just a moment ago would happen, that these gentlemen from Mississippi are in here asking not for another $500,000, increasing their appropriation 100 percent over what the committee gave them, but asking to increase it, the one-half million allowed, to $5,000,000.

Again I may say, Mr. Chairman, that while I am not trying to quote anyone, that according to information that I have received, if this amendment goes into this bill I have every reason to believe the bill will be vetoed. I at least intimated that a while ago. Now, I think I should say that I have a very definite feeling, based upon what I think is the highest authority, that if this amendment for the full $5,000,000 goes into the bill, added to the $2,000,000 just added, that it will be vetoed.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I think the gentleman should have been fair about this matter. Why did he not give us this information a moment ago? Be fair with the Members on this proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I want to be fair. If the gentleman heard my previous statement, he understands that I have reason to believe this bill cannot be loaded down and escape a veto.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says that the President will veto the bill on account of this amendment dealing with a project the construction of which he has approved and would not veto it on the amendment for the Blue Ridge Parkway?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; I have not quoted anybody, but the gentleman does not mean to tell this House that the President has approved this additional $5,000,000.

Mr. RANKIN. He has approved the authorization of this highway. When this measure was first passed we took the proposition up with the President.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman for a question, not to make a speech.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman that the President is not opposed to this project.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Since the gentleman has made that statement, I may say that I have had two telephone calls from one whom I have every reason to believe speaks with authority to the effect that the President is opposed to increasing this above the Budget estimate. Now, I am going to give my own opinion that a veto message is in the President's mind right now, and he would like to deliver it against this or any bill that is loaded down with money above the Budget estimate.

Mr. RANKIN. The President did not tell the gentleman that he would veto the bill if we put this appropriation in it, did he?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, no; I am not quoting the President on this or any other amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. We cannot hear over here. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the President said——

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; I have not quoted the President at all. I have said that if this item goes in this bill, added to the $2,000,000 just voted, that I have reason to believe it will be vetoed. Of course, I realize if I should quote the highest authority on the face of the earth that it would do no good now. The die is cast. I am ready to vote.

Mr. MICHENER. When the gentleman says "on the highest authority on the face of the earth", does he refer to the President?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a little of my own time. I do not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can control that by declining to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, a representative of the Bureau of the Budget came before the committee, as I stated awhile ago, and advised the committee that absolutely none of the work had been done on this highway, explained that some of the States—I believe Alabama and Tennessee—had not even been sufficiently interested to pass resolutions in their legislatures proposing to buy the rights-of-way. If the States affected are interested, it is my suggestion they come before the committee with clean hands, buy the rights-of-way for this highway, then go down to the Budget Bureau and secure a definite recommendation. That, in my judgment, is the correct and orderly manner in which it should be done.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Was it not reported to the committee that the route selected for this highway through the State of Mississippi was in many places over swampy land and that it would be a very expensive type of road to build?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not care to cast any aspersions on the great State of Mississippi, but I do say that this road does not go from one park to another. They call it a parkway. It goes through some historic country and by some interesting monuments. If these gentlemen will get their legislatures to provide the rights-of-way, as the gentleman from North Carolina did, then go to the Budget and secure a definite estimate, I have every reason to believe that the committee will be glad to go along with them in a reasonable appropriation, but to increase this one item $4,500,000 in the face of our talk of economy is to my mind out of the question at this time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio and Mr. RANKIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has been seeking recognition for half an hour or more. The Chair feels that in fairness he should be recognized. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge that I have been very assiduous in seeking recognition, but I do not want to take the place of any member of the committee on our side.

Mr. Chairman, we have listened with a great deal of interest to the conflict between the Members on the Democratic side over these amendments. Sometimes some of them show signs of a desire to practice a little economy, but they are afraid to come out in the open for they do not want to get out too far from the money pots. They want to be in position to drag all the political bacon they can back into their districts. They are afraid to follow the President when he talks economy, for they know he does not mean it, and they are afraid to vote against the President's pet extravagances, for they know that it was by virtue of these huge sums that most of them were elected to their present positions. But to be fair, I must say that I think that many of them would be glad to strike down all these extravagances but they fear reprisals against them and their districts.

Why am I against these amendments? I am against them because last year when the bill providing for this great parkway was passed, I stood on the floor and did my utmost to keep it from passing. I gave the parkway the name of "Paradise Parkway." I said at that time and I say now that it was the most gigantic and stupendously extravagant and unreasonable expenditure made by the most extravagantly expensive administration in the history of the world. Think of it—477 miles of parkway 800 feet wide. What is it going to cost to maintain this vast parkway? Millions annually. I said at the time that it would cost $48,000,000 to build it. Today the figures run up to $56,000,000. If they carry this out as they originally contemplated, it will cost more than a hundred million. Where are we going, where will we land at this rate? Why do the great taxpaying States like Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and New York vote all these millions to States like these which are to receive these colossal gifts now and forevermore, for it will be necessary to maintain this immense parkway from now on forever, and as long as the Republic stands. I dare say that not a single Congressman from Ohio could look his constituency in the face if he would vote these millions for these southern States when he knows that his State will have a large percentage of it to pay, and when he knows that the President, under the plea of economy, is refusing to do scarcely anything to prevent the disastrous floods that have cost the people of Ohio so many millions.

You are, of course, going to vote this amendment down because your chairman has brought this news to you that the President, or somebody for the President, says that the bill will be vetoed, if it is to carry these additional appropriations of seven millions. I believe the chairman; I believe that it will be vetoed, because in all good conscience it should be vetoed.

What is the use of running the risk of a veto on this bill? Why not vote the amendment down? Then we will have the Doughton amendment to vote down when it comes up for final consideration. We can when the bill is reported to the House for final passage vote out the Doughton amendment. The bill will then carry $3,000,000 which is entirely too much.

This bill never would have passed last year if it had not been for the universal popularity of my good friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. He has been in this House for 30 years and when he stands up here before us we all feel we should do the best we can for him. He is the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and I am a member of that committee. I dislike to oppose this proposition but in good conscience I cannot support such unnecessary expenditures when I know of the great necessity for Government assistance for flood control and other necessary projects. Let me call attention to the fact that it is not necessary to appropriate one single dollar for these roads now. They have not spent all the money they got last year. I believe the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] said they had $6,000,000 left. If I am wrong about this I will be glad to be corrected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Every dollar is obligated.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes, but it has not been used. It will be used this summer.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is all obligated.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I understood the gentleman to say there were millions left.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It has either been expended or is obligated.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The President spent one and one-half million dollars on this project before he had any legislation authorizing it. Who is doing the work? Principally the C. C. C., the W. P. A. and people of that sort, who are paid out of another fund and will be paid out of another fund. The work will proceed if the President wants it to proceed, for in a day or two this Congress will probably vote the President about fifteen hundred million to do with as he pleases.

May I call attention to one fact? This morning the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] made a very fine speech. He is the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control and is well posted on that subject. He told us that the President had indicated he was going to allow only $30,000,000 to aid the people from the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys who are putting up a great fight to prevent the recurrence of flood conditions in that section. This is not one-fourth enough. This road work does not have to be done, but the flood-relief work is imperative. Under these amendments you raise the amount from three million to ten million.

For whom? Who gets the benefit of all these millions? Not for one single individual that is in distress. No; it will go to provide broad expansive highways for the autoists and tourists of the world. If you used that $7,000,000 on one proposed dam in the Ohio watershed that has already been surveyed, and upon which the President has already spent a million dollars, it would nearly complete that dam. When that one dam is completed it will take 5 feet off the crest of the flood waters in the Ohio River all the way from Gallipolis, Ohio, down to the mouth of the Mississippi River. How much would 5 feet be? It will be enough to save hundreds of millions of dollars in a flood such as we suffered last January. These 5 feet off of the crest of one of our big floods will be the difference between home and no home for millions—I repeat, millions of people. It will be the difference between life and death to many people and much livestock. It will be the difference between possession of household goods and homemaking paraphernalia and total destitution to millions—yes; the fear and anguish it will save so many millions. My friends, I grow sad when I contemplate the loss and discouragement that so many of my people have suffered, but I almost get beyond the power to reason when I contemplate the extravagant waste of money that is carried on in our great country by our Government. I can appreciate the meaning of the Biblical language which refers to the instance where the request for bread was answered with the gift of a hard, tasteless stone.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has at last realized that the T. V. A. is saving the people along the Ohio River, although he never took the precaution to vote for any of the appropriations for the T. V. A.

Mr. Chairman, there is talk here about the President vetoing the bill because of this small amount. It is ridiculous when you consider we are going to be asked in a few days to vote a billion and a half dollars for the same kind of work. The people along this highway have given deeds to the property on the faith of this bill being passed by the Congress. To say the President will veto the bill because this small amount is asked for when we will be asked to appropriate a billion and a half dollars to do the same kind of work elsewhere I say is ridiculous.

I submit we are entitled to the same kind of treatment that the people between the Blue Ridge and the Smoky Mountain National Park are receiving and I ask the Members to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD], and give us that treatment. I admit the people along the Ohio River are in need. I will help them, but everyone in this country does not live along a river.

Mr. Chairman, this is a great historic route. It is dedicated to the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians who saved this Republic when it needed help and friends. They were the ones who made it possible for Jackson to get to New Orleans. This monument will not only be dedicated to them, but it will be a benefit to the American people for all time to come.

I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not only vote for this amendment, but will vote for all T. V. A. appropriations in the future in line with his confession of faith of a few moments ago. [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the language of the amendment is proposed to be substituted for the language in the bill, including the Doughton amendment? In other words, if this amendment is agreed to the language in the bill as amended by the Doughton amendment goes out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman states it correctly.

Mr. TARVER. The Doughton amendment provides an appropriation of $4,500,000 for the Blue Ridge Parkway. The pending amendment provides $500,000 for the Natchez Trace, and also provides $5,000,000 for the Blue Ridge Parkway. Therefore, if the pending amendment should be adopted, the effect would be to increase the appropriation for the Blue Ridge Parkway by $500,000 above the Doughton amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not within the province of the Chair to construe the effect of an amendment. The Chair would not undertake to rule on that matter, but merely undertakes to answer the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TARVER. The Doughton amendment carried, in substance, four and a half million dollars for the Blue Ridge Parkway and the pending amendment carries $500,000 more for that purpose?

Mr. RANKIN. This amendment does not take anything away from the Doughton Parkway. It does not take a dollar away from that proposition.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the statements of the gentlemen on the other side and the chairman of the subcommittee in reference to this appropriation bill. It seems there is a mistaken idea in the minds of many of the Members relative to the Natchez Trace Parkway.

It was stated a moment ago by the gentleman from the other side that this is an 800-foot highway. As the gentleman from Georgia explained, these parkways are only 30 feet wide, with a 20-foot concrete roadway. The right-of-way is 800 feet, but throughout my district and State they are letting the farmers use it to within 150 feet, or 75 feet on each side, just as they are using it today.

It is said further that we must economize now. May I call the attention of the Members to the fact that in the last Congress you authorized the appropriation and expenditure of this money? The legislature of my State, acting on the authorization of the Congress, has authorized bonds and appropriated money to buy rights-of-way, and we have several units ready for construction. Only last Friday there was sold $100,000 worth of bonds at 1 percent in order to enable us to buy rights-of-way along the different units outlined by the Park Service of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGEHEE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is true the State of Mississippi has made some effort to cooperate along that line, but what have the States of Alabama and Tennessee done?

Mr. McGEHEE. I have no information on that.

Today Mississippi is selling bonds and is buying rights-of-way, and it has two units ready. The contracts have been let. They now have a million and a half dollars allocated from the W. P. A. fund with which to let contracts. Our people are continuing this project and are acting on the theory that the authorization you gave to them last year will be carried out.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGEHEE. Gladly.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Is it not true the National Park Service requested $5,000,000 for this work?

Mr. McGEHEE. It is true. I thank the gentleman.

The Park Service in its report to the committee in connection with the authorization last year outlined in detail the number of miles this $5,000,000 would construct.

May I correct another error in the minds of some of the membership who say this will cost $300,000,000? The Natchez Trace Parkway from Nashville to Natchez, Miss., will only cost something like $16,000,000 to $20,000,000. I do not know the cost of the Blue Ridge Parkway, but I am informed it is a little more than this. The opponents of this project would prejudice your minds by coming before you and talking against it and saying it is going to cost $300,000,000. If we are going to economize, let us begin tomorrow, and not go back on the contractual relationships, you might say, which we have made with these people in five or six States to supply the work, where the taxpayers are already spending their funds in preparation for the construction of these wonderful parkways. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 69, noes 89.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. FORD of Mississippi and Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 72, noes 101.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Historic sites and buildings: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the preservation of historic American sites, buildings, objects, and antiquities of national significance, and for other purposes", approved August 21, 1935 (49 Stat., p. 666), $24,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: On page 111, line 24, strike out "$24,000" and insert "$4,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House of Representatives to the fact that if the Members will turn to the committee's report at page 40, with respect to the National Park Service, and view the increases in the appropriations for practically every park of the Federal Government and practically every monument, they will be astonished at the increase contained in the report and in this bill.

The situation is that with the enormous amount of money you are spending annually on these parks, you are requested to increase the amount for upkeep annually.

We appropriated last year for the parks $17,961,805, while the total income from all the parks and monuments was $1,131,033.68, or practically 18 times as much was spent as was received as the total revenue.

However, while the situation was bad from that standpoint, yet granting that the parks are a fine thing for the country, do not overlook the fact that the Federal Government spent out of relief money for the Department of the Interior last year over $34,875,000.

Now, what did they do with this money? Let me call the attention of the Members to some of the things that have transpired with respect to the funds that the Federal Government used in this way:

For electrical equipment changes in the Interior Department over $52,000.

For repairing and improving the Interior Building over $788,000.

For repairing the old Post Office Building, which they are going to tear down very shortly, over $85,000.

For furnishing venetian blinds to the offices uptown, over $60,000.

For taking care of the spoiling on the Washington Monument, over $88,000.

For remodeling Potomac Park, over $65,000.

For air conditioning in office buildings uptown, over $1,721,000.

Now, get this—give me your attention—you spent over $8,539,000 for air conditioning your House Office Buildings, your Capitol, and the Senate Office Building. The House Office Building is the finest office building I ever sat in or ever had an office in which I could call my own; and think of that building over there, which is less than 2 years old, having spent on it for your own benefit a great part of $8,539,000 for air conditioning. Why, somebody in the Government force is crazy. Who are they—who voted for this money—show me these foolish men you have around here giving you Members of Congress all these conveniences when the people back home are suffering, when the people back home are hollering for bread; when the people back home are saying, "Give me something to eat", you fit up your own offices like palaces. A brand new building, almost tearing it down to put in it cold air, when we already had electric fans. I tell you, again, somebody on Capitol Hill is foolish. Show me the foolish men who voted this money to be expended for these needless purposes. I want to tell you it is time we became sensible.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I could call the attention of the Members of the Congress to many other items of expense, which I shall do before we get through with this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has delivered his usual very interesting political address, but he forgot to mention the amendment which he has offered. The fact is the committee cut this item from $50,000, as recommended by the Budget, to $24,000. The committee found there are some surveys in progress at this time, and, as I recall, the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not object to the cut, but in fact the action of the committee was agreeable to him.

While we appreciate the wonderful lecture that we have heard so frequently, yet we are endeavoring to hurry through, and I suggest that we now vote.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am especially interested in the paragraph in the bill now under consideration having to do with historic sites and buildings. An act approved August 21, 1935, empowers the Secretary of the Interior, through the National Park Service, to do work, the importance of which will more fully be appreciated in the years to come.

In brief, there is proposed a broad program for the acquisition, development, and marking of historic buildings and sites. At the present time a limited but Nation-wide survey is under way. The object is to determine sites and buildings of greatest historic value and worthy of preservation. The results of the surveys are passed upon by the Advisory Board of the National Parks and Monuments, Historic Sites, and Buildings, named under the legislation referred to.

Deeply interested in this matter, because of a rare historic building in the Missouri district which I have the honor to represent, I have made inquiry as to the advisability of Members introducing special bills to preserve historic sites and buildings. My information is that the introduction of separate bills is not necessary, but that the end desired, insofar as funds permit, can be accomplished under authority of the Historic Sites and Buildings Act.

A firm believer in economy, as my voting record shows, I have no hesitancy in saying that further funds should, as soon as the financial situation permits, and through savings from other sources, be provided to preserve, acquire, and in some cases, restore historic sites and buildings.

Restoration, while it may be most commendable, represents the last resort. It implies a lack of timely action, looking to the saving of something which later may be recognized as of near priceless value. As in the case of Wakefield, birthplace of Washington, the restoration of the building and grounds represents a most commendable project, yet think what it might have been had the original building and grounds been preserved for future generations. Happily, Mount Vernon was saved as a patriotic shrine for the American people. No credit, though, is due the Federal Government. All praise is due that patriotic, far-seeing band of noble American women who, working together, made possible the preservation of what is today the loveliest and most inspiring spot in America.

As a Nation we are new. Certainly so as measured by many overseas governments. As States, except for those making up the Original Colonies, a single century or a little more represents the life of most. So it is not surprising that we have neglected to save historic buildings, the value of which we are only now coming to appreciate.

Digressing somewhat, I might suggest that age, once the "twilight zone" has been passed, may, in material things, mean added value, or at least greater desirability. Old furniture is an example. Think what the contents of ancient attics, of the kind some of us can remember, would represent if saved until now. The greatest value, of course, would come to the family immediately interested in such heirlooms. Somewhat the same standard of value the Advisory Board on National Parks and Sites and Buildings must use in its investigations. The more people interested, or the larger the State or National interest, must receive primary consideration. There comes also, the questions, Are there other structures of similar kind? or Does the building mark a movement of importance in the life of State or Nation?

I have said that, as a nation, we are young. We have gone in for the new and the big. With feverish haste, and often without proper thought or entire justification, immense public buildings, costing many millions of dollars, have been authorized. Work here in Washington is a fair example. During two decades, or since the beginning of the World War, most of the great public buildings on Pennsylvania Avenue and Constitution Avenue have been constructed. So immense and so crowded together are they that there is little room for trees, the beauty of this Capital City.

Better by far would it be to save a million dollars or so on the cost of more monumental public buildings and use a part of the money, to be shared in by many States, for the purchase and preservation of historic buildings and sites. Too long has such action been delayed. Here and there, as is shown by surveys made under the special branch of the National Park Service, are buildings of rare value, but which, in the so-called march of progress, are about to be destroyed. Private ownership no longer feels justified in carrying such buildings, so that they will be lost soon and forever unless other means of preservation are provided.

At this time there is agitation for the erection of a Jefferson memorial in Washington. My feeling is that we would much better use a part of the funds such a monument would cost—and as a start, a fraction would suffice—to save historic structures. This action would be much more in keeping with Jefferson's thoughts and ideas, as expressed in his life and writings, than would a great marble monument here in the National Capital. Furthermore, as to location of such a memorial, I doubt if Washington is the most appropriate place. Jefferson's greatest work was not wrought here. It is not as President that he is primarily remembered. In fact, the inscription which he, himself, desired for his grave marker, the original of which stands on the campus of the University of Missouri, in my home city, makes no reference to the fact that he was President. It reads:

> Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom, and father of the University of Virginia.

If a new Jefferson memorial is to be authorized, the location well might be somewhere in the Louisiana Purchase, which Jefferson made possible, but even that work can wait.

Now is no time to be dealing out dollars, millions of dollars, for more monumental buildings or memorials in Washington. The disagreeable January weather of the 1937 inauguration day should not be made an excuse for the immediate construction of a great auditorium in the National Capital. Roosevelt "took it." Other Presidents can.

Again referring to Thomas Jefferson, we have Monticello, second only to Mount Vernon as a patriotic shrine, and, like Mount Vernon, saved not through governmental action, but by patriotic individuals. Nor is Monticello all. In the United States there are eight cities, the largest being the State capital of Missouri, named for Jefferson, and in addition, 23 counties and 140 townships are so named. After all, though, no monument, although it may cost millions, which Congress can authorize, will ever mean as much as means Monticello, so rich in history and in associations. Happily, it was saved. So I plead today for the saving of other historic places and buildings.

My personal interest in the item carried in this bill and to which I have referred, centers in the Missouri county in which I was born. In Boonville, Mo., is Thespian Hall, believed to be the oldest surviving theater west of the Alleghenies. Completed in 1857 under direction of the Thespian Society, this building is a notable architectural relic of a unique frontier little theater movement. The story of the society and its impressive theater is a significant chapter in the cultural history of the Middle West.

Boonville's Thespian Society was organized by 60 professional men sometime before 1838. Provincial in no sense of the word, many of these "gentlemen of wealth" had been attracted to Boonville from Virginia, the Carolinas, Kentucky, and Tennessee by its thriving overland trade, over the Santa Fe Trail, with the West and Southwest. Today another group of patriotic men and women, members of the Thespian Hall Preservation Committee, seeks to save for community, State, and Nation the work of pioneers of a century ago.

The earliest Thespian Hall program notice to appear in the few Boonville newspapers that have survived from the period before 1870 was in the Western Emigrant of August 8, 1839. Numerous traveling companies which visited Boonville before the Civil War found the Thespian Society and its theater friendly hosts.

During the spring of 1846 the Thespian Society was reorganized and a new theater fitted up in an old log building. The continued success of the society is recorded, but in spite of general popular support there were, according to the local press of that period, "still many in the community who entirely disapprove of histrionic representations under all circumstances", and it is added that a lyceum which the Thespians attempted to organize to placate this element met with a cold reception. In 1854 a more formal organization was effected, adopting the name of the Boonville Thespian Association.

The profound interest of the period in cultural and social reform was reflected in the expanding interests of the society. A lyceum, an orchestra, and definite interest in all types of music, a library and reading room for the improvement of the youth of the city, and a planned charitable program were developed. Most important of all, the society was serving as a vigorous civil unifying force. "Independent of their repeated charitable efforts in behalf of the suffering poor", the Observer states in 1856, "the society has done much to eradicate individual prejudice and bickerings."

In March 1855 the Thespian Society was incorporated as the Boonville Library, Reading room, and Thespian Association, a practical organization designed to accommodate the rapidly expanding needs of the society. The building of Thespian Hall was planned by the association immediately following its incorporation. The cornerstone was laid July 25, 1855, and the building was completed in the summer of 1857. On the evening of July 3 it was opened to the public with a grand ball.

The Civil War destroyed the Thespian Society as it destroyed the era that produced it. Throughout the years of the conflict, from the first battle of Boonville on June 17, 1861—the first land battle of the Civil War—to the coming of peace 4 long years later, Boonville's strategic border position made it a pawn for the conflicting forces in Missouri.

Thespian Hall filled many needs during the war. Federal troops were quartered there following the first battle of Boonville. It was used as a hospital for soldiers wounded in the second battle of Boonville.

As large forces of soldiers were stationed in Boonville for considerable periods of time, it is not surprising that "impromptu performances" should have been given in the theater to while away the anxious, idle weeks.

Sometime following the breaking up of the Thespian Society during the Civil War, the ownership of the building passed into other hands; but the social life of the community continued to find the Thespian Hall a congenial host.

The German Turn and Gesang Verein, organized during the fifties, used the theater for many years not only for the presentation of German and English plays, concerts, and for the meetings of gymnastic classes sponsored by the society, but also for the scene of its annual colorful fastnacht masque balls.

Architecturally speaking, the theater at this time appeared much as it did when it was completed in 1857. The interior woodwork was designed in the same stately Greek Revival spirit as was the exterior. From the lobby, with its box office, a sweeping curved stairway led to the second floor and folding doors opened into the theater proper. The beauties of the interior, however, that had charmed Boonville a generation before; its qualities of elegance in decoration and the elaborate stage machinery, had almost completely disappeared toward the close of the century. Col. D. Walker Wear, now boxing commissioner of New York, states that at the time he managed the theater movable hickory chairs were used for seats. Happily, though, the commanding architecture of the building, with its massive columns, remains unchanged.

In 1901 new managers of Thespian Hall announced their intention of modernizing the interior of the theater, but the historic building, proper, was saved from destruction.

Since about 1912 the old theater has been used as a motion-picture house, yet, in external appearance, Thespian Hall has been but little changed during its 80 years. It remains as "a unique relic of a frontier little-theater movement", and the oldest surviving theater, not only in the vast territory known as the Louisiana Purchase, but the oldest building of the kind west of the Allegheny Mountains.

Striking in architecture as Thespian Hall is, rich in history, symbolizing a superior early society, portraying the life of a pioneer people, it is due the present generation and others that are to come that the building be saved. I trust that the Federal Government may speedily take steps to help preserve such highly prized historic buildings. Once destroyed, they can never be replaced, but will be gone forever. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Investigation and purchase of water rights: For the investigation and establishment of water rights, including the purchase thereof or of lands or interests in lands or rights-of-way for use and protection of water rights necessary or beneficial in connection with the administration and public use of the national parks and monuments, and including not to exceed $500 for the maintenance, operation, and repair of one passenger-carrying vehicle, $25,000: Provided, That, in lieu of purchase, such lands, interests in lands, and water rights may be acquired under this appropriation by the exchange of service or equipment, including the construction of water lines or other improvements on privately owned lands when considered in the best interests of the Government.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that the language embodied in the proviso is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nevada desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of order, and I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCRUGHAM: Page 112, line 1, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Investigation and purchase of water rights: For the investigation and establishment of water rights, including the purchase thereof or of lands or interests in lands or rights-of-way for use and protection of water rights necessary or beneficial in connection with the administration and public use of the national parks and monuments, and including not to exceed $500 for the maintenance, operation, and repair of one passenger-carrying vehicle, $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been very much interested in those sections of this bill dealing with our national parks. The officials and employees of the National Park Service have been and are doing a wonderful work. They should receive the praise and gratitude of the membership of this House as well as the people of the country. These great parks have greatly increased our national wealth in dollars and cents, but more than that they have added to the happiness and health of the people of our country in a vast sum that cannot be estimated. My recollection of the facts shown by their last annual report shows that 6,000,000 people visited our 26 national parks last year, which would be an average of nearly 235,000 for each of these parks. All had an attendance of more than 50,000 except far-away Alaska. The great Carlsbad Caverns National Park in New Mexico, and not far away from my home city of El Paso, attracted 150,000 visitors, coming from every State in the Union, as well as many from foreign countries. These caverns are now conceded to be the greatest in the world, and the exploration work there is not complete, and their size and depth have not yet been determined. I want to invite you and your families and friends to visit Carlsbad Caverns, because it is impossible for me or I think any other person to adequately describe them. When you have finished your visit there you will find a paved highway from there to the beautiful city of El Paso, where it will be my pleasure to extend you a hearty welcome and try to contribute something to your entertainment. I also promise to take you across the Rio Grande into the Republic of Mexico, and I think the day is not far distant when you will also find a paved highway from El Paso and Juarez into the City of Mexico. At a later date I hope to discuss this highway from Juarez to Mexico City with you, because I think our Government can contribute much to the realization as well as the success of that enterprise, and I am quite certain that the project is entitled to your hearty cooperation.

What I rose to say, however, in the very few minutes allotted to me is to tell you that I hope when this Department of the Interior bill comes up again 1 year from now that there will be included another section headed "Big Bend National Park."

On March 4, 1935, in the Seventy-fourth Congress, I introduced H. R. 6373 for the establishment of this great park, and that bill became law on June 20, 1935. It provided, in general terms, that 1,500,000 acres of land in Brewster and Presidio Counties, Tex., known as the Big Bend area, and all within the district which I have the honor to represent, should be established, donated, and set apart for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States. It also provided that the United States should not purchase by the appropriation of public money any of the land mentioned, but all should be secured by public and private donations.

With your permission and in order that you may have a better idea of the possibilities of this area I read you from the report which accompanied the bill that I just mentioned:

The Big Bend region, within which the proposed park is to be located, is the triangular portion of southwest Texas enclosed by the big bend of the Rio Grande on the east, west, and south and roughly by latitude 30 degrees on the north. It comprises approximately 5,500 square miles. In general character it is a semiarid plain, verging on desert, through which a group of mountain ranges, principally the Chisos, have been thrust. These constitute the southernmost spur of the Rocky Mountains. Of these the Chisos Range "Phantom", the highest and most rugged, attaining an altitude of 7,835 feet, is literally a biological island.

The Big Bend area is the last great wilderness area of Texas. No railroad line transgresses its vastness. Its few roads are largely makeshift, leading in from the north, or improved wagon trails serving its few ranches and mining claims. The nearest thing to a town which exists are the two mining camps of Terlingua and Study Butte, some 25 miles west of the Chisos Range.

The reason for the long isolation of this area is its low economic value. Aside from the two quicksilver mines, there has been no need for the arteries of trade, and the semiarid character of the plains surrounding the group of mountain ranges has offered little to agriculture save scattered areas for grazing.

The varied forest cover in the Chisos is still virgin. Large mammals such as deer, bear, panther, and fox still survive. The vegetation of the surrounding semiarid plains is principally a growth of chaparral and cactus. The forest cover in the higher levels of the Chisos, however, is extensively varied, with Douglas spruce, pine, junipers, oaks, and hackberry well represented.

The entire Big Bend region, comprising some three and a half million acres, would probably not be considered in its entirety as a national park area since the northern portion thereof consists principally of dry plains having no superlative features. To the south, however, the landscape is dominated by mountain ranges and is felt to be of high caliber to rank well as a national park. In the Chisos Mountains the visitor is agreeably surprised at the colorful rock expanses, rose-colored and tinged with faint greens and yellows.

One of the dramatic features in this area is the Rio Grande itself, which, in its tortuous course, cuts through three steep-walled canyons, the Santa Helena, the Mariscal, and the Boquillas, and meanders over flat river plains between.

The romance of old frontier Mexico is in the atmosphere of the Big Bend region. In the Chisos Mountains the visitor is continually aware of its presence. The outstanding views in three directions carry the eye over into the mountains of Old Mexico. From the south rim, over 5,000 feet above the eye obtains the most dramatic panorama of the Chisos—a 200-mile sweep of American and Mexican terrain. Below the Rio Grande winds through walled canyons and river flood plains. As a unit of the national park system the region would be unique in this international flavor.

The scenic standard of the Mexican side is apparently similar to that of the American.

This would become one of our greatest national parks if it were well within the interior of the country. Lying as it does, however, along the Mexican border, it will become the great international park of probably the entire world. The Mexican Government is greatly interested in the matter. Secretary Ickes on February 27, 1935, addressed a letter to the President in which he said, in part:

The possibility of an international park in this region meets with my approval, and I recommend that if the legislation is passed by Congress authorizing the establishment of a national park on the United States side of the international boundary line the Mexican Government be invited to cooperate with the United States in the establishment of such an international park.

In addition to providing a great playground for the people of these two great nations, it would do much to promote the very friendly relations now existing between the United States and Mexico. Mexico is now preparing to establish its park, and a great international bridge across the Rio Grande is proposed to connect the two parks and the two nations.

In order that the State of Texas provide this great tract of land free of cost to the United States, there was introduced in the Legislature of Texas, which is now in session, a bill to appropriate $1,400,000 to purchase 648,000 acres not now owned by the State, in order to meet the demands of the Interior Department. The State of Texas already has title to 140,000 acres of this land, and the Federal officials here say the park can be established if they are delivered title and possession to 788,000 acres.

Several days ago the Senate of Texas passed a bill appropriating $750,000 toward the purchase of this land, and I am happy to report that today the House of Representatives appropriated a like sum. I have every reason to believe that the Governor of Texas will approve this bill and that any further necessary money will later be appropriated for the purchase of the entire tract. It seems quite a coincidence that this bill should have passed both houses of the Texas Legislature today, while this bill providing our present national parks is under consideration.

We have the assurance that when title to this land is delivered that the Federal Government will begin its great development there, as well as operate and maintain the parks with the same interest and high standard of efficiency now prevailing at the existing national parks.

I indulge the hope and confidence that when this land is acquired and donated to the Federal Government that you will then show the same interest and liberality in its development and maintenance as characterizes your action today toward our other parks. A little later I will be pleading with you for adequate appropriations to carry out this great undertaking. Many of you will live to see the day when it will rank in importance, interest, and attendance with Yellowstone and Yosemite.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. THOMASON of Texas was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and general expenses, public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of public buildings, monuments, memorials, and grounds in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, including The National Archives Building; per-diem employees at rates of pay approved by the Director, not exceeding current rates for similar services in the District of Columbia; rent of buildings; demolition of buildings; expenses incident to moving various executive departments and establishments in connection with the assignment, allocation, transfer, and survey of building space; traveling expenses and carfare; leather and rubber articles and gas masks for the protection of public property and employees; arms and ammunition for the guard force; not exceeding $13,000 for uniforms for employees; and the purchase, maintenance, repair, exchange, storage, and operation of four motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; $7,137,280, of which amount not to exceed $5,036,980 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $500,000 shall be available for major repairs and improvements to public buildings, monuments, memorials, and grounds in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the superintendent of meters of the Department of the Interior shall hereafter take the statement of the meters of the several department buildings in the city of Washington, and render to the General Accounting Office the consumption of gas and electricity each month in said buildings, respectively.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: On page 113, line 7, strike out "$7,137,280" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,175,900."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call to the attention of the House that reducing this amount by $961,380 is still an increase over the appropriation granted for looking after buildings in the District last year of $200,000. I want to cut it down $961,000, yet it is an increase of $200,000 over what it was a year ago. With the rapid strides that are being made with this Interior Department to increase the number of bureaus and departments it will be a top-heavy and burdensome bureau; one of the most burdensome bureaus in the Federal Government.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman mean to say that the sum allowed in the bill is more than $1,000,000 more than it was last year?

Mr. RICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAY. For what?

Mr. RICH. Well, I would have to get all the justifications and bring them here and it would take more than my 5 minutes. I do not want to be staggered trying to give you all of these things, but I think it is worth while for the House to know a few of these things.

Many people are becoming discouraged at the lateness of the hour because I am trying to hold this bill down. You do not know what is going on. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON] can jump all he pleases, but he does not know what is in this bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will you tell us what is going on?

Mr. RICH. I am trying to, but there is so much noise I cannot make myself heard. [Applause.]

I want to call attention to how we spend some of this money that was spent through the Interior Department under W. P. A.:

Remodeling Potomac Park last year cost over $65,000; beautifying the Mall, $94,000 for sidewalks.

You spent in the Mall proper, for walks, gutters, and roadways, over $467,000.

You spent in Union Square over $229,000.

You spent for planting holly trees around the Tidal Basin, with the cherry trees, over $8,414, yet you talk about cutting the cherry trees down in order to find space to build the Jefferson Memorial.

You paid for remodeling the old Pierce flour mill in Rock Creek Park over $26,000. Think of it! I could build a whole new flour mill for $26,000.

You paid for new plans in Rock Creek Park over $11,000.

You spent for developing a study of the East Capitol Park Street alone over $9,000.

You spent for a study of Rock Creek pollution over $19,000.

You spent for rehabilitation of the other parks in the District of Columbia over $265,000.

You spent for tree surgery in these parks over $36,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman, chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is the gentleman addressing his remarks to his amendment or is he making a political speech?

Mr. RICH. I am trying to show the Members of Congress what we are spending money for in the District of Columbia, in the public parks; it should interest every Member of Congress. Wait until I go outside of the District and I will show you some items. You will get your eye teeth cut. I know these items will be of vital interest to all taxpayers in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 1 hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Well, I could use it telling of the most ridiculous way you voted to spend Federal funds, and the Members of Congress should know it. You will vote tomorrow to give the President one and one-half billion dollars to do the same thing over again. It should make you stop, look, and listen.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

After listening to the beautiful political speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I want to state there have been quite a few new activities added to the department in the District of Columbia. In addition to that, there was $500,000 for repairs. We cut that $500,000 down by $70,000, but there is an additional $135,130 to increase the salary of custodial employees from $1,080 to $1,140 per annum. I am wondering if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] would object to increasing the salaries of these employees? I understand some of them have worked for 34 years without an increase. This information was given to me by the president of the United Government Employees, Inc. Over 2,000 of these employees live here in the District and are trying to raise families on a salary of $1,080 a year.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman would look, he would notice that the gentleman had left the figure of $200,000 in, so that that could be taken care of. He did not cut the whole thing down the way he should have.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No. It comes out of that total amount. If we cut that part of it out, we will probably prevent these 2,000 employees from receiving an increase in their salaries.

I think they are deserving of this increase. Just think of trying to live in the city of Washington on $1,080 a year. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: Page 113, line 8, strike out "$5,036,980" and insert "$4,536,980."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to some of the other money that was spent in the parks here in the city of Washington. On Meridian Hill Park, at Sixteenth Street and Florida Avenue, they spent $137,725.09. They spent for plantings for the parks an amount of $10,708.

Here is an item that ought to shock some of you Members: For moving the tennis courts and swimming pool from the Monument Lot to other sections of the city they spent the sum of $204,516.82. How it could have cost so much I cannot conceive.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that Meridian Hill Park, to which the gentleman referred, was turned over to the Government by Mrs. Henderson under a Republican administration, and they accepted her terms on the gift to keep the park up as she requested.

Mr. RICH. I may say to my friend the gentleman from New York that I was up in that park last year and strolled over it time after time to get exercise. I came to the conclusion that it was a very fine park, but I could not see what they could spend $130,000 for to improve the park. It is a beautiful place, I admit. It is much more beautiful than anything I have in my own home town in the line of a park. It is a park of which any city could be proud. Where they spent the money I cannot imagine.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. MAY. It happens that I have lived at the Roosevelt Hotel ever since I came to Congress, and still live there. I have been up in Meridian Hill Park many times and was up there last year, but other than a few trees and some shrubbery planted there I do not know what they did.

Mr. RICH. Here is the justification given us by the Secretary of the Interior. It says that $130,725.09 was spent on Meridian Hill Park, and the gentleman can look at it for himself. Where does this money go? What do they do with it?

Here is another item covering expenses and salaries of the Washington office for the investigation of roads and trails in the District, $100,591.22. Think of it! One hundred thousand five hundred and ninety-one dollars to look over the roads and trails in the District of Columbia.

Expenditures on the White House for the past year out of this fund were $168,000. Too much money I will admit. Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise not in opposition to the amendment but to make a brief statement.

A great many Members have asked me how far we expect to go with the bill this evening. I may state that it has been agreed that the Committee will rise when we reach page 114. We think this will be in a very few minutes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. When does the gentleman expect to complete the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Tomorrow.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I understand that we meet tomorrow at 11?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In other words, as soon as the House meets tomorrow this will be the order of business?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It has been agreed that this will be the order of business when the House meets tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 46, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, National Capital parks: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, Arlington Memorial Bridge, George Washington Memorial Parkway, Federal parks in the District of Columbia, and other Federal lands authorized by the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), including the pay and allowances in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 27, 1924, as amended, of the police force for the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway and the George Washington Memorial Parkway, and the purchase of one passenger-carrying automobile and operation, maintenance, repair, exchange, and storage of three automobiles, revolvers, ammunition, uniforms, and equipment, per-diem employees at rates of pay approved by the Director not exceeding current rates for similar services in the District of Columbia, the hire of draft animals with or without drivers at local rates approved by the Director, traveling expenses and carfare, and leather and rubber articles for the protection of public property and employees, $176,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the last paragraph. It creates additional duties and imposes discretion in the Director of the Service. This language appears on page 114, line 23. It imposes additional duties on the Director.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order at all. I am wondering if the gentleman is serious in making the point of order and really cares to press it?

Mr. TABER. I do not make points of order that are not serious.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The RECORD shows that the gentleman in at least some cases does not know what they are or else he was not serious in presenting them.

Mr. TABER. The RECORD shows most of them have been sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I beg to differ with the gentleman, and suggest he examine the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquires of the gentleman as to whether or not this language is intended to increase or add new duties to the Director?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would say it does not, and restricts the rates. It states they are not to exceed the current rates.

The CHAIRMAN. Are these draft animals hired now with or without drivers?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am not sure I can give the Chair that information.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. They are hired with or without.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to ascertain whether or not this changes existing law; that is, whether there is a change in the method in which these animals have to be hired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is my information at the present time they are hired either way, with or without.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the necessity for this language, then?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the Chair it has been in the appropriation bill several years and there have been no changes.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact it has been carried in previous bills does not necessarily mean it is in order. Unless the gentleman can cite some provision of law which would control the question, the Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is good.

In the absence of a citation, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Page 114, after line 6, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Salaries and expenses, National Capital parks: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, Arlington Memorial Bridge, George Washington Memorial Parkway, Federal parks in the District of Columbia, and other Federal lands authorized by the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), including the pay and allowances in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 27, 1924, as amended, of the police force for the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway and the George Washington Memorial Parkway, and the purchase of one passenger-carrying automobile and operation, maintenance, repair, exchange, and storage of three automobiles, revolvers, ammunition, uniforms, and equipment, $176,000.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, there is a growing demand from all parts of the United States and its Territories for comprehensive information regarding suitable aviation instruction courses for our public schools. This information should be furnished by the Commissioner of Education in the Department of the Interior. Aviation enters both the educational and vocational fields. However, as it relates to school work it is chiefly educational. The Commissioner should be authorized by Congress to conduct a study and disseminate his findings and recommendations in a manner which will best meet the educational requirements of the public.

In considering educational and vocational training and the appropriations therefor, due weight should be given to the importance of disseminating information having to do with aviation-instruction courses for our schools. This information should have as its objectives (1) the broadening of the reader's horizon with respect to progress made in aviation and its place in our commercial, industrial, and social life; (2) providing outlines for suitable elementary academic background instruction for secondary schools in such subjects as aerodynamics and the theory of flight, the airplane and its engine, meteorology, and map reading; (3) furnishing information on model airplane building and model airplane clubs in the public schools and other organizations; (4) providing data on occupational opportunities in aviation, including educational and training requirements, where training can be secured, and expense of such training; (5) supplying outlines and recommending programs for training in the various aviation industries, including information regarding Federal aid; (6) mapping outlines for extension courses for those employed in some phase of aviation; (7) suggesting procedure for surveying aviation training needs in a region or locality; (8) indicating procedure for the improvement of aviation personnel by conference methods.

In order to bring about such a program I have introduced a bill, H. R. 69, to which I invite the attention of the Members and for which I ask your support.

The Office of Education recently published a commendable bulletin of 78 pages on the subject "Aviation in the Public Schools." It is the result of a careful study of conditions relating to aviation education in various parts of the country, and from contacts made with individuals well informed on the value of aviation to education and the value of education to aviation. It is evident from this bulletin to those who are acquainted with what is being done in aviation education in European countries that the United States lacks a coordinated program of aviation education, because no central governmental agency has been delegated this responsibility.

The publication was written because of a constant urge for such material from schools either carrying on or contemplating some phase of education in which aviation should figure, and from the aircraft industries finding themselves unable to give satisfactory answers to queries propounded to them through correspondence, and from requests made directly to the office from individuals wishing the type of information contained in the publication.

The preliminary chapter of this bulletin discusses in a brief manner the contrast between aviation during the years of its early development and today. As a mere matter of information, it is pointed out that the youth of today should have available vital information concerning the commercial status of one of its most important methods of transportation. From a mass of unorganized material the author, Mr. Robert W. Hambrook, has selected such information as seemed pertinent for the purpose.

The second chapter of the book points out how a live subject of almost universal interest to young persons may be used as a conveyor for conventional school subjects. It is shown that a boy may easily learn such subjects as algebra, physics, meteorology, mechanics, and materials through his interest in aviation, and that an aviation course may well become a part of a well-rounded high-school course. It does not mean, however, that flight training as yet is recognized as a part of secondary-school programs, although some excellent courses are referred to in the publication where actual flight is being given in connection with high-school programs. No uniformity is shown to exist in the use of aviation in public schools—this perhaps being the result of having no central agency responsible for securing information and making it available to school systems.

Model aircraft is dealt with in a separate section, and is shown to be an excellent source of leisure activity, giving to the individual a vast amount of valuable information and providing him with an interesting recreation. A number of national organizations are, at present, interested in model aircraft programs, even though no central agency is available for assisting such activities.

The fourth chapter discusses occupational opportunities in various phases of aviation. Some research has been done on this subject previous to the work carried on by the Office of Education. However, the necessarily limited discussion of this subject indicates that a great deal more should be done for the purpose of guiding young men and women who wish to be employed in aviation. The study on which this chapter is written was carried on with operators of air lines and aircraft factory personnel.

The last section of the bulletin deals with training for aviation occupations. It is merely a digest of a larger publication, Vocational Training for Aviation Mechanics, prepared by the Federal Board for Vocational Education a number of years ago.

The Office of Education has been able to offer a limited amount of service to aviation programs where Federal aid was provided.

The publication, Aviation in the Public Schools, represents a careful thinking out of the phases of aviation which are of national importance as related to public education. Each phase discussed is one which at small cost could be developed on a much broader basis through a centralized agency. H. R. 69 asks that authority be given the Office of Education for a necessary extension of the type of work represented in Aviation in the Public Schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BROOKS, Mr. BEITER, and Mr. VINSON of Georgia asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the airport bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conference committee on the second deficiency bill may have until midnight tonight to file its report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RUTHERFORD, Mr. OLIVER, and Mr. SNELL asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF TERMS AND PROVISIONS OF RIO GRANDE COMPACT

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7091) to give the consent and approval of Congress to the extension of the terms and provisions of the present Rio Grande compact, signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on February 12, 1929, and heretofore approved by act of Congress dated June 17, 1930 (Public, No. 370, 71st Cong.).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent and approval of Congress is hereby given to the extension of the terms and provisions of the present Rio Grande River compact, signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on February 12, 1929, and approved by act of Congress dated June 17, 1930 (Public, No. 370, 71st Cong.), for the period of 1 year from June 1, 1937, to June 1, 1938: Provided, That this act shall be effective only on ratification by the legislatures of the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas pursuant to the provisions of article 14 of said compact.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker and Members, Congress in 1930 approved a compact which had been entered into between the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas in 1929, under which these States were to undertake to work out and agree upon an equitable division of the waters of the Rio Grande River. The compact expired on June 1, 1935, but it contained a provision by which it could be extended from time to time by request of the legislatures of the compact States.

The States having failed to arrive at a settlement, the Seventy-fourth Congress passed an act, Public, No. 98, H. R. 7873, extending the life of the compact from June 1, 1935, to June 1, 1937.

At this time the States have again failed to arrive at an agreement and the pending bill, no. 7091, provides for an extension of the life of the compact for 1 year, or until June 1, 1938. I am advised that the legislatures of the three States have passed the necessary legislation specified in the original compact requesting the extension, and the language of this bill, it will be noted, provides that it shall be effective only on ratification by the legislatures of the three States pursuant to the provisions of the compact.

Mr. Speaker, immediate action on this bill was most urgent, due to the brief remaining time, and since the bill was only introduced on Monday, I want to express my appreciation of the action of the chairman of the Committee on Irrigation, Hon. COMPTON I. WHITE, in calling his committee together for consideration of the bill and the prompt action of the committee in reporting the bill favorably this morning. I also desire to thank the minority leader [Mr. SNELL] for his courtesy in permitting the present consideration of the bill at this late hour in the day, and to thank the Speaker [Mr. BANKHEAD], the majority leader [Mr. RAYBURN], and the House membership for permitting this legislation to pass by unanimous consent.

TEACHING OR ADVOCATING OF COMMUNISM IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 148) to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a committee report and a copy of the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Louisiana chain-store case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PLUMLEY, for 10 days, on account of official business.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR BACHMAN, OF TENNESSEE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of Tennessee concerning our beloved colleague the late Senator NATHAN L. BACHMAN, of Tennessee, and also the remarks of the Honorable LeRoy B. Bible in offering the resolution. I am sure Members of the Senate will be glad to read this excellent tribute to one of the most lovable, delightful, and popular Senators ever to have a seat in this body.

There being no objection, the remarks and resolution were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. Speaker, Lady O'Dell, and gentlemen of the house, the loss of our friend and distinguished Tennesseean, the Honorable NATHAN L. BACHMAN, a United States Senator from Tennessee, has not only lifted from the State of Tennessee but from the Nation, as a whole, one of the most distinguished and respected Members of the United States Senate.

Judge BACHMAN was a man who was loved, admired, and respected by all who knew him. The passing of our deceased friend has taken from the ranks of the Democratic Party one of its favorite sons and a man who was respected by the minority party of this body.

Mr. Speaker, to do honor to this distinguished Tennesseean, I move, you, sir, that the rules be suspended for the immediate consideration of a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington (Mr. Bible) asks unanimous consent that the rules be suspended for the immediate consideration of a resolution. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. Speaker, I move you, sir, the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to, as follows:

"Whereas the Almighty God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to take from this mortal life a distinguished son of Tennessee, the Honorable NATHAN L. BACHMAN, a United States Senator from Tennessee; and

"Whereas the Honorable NATHAN L. BACHMAN served the State of Tennessee as city attorney of Chattanooga, as circuit judge, and as associate justice of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, and as a United States Senator, a leader in the Presbyterian Church, highly educated and a progressive citizen and leader in civic affairs, and in his death the State of Tennessee has lost one of its most esteemed citizens: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Seventieth General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That we extend to the bereaved widow and daughter of our distinguished citizen our sympathy and condolence and that this resolution be spread upon the minutes of the journal of this body, and that the chief clerk of the house be instructed to mail a copy of same to Mrs. Nathan L. CONTINUANCE OF PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and have appropriately referred Senate Joint Resolution No. 27, adopted by the General Assembly of Tennessee, relating to and approving the continuance of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works. This resolution was introduced by the splendid delegation in the Legislature of Tennessee from Shelby County—my home county. The Public Works Administration has made a success in that county and in our entire State and its work is highly appreciated by our people.

The resolution of the General Assembly of Tennessee, presented by Mr. McKELLAR, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Whereas the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works has carried on an outstanding program of public-work improvements, including schools, public buildings, and other needed improvements in the various counties, municipalities and other political subdivisions of Tennessee; and

Whereas there are still many applications for public improvements pending, awaiting final approval of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works which are necessary and important to the welfare of the people; and

Whereas many of the political subdivisions of the State have spent considerable sums of money in preparing to make said improvements: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Tennessee (the house of representatives concurring), That we do hereby endorse and urge the continuance of a public-works program to give employment to needy citizens, and to carry on many worth-while public improvements; and that we do request our Senators and Representatives in the Congress to lend their support to a reasonable public-works program, and to aid in providing adequate funds therefor; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President, Secretary of the Interior, and the Senators and Representatives representing Tennessee in the Congress.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present various resolutions which I should like to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the appropriate committee; and particularly in relation to the pending low-cost housing bill, I should like to read a letter from the very distinguished Governor of the State of New York, and also to have printed in the RECORD a letter to the Governor in relation to the same matter. The Governor's letter to me reads as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, May 18, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing a photostatic copy of a letter which I have received from the City Affairs Committee of New York asking me to communicate with you in support of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill.

As you know, I have always strongly supported Federal legislation for low-cost housing and slum clearance. It is my earnest hope that Congress at this session will enact legislation of such nature.

With kind personal regards.

Very sincerely yours,

HERBERT H. LEHMAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions presented by the Senator from New York will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD; and the letter addressed to the Governor of New York will also be printed in the RECORD.

The letter addressed to the Governor of New York by the City Affairs Committee of New York is as follows:

THE CITY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE OF NEW YORK,
May 11, 1937.

Hon. HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
Governor of the State of New York,
Capitol Building, Albany, N. Y.

DEAR MR. GOVERNOR: We wish to enlist your powerful cooperation in support of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill. The city affairs committee views with grave concern recent developments with respect to this bill now pending in committee in both Houses of Congress. We learned from the public press that the fate of this bill is jeopardized through the obvious and urgent need for national economy. There is no group, we are sure, who appreciates more fully the need for economy in the expenditure of governmental funds than we. We, therefore, at the outset wish to stress that it is our carefully considered judgment that true governmental economy lies in the direction of just such a program for the development of low-cost housing as will be furthered by the passage of the Wagner-Steagall bill. In presenting our views therefore, as we do herewith, we wish to emphasize and reemphasize our firm conviction that better housing for the poorly circumstanced providing adequate, safe, and healthy living quarters with rents within their means will mean substantial savings to the community and to the Nation, vastly in excess of the costs provided for by the aforesaid bill.

The housing emergency, which has been developing during recent years, is Nation-wide and cannot be adequately solved by the local communities. If an adequate solution is to be reached, there must be national legislation to supplement local action. It is such national cooperation that the Wagner-Steagall housing bill represents. Patiently, and perhaps, too, hopefully, we awaited the outcome of congressional deliberations. For we thought that certainly, after the many years of untiring efforts on the part of those interested in better housing, we were on the eve of the most important housing legislation to be passed in this country.

But it appears that we did not fully foresee the determined opposition of the reactionary forces who are falsely stressing economy. Why should the Federal Government bear the cost of housing? they ask. Why not? The cost of housing has been and is still being borne by the millions of the underprivileged, forced to reside in the decaying fire traps euphemistically called homes. The costs are being borne by the babies, bodies rickety from faulty diet and inadequate sunlight; by the adolescents, minds crime-diseased by their filthy environment; by the children and adults, who are easy prey to tuberculosis and social diseases bred by foul living conditions. The costs are being borne by the slum-ridden communities which of necessity are forced to expand social service to combat the evil and chaotic results of the squalor and filth existent in slum areas. The costs are being borne, finally, by society, which pays an exorbitant toll in the form of overcrowded sanitoria and correctional institutions directly traceable, in large measure, to our slum conditions. These costs, not alone in human misery but actually in dollars and cents, are vastly greater than the subsidies provided by the Wagner-Steagall bill.

We are certain it is unnecessary to remind you of the facts in New York City, which are paralleled by the conditions in the other great population centers of the country.

That there are more than 500,000 families, consisting of approximately 1,750,000 persons, now residing in slum areas.

That slum areas provide an infant mortality rate double the city average.

That from 1911 up to December 1936 the total number of deaths resulting from fire in old-law tenements was 1,138, as against 271 deaths from fire in new-law tenements.

That the death rate from all causes was 93 percent higher in old-law tenements than in new-law tenements; the death rate from tuberculosis, 129 percent higher; from diphtheria, 97 percent higher; from typhoid fever, 55 percent higher; and from spinal meningitis, 119 percent higher.

That there has been shown a striking correlation between bad housing and crime.

Need we go on with the precise findings? The facts are known by all. The situation is becoming more acute daily in New York City. A general housing shortage is imminent. The vacancy listing bureau maintained by the New York City Housing Authority has demonstrated the striking sweep of vacancies toward the zero level. A low-rent housing program has become a matter of grave necessity.

A century of supposed housing reform has demonstrated with ever-increasing clarity that regulation as a solution to housing ills has failed miserably. Only a thorough-going Government program of subsidized housing can adequately cut through the maze of conflicting problems.

If housing reform is again prevented by this session of Congress, what social blindness would be shown. This would be economy of the most shortsighted kind. We call upon you as one of our great civic leaders not to permit housing reform to be sacrificed upon the altar of a false economy.

You have shown on many occasions your deep interest in the housing problem. We ask you to renew and redouble your efforts as one of the leaders of the citizens of New York to convince our congressional Representatives of the dire necessity for housing legislation. We can assure you that the overwhelming majority of the citizens of New York will be behind you in your endeavors.

Faithfully yours,

JOHN HAYNES HOLMES,
Chairman.

FRANCIS J. MCCONNELL, STEPHEN S. WISE,
Vice Chairmen.

The resolutions relative to the pending low-cost housing bill presented by Mr. WAGNER, were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Whereas there has been proposed what is known as the Wagner-Steagall low-rent housing bill, designated as Senate bill 1685 and House bill 5033; and

Whereas the purpose of the bill is for a long-time permanent program of Federal aid to State and local governments and other agencies to provide decent housing for families of low incomes and to eliminate the congested housing conditions of cities of larger population; and

Whereas it is believed to be for the best interests of the cities of the United States that such a bill be passed which will bring better living conditions for a great number of our citizens;

Now, therefore, the Common Council of the City of Klamath Falls, Oreg., does at this time go on record as approving the Wagner-Steagall low-rent housing bill, which bill is for the purpose of providing adequate housing for families of low income.

Resolution passed by the Bartow District Conference, Central Florida Conference, A. M. E. Church, on the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, Punta Gorda, Fla.

Whereas it has been proven that bad housing is detrimental to the health of the people in a community and that slums constitute an economic waste; and

Whereas it is an acknowledged fact that good housing for persons of low income cannot be provided through the ordinary channels of private enterprise; and

Whereas city, State, and National Governments have accepted the principles and acknowledged the obligation of governmental responsibility for the housing of persons who cannot be reached through private enterprise; and

Whereas it is necessary for the Government to bear a certain portion of the burden of financing the clearance of slums and the construction of low-rent housing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Bartow district conference endorses a bill introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HENRY B. STEAGALL, Congressman from Alabama, which reads as follows:

"A bill to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes."

Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hons. C. O. ANDREWS and CLAUDE PEPPER, Senators from Florida, and the following Representatives: Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON, Hon. WILLARD CALDWELL, Hon. MARK WILCOX, Hon. LEX GREEN, and Hon. JOSEPH HENDRICKS, from Florida.

Resolution passed by the Orlando (Fla.) District Conference, A. M. E. Church on the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, Mount Pleasant A. M. E. Church, Lakeland, Fla., 214 Ohio Street

Whereas it has been proven that bad housing is detrimental to the health of the people in a community and that slums constitute an economic waste; and

Whereas it is an acknowledged fact that good housing for persons of low income cannot be provided through the ordinary channels of private enterprise; and

Whereas city, State, and National Governments have accepted the principles and acknowledged the obligation of governmental responsibility for the housing of persons who cannot be reached through private enterprise; and

Whereas it is necessary for the Government to bear a certain portion of the burden of financing the clearance of slums and the construction of low-rent housing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Orlando (Fla.) District Conference, A. M. E. Church, endorses a bill introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HENRY B. STEAGALL, Congressman from Alabama, which reads as follows:

"A bill to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes."

Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hons. C. O. ANDREWS and CLAUDE PEPPER, Senators from Florida, and the following Representatives: Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON, Hon. WILLARD CALDWELL, Hon. MARK WILCOX, Hon. LEX GREEN, and Hon. JOSEPH HENDRICKS, from Florida.

NIAGARA FALLS CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Niagara Falls, N. Y., May 13, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We the delegates of the Niagara Falls Central Labor Union, American Federation of Labor, in meeting assembled, went on record and adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas we in Niagara Falls, N. Y., are urgently aware of the bad housing conditions here and elsewhere, of the acute housing shortage now rapidly growing worse, of the inability of private enterprise or local initiative alone to remedy this situation, and of the suffering caused by chronic unemployment in the building trades; and

"Whereas the Wagner-Steagall housing bill, if enacted, would provide the first concrete step toward solving this tremendous national problem: Be it therefore

"Resolved, That the Niagara Falls Central Labor Union heartily endorses the Wagner-Steagall bill and urges its immediate adoption by Congress; and be it further

"Resolved, That we hereby petition Congress, in view of the alarming need for new low-rent housing, that the financial provisions be doubled, while the administrative set-up remains intact."

Yours very truly,

WALTER A. KOSKE,
Recording Secretary.

LABOR DISPUTES ACT—RESOLUTION OF ALABAMA FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. WAGNER also presented a resolution, relative to amending the Labor Disputes Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On the right of agricultural workers for protection as other labor under the Wagner Labor Disputes Act

Whereas the Wagner Labor Disputes Act, guaranteeing the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court and has been described by President Green as the "Magna Carta for labor"; and

Whereas agricultural labor is specifically excluded from the provisions of this act; and

Whereas agricultural workers especially need the protection of such a law, inasmuch as their conditions, hours, and wages are worse than those in any other industry; and inasmuch as the right to organize is most bitterly opposed by the employers of farm labor: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Alabama Federation of Labor goes on record in favor of amending the Wagner Labor Disputes Act to extend its guaranty to organize and bargain collectively to all farm laborers.

TERCENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF PERE JACQUES MARQUETTE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library, I report back favorably, without amendment, House Joint Resolution 359, authorizing the President to proclaim the tercentenary of the birth of Pere Jacques Marquette, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the 1st day of June 1937 marks the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Pere Jacques Marquette, the first white man to explore the upper Mississippi Valley; and

Whereas it is eminently fitting that the tercentenary of the birth of this zealous missionary and fearless explorer should be commemorated by suitable patriotic, religious, and public exercises during such year: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on June 1, 1937, and inviting all people of the United States to observe the day and the anniversary year in schools, churches, and other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies commemorating the tercentenary of the birth of Pere Jacques Marquette.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that I cannot hear what is going on, and I do not know the nature of the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is a House joint resolution identical with one which has been introduced in the Senate authorizing the designation of June 1, 1937, as the tercentenary of the birthday of Pere Jacques Marquette. It merely provides for the commemoration of the day in honor of Marquette, who was, as the Senator knows, a great explorer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. GEORGE, the Committee on Finance was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1552) for the relief of John S. Monahan, and it was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

OPERATIONS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I submit a brief resolution which I ask unanimous consent to have read, and then I will ask for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 135), as follows:

Resolved, That the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board is directed to transmit to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the following information: (1) The total number of home mortgages and other obligations and liens secured by real estate acquired by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the State of California during the fiscal years ending 1934, 1935, and 1936; (2) the total value of such mortgages, obligations, and liens; (3) the total number of defaults in such State in each such fiscal year; (4) the total number of foreclosures in such State by such Corporation during each such fiscal year and the amount of money involved; (5) the total number of homes in such State acquired by the Corporation during each such fiscal year, the total amount of the loans made thereon, and the amount paid by the Corporation in acquiring such homes; (6) the total number of such homes resold by the Corporation during each such fiscal year and the amount realized therefor; (7) the number of agencies or offices maintained by the Corporation in such State and their addresses; (8) the name, address, position, and salary of all officers and employees (including permanent and part-time attorneys) employed by the Corporation in such State during each such fiscal year, grouping together all said persons employed in each such agency or office.

Mr. McADOO. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution, which merely calls for information.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does the resolution merely call for information from some commission?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the understanding of the Chair that the resolution merely calls for information.

Mr. McADOO. It merely calls for information with respect to the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the State of California. I have requested the information, but have been unable to obtain it otherwise.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator why he limits it to the State of California.

Mr. McADOO. The information called for is limited to the State of California merely because I have had a large number of complaints as to the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in that State, and I desire the information for the purpose of dealing with such complaints.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the "$12,000" and insert "$10,000", so as to read:

The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint a director at a salary of $10,000 per annum.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the amendment before the Senate provides for a reduction in the salary of the proposed director of the Civilian Conservation Corps from $12,000 per annum to $10,000 per annum. Involved in the amendment is no reflection of any sort upon the ability or efficiency of the present Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps or upon the character of work which he has done. I think the Civilian Conservation Corps has been a very fine activity and during the emergency has done work of a very high character. I can say without hesitation that it is one of the emergency activities which I think should be made permanent.

However, Mr. President, the proposal is now made to select this particular activity, put it on a permanent basis, and pay its director a salary larger than the salary which Congress in its wisdom has fixed as compensation for the services of such distinguished Senators, let us say, as the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], with his long public service, his brilliant ability, his splendid talent, his great contribution to the legislative history of the country; the distinguished senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], with his magnificent record of public service; the distinguished majority leader, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], whom we will all be sorry to lose, but who, we hope, will soon be translated to another body.

Mr. President, it is now proposed in the bill reported from the Committee on Education and Labor to give the incumbent of the office of Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps a salary in excess of that paid the Undersecretary of the Treasury, who is charged with the responsibility of the supervision of financing and refinancing the stupendous Government loans now necessary in this country.

It is proposed to pay him a salary in excess of the salaries paid the Under Secretary of State and the Counselor of the State Department, who are charged, under the Secretary of State and almost jointly with the Secretary of State, with responsibility for the supervision of the very delicate and multifarious foreign relations of the United States at this time, as well as supervision over the very delicate and important trade negotiations now going on between this country and other nations.

It is proposed to pay this official a salary in excess of that paid to the distinguished Under Secretary of the Interior who, in addition to the very efficient and able performance of the ordinary routine duties of the office of Under Secretary of the Interior, is also understood to "double in brass" as the principal administration representative on Capitol Hill. [Laughter.]

It is proposed to pay this official a salary very much in excess of that received by the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, who, after a long career of gallant and meritorious service to his country in the armed forces of the Nation, has at length been put in charge of preparations for national defense. General Craig receives a base salary of only $8,000 a year. Admiral Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations who, in the event of war, would be charged with the conduct of the naval defense of the United States, likewise receives a salary of $8,000 per year, as do also the Chief of Finance of the War Department and the Paymaster General of the Navy, who handle the vast hundreds of millions of dollars which we are now appropriating for armament and in preparation for another war.

The distinguished Solicitor General of the United States, charged with responsibility for defending in the Supreme Court of the United States the various acts passed by the present Congress and preceding Congresses, receives $10,000 a year.

Hon. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, who not only loans billions of dollars of public funds, but, unlike most other governmental lending and spending agencies, gets most of it back, receives a salary of $10,000 a year.

The members of the Securities Exchange Commission, one of the most important and beneficial activities of the administration, receive salaries of $10,000 each.

Members of the Federal Trade Commission, including the Chairman, performing some of the most important functions of the Government, and upon whom it is now proposed to impose even more important functions, receive salaries of $10,000 each.

Members of the Federal Power Commission, including the Chairman, with all their multifarious and important duties, receive $10,000 apiece.

The Chairman and members of the Federal Communications Commission receive only $10,000 apiece.

The Chairman and members of the Social Security Board, performing functions involving the welfare of millions upon millions of people and involving the handling of hundreds of millions of dollars, of billions of dollars perspectively in the future, receive $10,000 apiece.

The Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration, predicted by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to be one of the most important and far-reaching of our governmental agencies, receives only $10,000 a year.

Mr. President, in view of these few instances, selected from many others which could be exhibited, I submit that when putting the Civilian Conservation Corps upon a permanent basis there is no justification for paying the Director of that activity, excellent and efficient though his services may have been, more than is paid any other Government official in a comparable position.

It was said by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] yesterday that the only justification for this salary of $12,000 a year was the fact that Mr. Fechner, the present incumbent, had been receiving that salary under a temporary constitution of his activities. It is now proposed to make this activity permanent, however, and I think it should be made permanent; and when we come to make an activity permanent, the salary paid its director should be brought in line with the salaries paid other Government officials with comparable duties.

As I said in the beginning, my position in this matter has nothing to do with Mr. Fechner's personality. Mr. Fechner might resign, might go into some other business, might unfortunately be incapacitated, and some day, like all other mortals, he will die. I do not believe this establishment should be set up on a permanent basis with reference to any particular feeling for any individual. Therefore, I submit in all good faith, that in order to bring the activities of this bureau—because that is what it is—in line with others, my amendment should prevail, and the salary should be fixed at $10,000 a year rather than $12,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should not be true to my conscience or my convictions if I did not say something about the bill now pending before the Senate.

I have read in the newspapers that I have not always been very faithful to the projects of the New Deal; but, Mr. President, I desire to say that I take great pride in the fact that when this matter was first presented I had some modest part in the formulation of the original law for the establishment of the Civilian Conservation Corps. To my mind, no single law which has been enacted during recent years has been more far reaching in its beneficial effects than has that law.

We have great problems to face with regard to the youth of the land. I have long contended that the objectives of education should be resurveyed. As I view the public schools it seems to me they are not measuring up to present-day conditions. In my opinion, too much emphasis is placed upon cultural studies and other subjects which, desirable as they are in themselves, do not, after all, fit the graduates of the school for the responsibilities which they must meet when they go into the world.

As I view the matter, the objectives of education should be three in number:

First, to fit the child for parenthood. That means a clean body and a clean mind.

Second, so far as may be possible, to fit him for livelihood.

Third, and more important than the others, to fit him for citizenship.

What I like about this bill—the first thing I shall speak of—is the first amendment reported by the Senate committee. On page 1, line 5, the committee recommends that the language "as well as vocational training" be stricken out, and that there be substituted therefor the words "and training for citizenship."

What can be more important than to have the young men covered by the provisions of this bill, between the ages of 17 and 23 years, taken away from surroundings which in many instances are not conducive to moral development or physical development or development in the line of citizenship?

I have seen these camps in operation. Within a few miles of my home in New York State have been located a number of the camps, and I have had occasion to visit them frequently. About 3,000 young men belonging to the C. C. C. were stationed in Orange County, N. Y., where they performed a splendid service in the control of floods in a valley where live about 10,000 subsistence farmers. In that particular region they did a piece of work of which engineers and skilled men might well be proud.

I have conversed with these men. I have found, from conversation with them, that their attitude toward life has been utterly changed by their experience. As I have met them I have been impressed by the fact that these men, coming sometimes from sections where they might well have fallen under influences which would make them bad citizens, have been gathered in camps where they have had instruction and experience and example which will make them better citizens.

I have been interested in the camps primarily, perhaps, because of the development of health. Young men, many of them coming from the slums of the cities, where they lived under the most insanitary conditions, have been taken into the C. C. C. camps and given instruction in personal hygiene; they have had the benefit of out-of-door living, and have developed a sturdiness of physique which they never otherwise could have had, and, unless one has a healthy body he is almost certain to have an unhealthy mind. Nothing is more important to the development of character, to the development of good morals and decent thoughts, than vigorous physical health. Then added to that of which I have already spoken, is the development of these men in citizenship.

I wanted to say that much because of my great interest in this movement and the full approval which I have in my heart for it.

We now come to the director of this service, Mr. Robert Fechner.

I never knew Mr. Fechner until he entered upon this work, but I have not only developed for him respect and appreciation of his management of the camps, but I have developed for him a real affection because of his fine personal qualities. I think the President might have combed the entire country and all of its citizenship without finding a man better equipped for the office by personal qualities than Mr. Fechner. A man of the highest character, of the most kindly spirit, an organizer of remarkable ability, the choice of the President was well directed.

Regarding the salary question, my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has spoken about the salaries of various distinguished Members of this body. In my opinion, it is one thing to become a Member of the United States Senate. In spite of all criticism that we hear regarding the Members of the body or the group as a whole, there does attach to the office some degree of honor. There is not any glory to be had by Mr. Fechner. Modest as he is, he works in a corner, seeking no limelight or publicity. He gives his entire thought to one thing. He has no political ambition, so far as I know. He has no outside interests. He clips no coupons. He depends wholly upon this salary. I am glad the committee saw fit to continue the salary fixed by the House, and to carry it over into this bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the Senator that the House cut the salary to $10,000. As I understand, the House committee recommended $12,000, but the House cut the salary to $10,000,

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am not surprised. I myself have been disappointed when I have made proposals in a committee which perhaps received the unanimous support of the committee, but which, having gone to the House, the eloquent tongue of some Member there has been sufficient to change the attitude of the Senate.

Mr. President, I hope that will not happen in this instance. So far as I am concerned, I want the salary restored to $12,000. I want Mr. Fechner to continue in this office, to go on with the fine work he has been doing, and I hope he will live many years to conduct the affairs of the C. C. C.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I was very much impressed with the argument of the Senator from Missouri, and I should like to ask the Senator from New York about it. The Senator from Missouri gave a list of officials of many bureaus and other activities of the Government whose salaries were fixed at $10,000 a year. That seems to be the universal salary we have been fixing for the officials of various bureaus and offices. Is there anything about the work of the particular office we are discussing that would warrant the occupant being paid a salary higher than is paid to those at the head of the other bureaus? Should we not try to fix a more or less uniform salary for officials of the Government who do practically the same kind of work?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a short statement in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I fully agree with the idea that there should be some uniformity in salaries where the services are similar and are of equal importance. Unfortunately, that is not the case here. I shall read now a list of the salaries of those occupying other positions to show the lack of uniformity. I think it would be a very wise thing to have an effort made to bring about uniformity, but I rather dislike to have the Senate begin the effort by reducing the salary of one individual when that would not bring about uniformity. I now read:

The Chairman and members of the Maritime Commission, $12,000.
The Comptroller of the Currency, $15,000.
Mr. Hopkins, Administrator of W. P. A., $12,000.
Colonel Hackett, Assistant Administrator of P. W. A., $12,000.
General Hines, Veterans' Administrator, $12,000—

I state it as my recollection that that was specifically voted on as a separate item in this body—

Interstate Commerce Commissioners, $12,000.
Tariff Commissioners, $11,000.
General Counsel, R. F. C., $12,500.
Manager, Alaska Railroad, $14,400.

Of course, we all know that Cabinet officers receive $15,000 each.

I also call attention to the fact that I had a very difficult time in obtaining a limitation of $17,500 on the salaries paid to their officials by corporations drawing large subsidies from the Government. On one occasion, I recall, an amendment I had offered was voted down in the Senate overwhelmingly, the amendment being to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, in which I asked for a limitation of $100,000 on salaries of officials of those corporations which found themselves in financial straits and borrowed from the United States Government.

I am calling attention to this to show the lack of uniformity, not only in Government salaries but in connection with the salaries of the officials of agencies which borrow from the Government, or obtain huge subsidies from the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me again?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember the effort the Senator from Alabama made when we were considering the loans to be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He made several motions. He first provided that there should not be loaned anything to corporations which were paying any of their officials more than $100,000 a year, and then he kept on coming down in the amount as the amendments were defeated. In my weak way I supported the Senator from Alabama in every attempt he made at that time. I myself think the Senate ought to have agreed to the first amendment he offered—that corporations paying salaries of a hundred thousand or a hundred and fifty thousand or two hundred thousand dollars a year to their officials were in no position to come to the Government and ask for loans of money in order to save them from bankruptcy.

I do not think that has anything to do with the salary of Mr. Fechner, however, as I see the situation. The Senator from Alabama mentions Cabinet officials. Of course, we realize such an office is a more responsible one than the one under consideration. The members of the Maritime Commission probably would come nearer to being a fair illustration. I think the Senator is correct in the statement he has made about Mr. Fechner. I agree with him when he tells of the work this man has done. He refers to the fact that he is a poor man, that he is depending on his salary, that he has no political ambition, and that he ought to be given a larger salary for the good work he is doing.

The greatest pay that can ever come to this man, or to anyone else for the kind of work Mr. Fechner is doing, or, so far as I know, for any other kind of work, is the satisfaction he gets in his heart that he is doing a good work. But, as I see the situation, there is nothing about this position which requires effort and strain on a man's mind and on his faculties of all kinds which would justify an increase in his salary, for instance, above the salary of the chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, or of any of the members of the board. So it would be with the other salaries the Senator from Missouri has mentioned.

I cannot see any reason why now, when we are planning to save our country and our people from depression, and all the other difficulties that seem to have been heaped upon us, we should start out with a noble work like this, where great good has been done and can continue to be done, and pay the man who is at the head of it a salary that is larger by $2,000 than the salaries of other officials who are doing work which it seems to me requires a greater effort and brings less satisfaction to a man's mind and heart when he accomplishes the work. It seems to me that $10,000 is a large enough salary for Mr. Fechner. I do not minimize in any degree the character or the quality of the work he is doing. I agree that he is doing a great work.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield again?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. There is no question that the salary of $12,000 is larger than the salaries of some of the other officials performing like duties. It is also true that the salary of $10,000 would be smaller than the salaries of some other officials with comparable duties. I have always been one of those who felt that there was little reason for making so many of these salaries above those which are paid to the Members of the House and of the Senate.

Mr. Fechner started in his work at $12,000, and has received $12,000 since the work began. It is a matter for the Senate to determine—and I am not speaking and shall not speak in any way to try to persuade the Senate to take one side or the other; but I think Senators are entitled to the facts, and I have tried to give them to the Senate. An examination shows that in some instances those performing comparable duties receive greater salaries, and in other instances, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, those performing comparable duties receive smaller salaries. So we have both sides.

Mr. Fechner has been receiving $12,000 since he went into the service. I would favor some kind of effort in this body to bring about a fair uniformity of salaries, and I would be in favor of applying it to every individual corporation in this Nation that depends for its money upon the Federal Treasury. I have never been able to understand the sensitiveness which I have sometimes found against paying fair salaries for Government work, while there is a willingness to lend millions of dollars for the payment of large and unfair salaries by subsidized institutions; and with that viewpoint the Senator from Nebraska has uniformly agreed.

I do not intend to occupy the floor longer on this subject. As the committee reported the salary, it is the salary which has been heretofore drawn. It is not out of line with some salaries, while it is out of line with others. I am very frank to say that the salaries which are out of line ought to be adjusted, either by lowering those which are too high or by raising those which are too low. I very much regret to see the Senate begin on one individual who we all think has done a good job.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York allow me to reply just one word to the statement of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Alabama is in agreement that we ought to have uniformity of salaries insofar as we can, depending upon the difficulties of the work and the office to which the salary applies. He is in favor of some move that would bring that about, and I agree fully. But I desire to call to his attention that the very fact that we make the salary $12,000 for this official will be used as an argument for increasing salaries of many officials whose salaries are below $12,000 instead of leading to a reduction in higher salaries.

If we provide for a $12,000 salary we are taking the first step, as I see it, to lay the way open for chiefs of bureaus and other officials who are getting less than $12,000 to come in and ask for $12,000, and we cannot well deny the increase of such salaries from $10,000 to $12,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me in order that I may ask a question of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to inquire whether the salary of $12,000 per annum for the Director was fixed by the act creating the Civilian Conservation Corps, or whether it was fixed by Executive order. In other words, did Congress in the first instance fix the salary at $12,000 per annum?

Mr. BLACK. I shall have to look into that question, but it is my recollection that the salary was fixed by Executive order. So far as I am concerned, I may say that if I had been fixing the salary, or had been voting to fix the salary originally in this bill, and it had not already been placed at $12,000, I should have been perfectly satisfied with the amount of $10,000. I have no hesitation in saying that.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is familiar with the fact that the salary of Mr. Hopkins, to which reference was made a moment ago, was also fixed by Executive order, and that his salary when he was Director of Relief was fixed at $10,000 a year by Executive order; and it was only after he was given treble duty, first as Director of the C. W. A. and later of the W. P. A., as well as in addition being a member of the National Emergency Council, that his salary, even by Executive order, was raised to $12,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I feel that these interruptions have been illuminating to the Senate; but I read in a newspaper the other day the statement that my speeches usually consist of colloquies with my colleagues. That is because I have always yielded on appeal. I am glad I did so today, but I simply want to put myself on record that if I live to the beginning of another session, no one then is going to interrupt me. I am going to make my speeches and sit down, and they will be much briefer in consequence. But I now want to refer to the discussion to which we have listened.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the Senator's announcement, will he kindly yield to me now? After this session I may not get a chance to interrupt him.

Mr. COPELAND. For what purpose does the Senator ask that I yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to make an observation with reference to the comparison that is frequently made here between salaries of executive officers and salaries of United States Senators.

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that that is a legitimate matter of comparison, and I am not going to discuss the question whether congressional salaries are too large or too small. We all have our individual opinions about it. I have always felt that the value of a man's services in some executive department could not necessarily be measured by fixing his salary at the same rate that we draw as Members of the Senate and Members of the House. Certain honors and certain distinctions go along with membership here which are not enjoyed by some man who buries himself in a department at the head of some great agency, with a great responsibility, where the public rarely ever hears of him, and where there is no element of intangible compensation in the way of public notice that may come to him, which I think to some extent differentiates such a position from the positions occupied by Members here. I think membership in this body is almost the greatest honor that can come to an American citizen; and none of us who serves here for $10,000 a year would exchange his or her position on the floor for the position of an executive in some department who may draw $12,000.

I do not know how I shall vote on this particular amendment. I am not concerned, as a matter of principle, whether the salary in question shall be $10,000 or $12,000. I think, however, certain compensations come to Members of the Senate which must be taken into consideration, which are not enjoyed by others who are quietly performing their duties in some department, and which make it a little unfair to undertake to fix a uniform salary for executive officers upon the basis of our compensation as Senators.

I desired to make that observation because I think it is worthy of consideration.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am much obliged to the Senator from Kentucky. I had said practically the same thing before he came into the Chamber. I wish to remind him that the position of leadership, as I understand, does not carry any additional salary, but it does bring new responsibilities and more work. That is merely a passing observation.

Mr. President, I shall not yield again because I desire to finish. It is lunch time and Senators who desire to go to lunch are cordially invited to do so.

Reference was made a little while ago to the salary of Jesse Jones. Jesse Jones is a friend of mine. I am very fond of him. Jesse Jones, however, could afford to come and work for the Government if he had to pay something for the opportunity.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President; I do not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York declines to yield.

Mr. CLARK. I can take the floor in my own right when the Senator from New York has concluded.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly the Senator can.

Mr. President, I must now yield to the Senator because I do not want to be placed in the position of being discourteous.

Mr. CLARK. I merely want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that while Chairman Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, has done a magnificent job from every governmental standpoint and deserves great credit for it, there have been other members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation who also received $10,000 a year and who have also done a superb job and who cooperated with Chairman Jones and deserve credit scarcely less great than that accorded to the Chairman himself.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I now desire to discuss these salaries briefly.

I used to be dean of a medical school, if I may be permitted a personal reference, and I received a salary certainly as liberal as the one we are discussing; but I also had the privilege of maintaining my private office, which contributed considerably more income. Mr. Fechner has no such opportunity. If he gives himself to this job for years to come as he has during the past years since the inauguration of this work, when he gets through—as he will some day—he will have no bank account or bonds or stock to maintain him in advanced life. He will have the satisfaction of having done a fine job; and I dare say, knowing him as I do, that so far as he personally is concerned, that in itself is a sufficient reward. But that will not maintain Mr. Fechner in the time of his old age and infirmity, if it should come to him. He is entitled to make some contributions to the future.

I noticed what my friend from Nebraska said, and I take second place to no man in this body in the respect and admiration held for him; but he speaks of no greater effort being required of the Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps than of the heads of some other agencies who are receiving the same salary as is suggested, and intimates that no greater effort is required of the Director than other men have to put forth to carry on their work.

In that connection, I desire to call attention to one position on the list which I have received from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]; and I feel free to refer to it because I have no idea even what the name of the man is, so if he should read these remarks he will know that what I say is not personal. But how can we compare the managership of the Alaska Railroad at $14,400 with the responsibility which Mr. Fechner has in caring for 300,000 young men coming from every part of our country, many of them, I am sorry to say, coming from associations which have not been good? How can we compare that responsibility with the responsibilities resting upon the management of a railroad in Alaska? How can we compare the responsibilities which I held as the dean of a college of 300 or 400 students with the responsibilities which Mr. Fechner carries as the head of a great group of 300,000 persons?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Of course we cannot compare them, but these inconsistencies and contradictions arise from the fact that Congress does not undertake to standardize these salaries at all. The reflection is upon Congress. Perhaps the man who is operating the railroad in Alaska would be very glad if he were out of that job and would be glad to get a job paying a salary of $10,000 a year.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the man who manages a railroad in Alaska, and does it well, has a chance to go into a railroad presidency somewhere in which he will receive $25,000 or $50,000 or even $75,000 a year. Mr. Fechner will have no such opportunity. Mr. Fechner's return will be the money which he receives from the Government, with no prospect of promotion to another place, or to engage in any other activity where he can earn more money.

When I think about some other men who are mentioned here I have no complaint to offer. I have no complaint to offer about the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Tariff Commissioners; but it is one thing to sit down with a body of associates and discuss with them the problems of the office and what can be done and quite another thing to be the independent, solitary figure at the head of a great organization such as is the C. C. C.

There he has placed upon him the responsibility, and he carries it all alone. He can only get aid and advice from the Senate and from the House, and he gets plenty of that. But, so far as his official associates are concerned, he has no aid. He is a solitary figure, sitting in an obscure corner of a building in Washington, poorly furnished at that; he has not the luxury of a mahogany desk and a great staff of assistants. He sits there to study the problems connected with the work in which he is engaged, and to receive reports from his agents in the field and determine whether a camp shall be removed from Wallkill in New York and placed somewhere else. He has to determine the fate of various activities engaged in by the men enrolled in the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Let me say here, Mr. President, that the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps have not been engaged in raking leaves and doing unimportant things. They have been engaged in improving the forests, the waste places, and the rivers of our country. They have done a work which will be of lasting benefit for generations. Sitting in charge of them and directing them is a man who has done his job well. I would not want the Congress to take any action which would seem in any sense to be a reflection upon the work he has done. He is entitled to have his hands held up and to be encouraged by us.

So, Mr. President, I hope there will be no serious effort made to reduce Mr. Fechner's salary. If the time comes when the Senate or the other House of Congress desires to consider all the positions embraced in the list prepared by the Senator from Alabama, and to equalize salaries, then at that time, if Mr. Fechner's salary is found to be excessive, let us make the change, but let us not now do a thing which may serve to discourage a man who occupies one of the strategic positions for the development of good citizenship in America.

If I had my way, and the Treasury could afford it, I would not have merely 300,000 young men in this organization; I would have a million there. I wish the same training, the same opportunities for out-of-door life, for the development of health, the development of mind and morals could be given to every boy in America. Of course, we cannot afford to do that; and the committee has determined that 300,000 should be the number. We ought not, however, now to say to Mr. Fechner, who is directing the great work of the Civilian Conservation Corps, "We are going to lower your salary because you are getting more than a Senator receives or more than some other official receives." In a spirit of fairness, in a spirit of justice to Mr. Fechner, I appeal to my brethren, let us not single him out at this time to lower his salary when we have before us a list of salaries far in excess of what he is now being paid.

So my plea is, that the Senate may pass the bill presented by the Senator from Alabama from the Committee on Education and Labor, and that there may be included in it not only provision for the permanency of the Civilian Conservation Corps but also the assurance to the great man who is directing it that we endorse him 100 percent and are proving it by continuing his salary; at the same time warning him, of course, that if the day comes when all salaries are reduced he must meet his fate. I plead with you, Senators, to stand by this man and to support this movement, because as I have said, in my opinion, it is the greatest monument to the present administration that has been enacted into law and made possible by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not want to take up unduly the time of the Senate; I think every Senator has about made up his mind how he is going to vote on this question; but I feel it my duty to pay tribute to and give testimony to what I consider the most marvelous piece of legislation that has been enacted during the present administration or any preceding one.

The C. C. C. camps and the manner in which they are conducted combine opportunities for industrial training, for the development of high moral standards, and for beneficial employment. I have seen boys who were seemingly without any object in life, by being brought in contact with the activities of the C. C. C., under the supervision of the officers having the camps in charge, receive a moral training, an educational training, a real vocational training, all combined, and, at the same time, produce work which of itself is beneficial to the community in which they work. I merely wanted to take occasion to state—not to repeat anything that has been said—my view as to the admirable work performed by the Civilian Conservation Corps.

I have no prejudice, one way or another, as to the salary of the director. I think it would be a mistake, as has been intimated by others, to reduce his salary now, for the reason that such a reduction might be construed in some quarters as an intimation that he had not earned the amount now paid.

I believe that the principle incorporated in the law creating the Civilian Conservation Corps, as made manifest by the C. C. C. camps, ought to be made permanent. I believe that our reformatories will largely be depopulated if the Civilian Conservation Corps is made permanent and extended, as it should be.

I have seen reformatories, and my observation has been that there is hardly ever an inmate who comes out any better than he went in. He is in an atmosphere under like condemnation with that which caused him to be sent there. Making this policy permanent would afford opportunity for employment outdoors, for training in the camps, and for wholesome work, and give young men a chance to stand on their own feet and to be recognized as a part of the economic system of our country. That is in every way desirable. I believe the time will come, if these camps are made permanent and extended, when the reformatories, as I have said, will be a thing of the past, except for those who are congenitally criminal.

It is my desire, Mr. President, to bear this testimony to the splendid work done by the Civilian Conservation Corps and to the character of the men who have it in charge. I pledge my vote to make it a permanent organization and part of the economic and social structure of our Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, one might get the idea from listening to the discussion—I do not think the Senator from New York, by any means, intended his remarks to be construed that way, although he almost said so in so many words—that if the salary of the Director of the Civilian Conservation Corps was fixed at $10,000 instead of $12,000, it would be a reflection upon the very able man who fills that office, and who probably, if this bill becomes a law, will be appointed to have permanent charge. Nothing that I have said, nothing that any other Senator has said that I have heard, can be, by any possible construction, considered as a reflection or criticism of the management of this great undertaking. In fact, it is because the management has been good that men who think as I do are in favor of making it permanent.

There is no reflection upon the Director who is in charge of this work, but evidence shows clearly, I think, that with some exceptions, the salary fixed is not in line with the salary usually fixed for similar work. It is said that there is not any honor connected with his office. Are we going to pay a man for lack of honor connected with his office by increasing his salary? I would not mention this if it had not been alluded to, but the salary paid the Director of the C. C. C. has been compared with a Senator's salary—if it is fixed at $10,000, it will be the same—and it is said that a Senator has great opportunity to get honor and renown. That depends, Mr. President. Follow the campaign of any Senator and see how much renown is accorded him by his opponents. Follow the campaign of any Member of the House of Representatives, or the candidate for any office who has to go before the people and fight out an election, and see how renowned he is considered to be. The head of this organization does not have to undertake an election campaign. Thank God, he does not. I do not want him to have to do so. His position, compared to that of a Senator, may lack in honor, and, as the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has said, the Director of the C. C. C. may have an office in a room that is not very well furnished, and he may be working in silence for the good of humanity, but the Director has a satisfaction in his own heart away beyond what any person can have who has to go through what a Senator has to go through.

The Director can save more money than can a Senator on the same salary. He has no office expenses. My judgment may be entirely wrong, but a man without the expense of making campaigns and contributing to campaigns, who can keep his entire salary of $10,000 because his office is provided him, and he has no expense whatever in connection with it, can live as well as most people ought to want to live. It is an ample salary, it seems to me.

No reflection is intended on the incumbent of the office. Those of us who are in favor of a $10,000 salary, so far as I know, want to make it permanent. At least we do not want to cut it off now. The Congress did not fix the salary at $12,000. The President in fixing the salary was moved undoubtedly somewhat by the fact that it was a temporary appointment and might not last long. When this movement was started no one knew how long it would last. I confess I have been very agreeably surprised at the good work which has been done not only for the country but for the boys themselves. I had some doubt about it when the movement started. The President did not know how long it was going to last. If we were fixing a man's salary for 6 months or a year, we would fix it differently from what we would fix it if he were to have a 10-year service or an unlimited service.

The great cry now everywhere is for economy. It is a time when we ought to practice economy. This is a small item, but a small item multiplied by a million makes a large item. It seems to me here is a good place to begin the practice of the economy which all of us want to bring about, and we can do it here without injury to anyone. If this salary should be fixed at $12,000 it would be an incentive to all governmental officials to demand an increase from $10,000 to $12,000, and they would have ground for the argument. They would have a precedent established by Congress and we could expect to be asked to make the increase. If we do not believe in it, we ought not to fix the salary at $12,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. A few years ago we enacted general legislation providing that no official in any department should receive a salary in excess of $10,000 except, as I recall, the Director of Veterans' Affairs. All salaries above $10,000 have been fixed in the Emergency bureaus alone because, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, it was believed they were temporary in their nature. I know of no place, except the Office of Director of Veterans' Affairs, where any official in a permanent department of the Government has a salary in excess of $10,000. If this is to be made a permanent agency of the Government, there is no reason for making an exception in this case.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, let us once and for all relieve the situation of the indirect charge, though not intended to be a charge I admit, that when, in setting up this new office, we are attempting now to reduce this salary from $12,000 to $10,000 it is a reflection on anyone. It is not a reflection on anyone. No one is complaining, so far as I know, about the work done by this organization. As I believe, $10,000 is an ample salary, and in times of distress like these through which we are now passing we ought to watch the little things which in the aggregate will become big things if we embark on a plan of increasing salaries, because, as I see it, that is what the fixing of this salary at $12,000 will have a tendency to bring about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$10,000", so as to read:

The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is authorized to appoint a director at a salary of $10,000 per annum.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when Mr. MCNARY's name was called). The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] was called from the Chamber. If present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I am not advised how the Senator from Mississippi would vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If present, he would vote "nay." I transfer my pair to my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], who, if present, would vote as I am about to vote. I vote "yea."

I announce the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] on official business, and the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. GIBSON] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

I also announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] has a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are detained from the Senate because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are detained on important public business. I am advised that if present and voting the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] would vote "nay."

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained on departmental business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] is detained on official business. On this question he has a pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea", and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 29, as follows:

So Mr. CLARK's amendment was agreed to.

NAVAL AIR STATION ON SAN FRANCISCO BAY, CALIF.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2049) to authorize the establishment of a naval air station on San Francisco Bay, Calif., and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 18, to strike out "$14,500,000" and insert "$13,500,000", and on the same page, in line 22, after the word "further", to insert: "That until such time as the Secretary of the Navy shall receive, on behalf of the United States, title to the tract of land authorized to be acquired by the act of June 24, 1936, free from all encumbrances, no money in excess of the authorized consideration for such tract shall be expended to carry out the purposes of this act on the naval air station authorized to be established by this act, or on any part thereof: And provided further."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I understand that when this bill was taken up unanimous consent was given to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, striking out all after the enacting clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the parliamentary situation to be that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] moved to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill, and that amendment is pending.

Mr. GEORGE. And that any part of the Senate bill is subject to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And that the Senate bill, as amended, will then be voted on as a substitute for the House bill. Both bills are open to amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to add the following:

Provided further, That in the discretion of the Director, continuous service by the enrollee during his period of enrollment shall not be required in any case where the enrollee attends an educational institution of his choice during his leave of absence.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to explain that the purpose of this amendment is to provide for broken terms of service during enrollment, in the discretion of the Director.

I wish to explain also that under existing regulations, and under the law as it stands, the power conferred upon the Director does not now exist, it is believed. I have had this matter up with Director Fechner, and with others who are responsible for the administration of the C. C. C. camps.

The primary purpose of this amendment is to give to the Director, in his discretion, power to permit the enrollee to serve his enrollment, whether of 6 months or longer, in broken periods, provided that during the enrollee's leave of absence from the camp he is actually in attendance upon some educational institution of his choice.

I may say that in many of the States we have, for instance, 3-month forestry courses in the universities; and the enrollee, with the permission of the Director, or in the Director's discretion, might be permitted to work for 3 months, then attend the forestry course of 3 months, and return to finish his enrollment, say, of 6 months.

Cooperative education is growing in the United States and is a very helpful development in our educational system. For instance, many colleges and universities have worked out a cooperative plan under which the student is permitted to study for 3 months and then to take a job for 3 months, thereby earning a fund sufficient to enable him to return to his college work after his period of actual employment. The men who are now coming out of our colleges and other educational institutions under this cooperative plan of education are coming out with the knowledge and ability and experience to enable them to find their places in life.

This amendment is permissive. The Director, of course, would not be compelled to permit any enrollee to break his term of service; but he would be given power to permit the enrollee to break his term of enrollment by working 3 months, then attending an institution of the student's choice for a period of 3 months, and then returning to the camp to fill out his 6-month enrollment, using the period of 6 months merely for illustration.

Not only that, Mr. President, but under this amendment it would be quite possible for the Director, if he should see fit to do so, in any and every State, to establish one or more camps particularly for boys who have not completed their education, to which enrollees might be assigned who desired to break their term of service for the purpose of completing their education.

Since this amendment is one which merely gives to the Director a discretion which he does not now have, I hope the amendment may be acceptable to those in charge of this measure.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GEORGE. I do.

Mr. POPE. Could any arrangement be made whereby the enrollee could attend the school without payment of tuition charges to the institution?

Mr. GEORGE. I should hesitate to burden the bill with such a provision. My record here is very well known as one entirely favorable to vocational education and to Government participation in providing vocational training.

Mr. POPE. I understood the Senator to say that some arrangement could be made between the institution and the C. C. C. for the men to take these courses; and I wondered whether that included some arrangement as to charges or fees.

Mr. GEORGE. No; the amendment merely permits the enrollee to break continuous service for the period of his enrollment, in the discretion of the Director, if, during his leave of absence, the enrollee cares to attend and does attend an educational institution.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in my judgment, the amendment is really an addition to the bill, and I certainly have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama if he would mind telling the Senate what his views are with reference to having the bill provide, as does the House bill, the compensation to be received by enrollees.

If this corps is to be extended only for 2 years as a temporary organization, I think we might well continue to permit the compensation to be fixed by the director of the organization. If, however, the theory of the Senate bill shall prevail and the C. C. C. is made a permanent department of the Government, then I should like to know whether the Senator from Alabama, in charge of the bill, would seriously consider having the bill provide the compensation to be received by those in camp.

The House bill sets forth the compensation now received by enrollees and by leaders. I do not know enough about the matter to prepare an amendment which would reach the object, and I do not think it could be done on the floor of the Senate. I think it must be done in conference.

If the House theory should prevail and the corps were to be a temporary organization, we could well leave the discretion with the Director; but if it shall be determined in conference that the Senate idea is to prevail and the corps is to be a permanent establishment of the Government, I think it all important that we should provide the rates of compensation, just as we provide for compensation for the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and all other departments of the Government.

It is all the more important because of the statement made by the chairman of the committee in the House having the bill in charge that in his opinion the President was wrong in fixing the compensation at $30 per month; that he believes and has urged that it be $50 per month for the enrollees. The President did not see fit to agree with the chairman of the House committee and fixed the compensation at $30.

If the opinion of the chairman of the House committee should prevail, and the compensation of each man were increased from $30 to $50, with a corresponding increase in the pay of the leaders, it would almost double the amount for the service, and would result in arousing sentiment against an activity which the Congress favors. I should like to have the Senator from Alabama state his views as to whether Congress should determine the compensation if the corps is to be a permanent establishment of the Government.

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the Senator at the outset that, as he knows, the bill as it passed the House contained the 2-year limitation, and I assume the bill will go to conference on the basis of the House provision, thus creating a difference, unless the Senate should adopt an amendment providing the same limitation.

With reference to the distinction between the permanent authorization and the 2-year authorization, as I stated yesterday, I see no very great difference. Personally, I favor the permanent authorization, for the reason that, in my judgment, it gives more time to plan for expenses in connection with purchases, and also gives more time to plan the work that is to be done.

Whether we provide a 2-year term or a permanent authorization, in my judgment there are few who would be optimistic enough to believe that this country would change in sentiment sufficiently to agree to abolish the Civilian Conservation Corps camps in 2 years. Believing that they are to be permanent, or at least extend over a period of years, it would be my personal preference, in the interest of what I believe would be efficient management in connection with both purchases and services to be performed, that the authorization be of a more permanent nature.

If the authorization is not to be of a permanent nature, but is to be limited to 2 years, the idea that there has been any great change worked in the bill seems to me rather ridiculous. It is not any great change, because if we limited the organization to 2 years the Senate and the House and the President could still continue it 2 years from now. If, on the contrary, it were made a permanent authorization, if the Senate and the House and the President so desired, they could cut off the appropriation 2 years from now.

I do not know which attitude will be adopted. If an amendment shall be offered in the Senate, as I assume it will be by someone in his zeal for economy in connection with cutting off Government agencies, and the Senate should desire to indicate that the organization should continue for 2 years, so far as I am concerned, that would be perfectly satisfactory to me, because as a believer in the C. C. C. camps I am just as sure as that I am standing here that 2 years from now it would be extended again. Perhaps some of those who wanted to stay on the side of drastic economy would again offer an amendment and provide that the C. C. C. should be limited to 2 years.

I see no practical difference between the two positions. I notice that it has been stated in some of the press that the administration has suffered a great defeat because the House changed its authorization from a permanent authorization to one of 2 years. It may be that someone will want to bring a great defeat on the administration again in the Senate that way; but, so far as I am concerned, I will not construe it as such. It is a matter of very little moment to me, as the chairman of the committee which has had the bill under consideration, although I personally favor the permanent authorization, because I believe that would really be in the interest of efficiency and economy and that other, while superficially and on the surface it looks like economy, would bring about additional expense because the proper plans could not be made for continuing the service.

A few days ago I saw an advertisement of the C. C. C. camps for bids in which it was stated that bids would be accepted, but in consideration of future appropriations made by Congress. That was correct, under the law as it now is. I received a letter from a man who wanted to bid, and I gathered from his letter that on account of that statement the bids would be higher than they would have been if there had been a direct, positive statement that the contractors would get their pay immediately.

So far as the provision under consideration is concerned, I may say to the Senator from South Carolina that I asked the assistant to Mr. Fechner about this particular amendment, Mr. Fechner being out of the city at the time. The assistant to Mr. Fechner told me that they could operate the camps satisfactorily at this time with this limitation. I was particularly interested in the limitation as to the number of leaders and the other attachés. He said that what is suggested is within the limitations they have heretofore had. He did not advocate it, nor did he advocate to me that it should not be in the law, but he did call my attention to the fact that there might be at some places special circumstances and conditions, at some time in the future, under which this amendment might affect them, and probably place a limitation on them which it might be difficult to carry out, but that they intended to carry on exactly as they had been doing whether or not this appeared in the bill.

Whether the organization will be permanent or not I do not know. When an amendment to cut the authorization down to 2 years is offered in the name of economy, which, in my judgment, would mean more expenditures within the next 2 years, if the Senate votes it in the name of economy, the situation will have arisen which the Senator has mentioned.

I know of no move to raise the pay of the enrollees. I am sure it is the intention to carry on the work as it is now going on. The enrollees are getting $30 per month, and the bill before us provides for $30 per month. If the Senate sees fit to limit it to $30 a month, I cannot see that any great change will be made. Frankly, I do not believe it would make the slightest change in the future operation of the corps.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. My thought at first was to offer the amendment. Then I concluded that it would be far better to let the Senator from Alabama, in charge of the measure, handle it without the Senate acting upon it. When the Senate takes no action, the whole amendment is in conference. It is impossible for us to tell whether it is wise to limit to 10 percent the number of men who shall receive $36 and to 6 percent the number who shall receive $45. We have not the information upon which to reach an intelligent conclusion. As a matter of fact, if it is determined that the C. C. C. shall continue for only 2 years, I do not see any reason for placing a limitation. If, however, the Senate shall vote for the bill offered by the Senator from Alabama, and make the corps a permanent organization, and in conference that should be agreed to, then I think that, having the other amendment in conference, the rate of compensation should be provided, because it will then be a permanent agency of the Government, and we would have no excuse for fixing the compensation of the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, the Public Health Service, and other services, and not voting some limitation upon this one. The Senator agrees the whole matter of compensation will be in conference.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct, and I state further to the Senator, speaking for myself, that it is my belief that when the Government employs that many men on a permanent basis it is a safer legislative procedure for at least a maximum payment to be fixed by the Congress. I, myself, would not at all object to carrying out the general idea of fixing the wages to be paid. But I would not favor limitations in percentages, which might handicap the proper and efficient operation of the corps.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I know that no Member of the Senate would seek to do that, and that is why I hope no amendment will be offered and that we will allow the Senator from Alabama to investigate and determine what percentages should be fixed, so that in case the organization should be made permanent we can provide percentages which would not handicap the organization. At the same time, inasmuch as we provide fixed compensation for all of the other services of the Government, if the C. C. C. is to be made permanent, I am glad to know that the Senator agrees with me that we should provide in the law what the compensation should be.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that that would be my individual opinion, and as a Senator and as a member of the conference I would still have that opinion. I have no objection to the Senate voting on these different provisions, so that we may know the viewpoint of Senators. No one knows as yet whether the organization will be a 2-year organization or is to be a permanent organization.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] a question about the matter of salaries. Am I to understand that if the Senate provision should stand precisely as it now is, there would be unlimited authority in the conferees to raise or to lower the compensation above or below the $30 rate named in the House bill?

Mr. BLACK. I assume that the parliamentarian perhaps would have the last word on what our authority would be. If the language should be left as it is, however, the question of payments to the enrollees would be a question for consideration in conference.

Mr. WHITE. Yes; and the conferees would have authority to reduce the $30 rate fixed in the House bill, or to raise that rate to whatever figure they saw fit, or to leave it entirely within the discretion of the President to fix the rate as he sees fit? That is the way it would work out; is it not?

Mr. BLACK. It would seem so to me, from the situation that exists.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, while I have the floor I wish to say just a word about the situation.

If an amendment is offered to limit the time of operation to 2 years, I think I shall vote for it, although I have no idea that the C. C. C. activities will be terminated within 2 years. My personal belief is that this is an undertaking of the Government which will be permanent in its character, and we may just as well recognize that fact. Having instituted these activities, and having provided for them during the 2 or 3 years they have been going on, I think we have started a governmental institution which will persist; and I am not finding any particular fault with that. However, if we believe that to be the future of these camps, I think it highly important, as apparently does the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], that there should be a statutory designation of salaries or payments to the enrollees; and I very much hope that out of the conference will come a definite statutory provision in this respect.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, at the end of line 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "and in needy circumstances", and on page 5, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "and in needy circumstances."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, as stated by the chairman of the committee a proposition something like this amendment was discussed in committee, but it included the whole line "who are unemployed and in needy circumstances." The reason for offering that amendment in the first place was that it was deemed that the C. C. C. organization, as has been testified by many Senators, had justified itself, both in the building of men and in developing the Nation, and that probably the restriction as to enrollment should be removed. It was thought by the committee, however, that if this restriction were removed probably the organization would take on aspects of an educational institution, or grow in proportions that we do not wish it to assume so far as various things are concerned.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], which has just been agreed to, looks to a splendid cooperation with educational institutions and provides a medium whereby such cooperation can be developed to the advantage of the enrollee as well as to the advantage of an educational institution, and also to the advantage of the entire Nation. We are now advocating making the C. C. C. institution a permanent institution, and it was in relation to that permanency that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia was offered and we accepted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. KING. I hope that my colleague when using the pronoun "we" and when making reference to the acceptance of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, does not comprehend all of us, because I am opposed to making the C. C. C. permanent. I was opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. I do not want my colleague's statement to go unchallenged that we had accepted the view that it should be a permanent institution, because I have not so accepted it, and I shall vote against it being made a permanent institution.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the "we" must be confined entirely to the action of the Senate in accepting the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, and in explaining, I hope, what I am trying to put forth here in a minute.

"In needy circumstances" must in the nature of this bill refer not only to the enrollee but to his whole family. The enrollment is open to boys from the age of 17 to the age of 23. If this phrase remains in the bill it means that every boy who goes into a C. C. C. camp is not only stamped by society and by the uniform which he wears as being one in needy circumstances, but it goes even farther than that, because the boys who are 17 years old are minors.

In certain States they are supposed to be unemployed, because the educational requirements are such that they have to be in school until they finish their eighteenth year. Therefore, the words "in needy circumstances" will reflect completely upon their families.

In laying the foundation for a law of this kind it seems to me that we should put nothing in the foundation law which will in any way stamp 300,000 boys every year, and probably 600,000 if they enroll for only a 6 months' period, with having come from that class of the needy. By doing so we first mar the boy himself and then we damage the community. I can see the time coming when, if we make of this a sort of class legislation business, probably C. C. C. would be made to mean "cashless common class." That is exactly what it would mean.

In the history of our country, as far as I know anything about it, I believe we have never before slipped back to what was the worst method of handling charity in the dark ages and the middle ages—that of placing upon the person who is a beneficiary of such charity the necessity of wearing a uniform to mark him at all times as having been poor. It is perfectly honorable to be poor. It is perfectly honorable to be unemployed. Men in public life consider it a great asset to have been born in farmhouses, or in log cabins, or in other circumstances of poverty. But I want to tell Senators that it is a struggle for anyone to live down the fact that his family comes from the ne'er-do-wells. They are marked in society by reason of the fact that the Government has decided to pick them out and give them an opportunity. It means that certain boys coming from families with pride will not enter these camps. It means that the families will not want their boys to enter the camps.

I give an illustration of this type. A family, for example, which ordinarly gets along in pretty decent circumstances, is struck by a depression. The time comes when it has only one breadwinner. Perhaps it is a young girl school teacher. Perhaps it is the wife who has a job. Perhaps it is someone else in the family. That family is experiencing things which may make or may mar each and every member of it. Under such circumstances the boy decides to go to a C. C. C. camp. Immediately he is stamped, so long as these words remain in the bill, as a needy one, and his family immediately takes upon itself the same character.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has given a great deal of thought to this subject and to the entire bill, a fact with which I was struck in the committee when we were considering the bill. I have a very great regard for his views. I wanted to ask the Senator what definition he gives to the word "needy"? What is there in that term that would signify something in the nature of discredit for the boy to be designated as "needy"? I can imagine a person being in needy circumstances, and yet there can be no reflection upon him. But I should be glad if the Senator would give me an idea of what he means by the words "in needy circumstances."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The idea I had is the one that I have already expressed, I think, and the common idea, the one the average person would have. Here is a family unemployed and in needy circumstances, a family for whom some charitable act must be performed if it is not to go down.

Mr. BORAH. The word "needy", then, would be largely synonymous with "unemployed", would it not, but it would not be expressed?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think so. I think the word "unemployed" covers the whole idea, and that it refers only to the boy who goes into the camp, whereas the words "in needy circumstances" include his whole family, his whole community, and may be detrimental to all.

Mr. President, when we leave expressions like "in needy circumstances" in a law, no one can foresee their ultimate consequences. Take, for example, our experience with the pauper's oath. I do not think Congress can be held responsible for the use of the pauper's oath in relation to our relief administration. That came as a result of administrative action, and we all are familiar with the consequences. If experiences such as those we have had from the use of the pauper's oath came from interpretation put upon a law, what could not be done by administrative action under a grant as broad as the phrase "in needy circumstances"?

I agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that striking it out of this bill will not in any way interfere with what was the fear of the committee, that probably those who are not, in a great national sense, worthy of enrollment would take advantage if we left merely the word "unemployed." Personally, I believe that there is many a millionaire's son who ought to have the C. C. C. camp experiences, but I want him to have the experiences so that he will learn the lessons by actual contact and not in any other way.

I may call attention to the fact that if "in needy circumstances" means what I have suggested it does mean, not only does the use of the words create a class for us in America but it is exceedingly undemocratic. Even in the work camps in Europe the theory which Mr. Hitler, for example, puts forth is that every German at some time should go to the camps, so that there is no particular stigma, there is no disrespect, there is nothing that can be turned into society's slur upon a neighbor as we have in these words.

I think that the entire Senate sees the point. If enrollment is based upon unemployment and is for the purpose of building citizenship, surely we want the boys to have all the ideals and the attitudes which give them a chance to develop into the finest kind of citizens.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to say a word regarding the pending bill, and it may be as relevant to this particular amendment as at any time during the consideration of the measure.

I am in full accord with the sentiment expressed by many as to the great success of the C. C. C. enterprise. When I voted for the measure, on its original passage through the Senate, I had in mind only the benefit it would afford the boys who might be enrolled in the camps. But the service rendered by the C. C. C. enterprise has gone far beyond that. It has been not only a benefit to the boys who entered the camps but, in my judgment, it has been a benefit to the community and a very great help to the Nation.

So I speak with entire sympathy for the cause which is represented by this bill, and I would not want to say a word or cast a vote which could be construed as expressing dissatisfaction with the work which has been done. However, I voted for the measure in the first instance as an emergency measure, and I have always so regarded it. I could gladly vote for the House bill, which limits the program to 2 years, but I am not prepared to vote to make the institution permanent. We have now reached the point where we are considering the question of making it permanent. I take it that at some time, if not now, it will likely be made permanent. Certainly we will make it permanent if the rather sad—I think erroneous—outlook is confirmed that we are always to have millions of unemployed in the United States. But I am not arguing against making it permanent; I am merely suggesting that, in my opinion, we are not now ready to make it permanent. I do not say I personally will ever be ready to make it permanent. I only know that I am not now ready to do so.

I became convinced from listening to Mr. Fechner and others who know much more about the subject than I could possibly know that it has not been worked out as yet to any definite conclusion as to what should be incorporated in a bill designed to make this institution permanent. We do not know just what we want to incorporate in the bill as to what should be the work of the Government, what the training should be, or how these boys should be employed.

Certainly if we are going to make the corps permanent we cannot arbitrarily say that only 300,000 boys out of a million or more that ought to be in it shall be admitted into the camps. It seems to me that when we come to make it permanent we must take into consideration the establishment of a rule or rules which will admit all who may come under the rule or rules. We cannot arbitrarily say, in justice to the young citizenship of the country, that just so many will get in and no more will be permitted to enter, notwithstanding those on the outside may be just as righteously and justly entitled to enter as those who enter. It is for that reason that it has seemed to me—and I so expressed myself in the committee—that we ought for some 2 or 3 years to postpone the time for making the C. C. C. permanent. Then the administration of the law from this time on would have in view the ascertainment of the things which ought to be incorporated in the law when we make the corps permanent.

It is evident that Mr. Fechner, able as he is, conscientious as he has been, and thorough as he is in regard to this matter, was not himself prepared to say what a permanent law should include. I became satisfied—and I must believe that the committee derived a similar impression—that if a man of his ability and his experience is not prepared to say "this or that shall go in", and to indicate the terms which shall be employed, the conditions which shall be set forth, we are starting to make it permanent at too early a period.

In saying that, I repeat that I contemplate that it will ultimately become permanent; that is, permanent in a limited sense. I hope that the time may come when no such institution will be necessary in this country, but for the outlook now we will call it permanent. This bill, however, is not written for a permanent institution, and, as the able Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has stated, there are provisions in this bill which we would not want in a bill which was to provide for a permanent institution. There are other things which ought to be in the bill which are not in it if we are going to make it a permanent organization.

I do not see how, under any theory of justice or any theory of democracy, the Government of the United States can set up a great institution for the building of citizenship, for rescuing the young, for giving a boy with no outlook an outlook, and yet say that every boy outside a limited number shall be excluded. There must be some rule, some principle, embedded in the law so that every boy coming within that rule and within that principle will be permitted to enter the camps and receive the benefit of the Government's aid.

I think I would be controlled in my vote on this particular amendment by the feeling as to whether or not this is to be a permanent institution or temporary for the present time. In the committee I expressed my view that it ought to be limited to 2 years.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The rule under which enrollment has taken place up to the present time is that a young man, in order to be enrolled, must be a member of a family which is on relief.

Mr. BORAH. That is not true under this bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am stating the existing rule. And the establishment of the corps was justified by requiring the enrollee to make a return of all but about $5 a month of his pay to his family that was on relief, and thereby the relief roll was reduced in communities where the families resided.

This bill provides for a remission of money to the families of enrollees, but it does not limit enrollment in the corps to young men who belong to families that are on relief.

Limiting it as it has been heretofore to young men coming from families on relief, there could not be found 500,000 men in the United States eligible for the corps. By removing that limitation I fear we will find perhaps a million or two million eligible to the corps. Making eligible young men who are unemployed and who may have a certain amount of need in their families brings about a vastly different situation. If the Senator will lay down a rule that every young man who is unemployed and whose family is in somewhat necessitous circumstances is entitled to go into the corps, then he must evidently be willing to have the corps increased largely above 300,000.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes, if we are going to make it permanent. If we are going to make it permanent I do not see how we can arbitrarily say that Richard Roe shall be admitted, but that John Smith and his brother shall not be admitted, although the conditions of all needy be the same. This was an emergency measure, it is still an emergency measure, and the terms of the bill fit an emergency situation. But the bill fixing a permanent institution is unjust, inequitable, if not absurd.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think the answer is a practical one, that the enrollee should be selected by the local authorities. There is still a provision in the law whereby a part of the salary may be allotted to his family. That being the case, the local authorities will select young men who come from families primarily on relief, and they may take in other families where there is real need for the aid afforded by the money which the young man can send back to his family. That is going to be the practical reason for selecting an enrollee.

Mr. BORAH. That may be true. It does not, however, necessarily have to be true under the terms of the bill. The bill provides:

> There is hereby established the Civilian Conservation Corps, hereinafter called the corps, for the purpose of providing employment and training for citizenship for youthful citizens of the United States who are unemployed and in needy circumstances.

And yet the number is arbitrarily fixed at 300,000, although there may be 10,000 more or 100,000 more or 500,000 more who are unemployed and in needy circumstances and who are not going to be trained for citizenship.

Mr. HAYDEN. It would be a most excellent thing not to limit it to 300,000. If we could afford to pay the bill, I should like to see a million young men a year go through the camps.

Mr. BORAH. We can either afford to do justice and equity to these young men or keep out of the business. If the Government is not big enough and able enough to do justice to these young men who are in the same circumstances as those whom we will take care of, then we ought not to undertake the task as a permanent undertaking.

Mr. President, it was a fine and proper thing to care for the unemployed youth, and we must continue to do so. But when we leave the realm of emergency, when we depart from unemployment as a basis for Government action and undertake to set up a vast bureau to educate and train the young of the country, we will face as delicate and profound a problem as a nation can know. For myself I am not willing to enter this stupendous undertaking without much reflection and great study.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee reporting the bill under consideration. I was denied the opportunity of hearing the witnesses appearing before the committee, and I have had no opportunity to learn the nature of the testimony submitted to it. Committee engagements have kept me from the Senate during the day, and I have not had the benefit of the discussion which has ensued concerning the terms of the bill.

Perhaps I may find myself almost alone in opposing some of the provisions of the Senate bill. I voted for the bill which created a Civilian Conservation Corps, believing that the economic conditions justified its enactment into law. I voted for other measures which could only be justified because of the depression in which we found ourselves.

Many laws are enacted to meet serious emergencies which cannot be justified under normal conditions. When war is threatened taxes almost confiscatory are imposed upon the people and the youth of the land are drafted for military service; but emergencies are not persistent and cannot be regarded as the base for permanent legislation.

It was claimed in the early stages of the depression that thousands of young men were out of employment and in needy circumstances. It was also represented that the families of many of these young men were without employment and were in need of food and clothing and, in many instances, habitations. Billions of dollars were expended during the depression to meet the situation and to alleviate the sufferings of the people. I believe that the plan upon which the Civilian Conservation Corps rested possessed some merit and that it would aid not only young boys who were without employment but would enable contributions to be made by them to their families. The cost of this organization has been very great, and I think that it may be assumed that the cost, by reason of changed conditions, will be greatly increased in the immediate future.

I am willing to join with my colleagues in voting to prolong the life of this organization for 2 years after July 1, 1937, as provided in the House bill. Generally speaking, I think the House bill is better than the Senate bill, and I hope that it will be approved by the Senate.

I cannot agree with my friend from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who has just indicated that he would be glad to see a million young men gathered from the ranks of the people and placed in the Civilian Conservation Corps. I hope that he does not approve of the provisions of the Senate bill, which, in effect, seeks to make this organization permanent.

I think it is admitted that the cost of this organization will amount to more than $300,000,000 annually, and I have no doubt that if it is made permanent, efforts will be made along the lines indicated by the Senator from Arizona to increase the number of enrollees so that there will be an army of half a million or more who will constitute the personnel of this organization.

There is no mortality for Federal bureaus and agencies. They demonstrate that immortality exists in bureaucratic agencies, though it may not secure a prolongation of individual life.

As I have indicated, I am opposed to enlarging this organization or of giving it a lease of life beyond the day which I have just mentioned.

The House bill declares that the purpose of the organization is to provide employment and vocational training to the enrollees. It does not contain the objectionable features found in the words "and training for citizenship for youthful citizens of the United States."

There are many implications in the words "and training for citizenship." Of course, we desire not only young citizens but all citizens to be advised as to the nature of our Government and the duties and responsibilities of citizenship; but I cannot believe it wise to commit to the Federal Government, through a semimilitary organization, the task of training young boys for citizenship. First let me say that this organization was not set up for that purpose. As stated, it was created to meet an emergency and to aid boys who were in needy circumstances to supply their physical wants. Of course, incidentally, they would obtain some vocational training and be subjected to reasonable discipline.

Different interpretations will be placed upon the words "training for citizenship." We are informed that in some of the schools and universities training in citizenship implies an exposition of bolshevism and the views of communism, with its deadly opposition to all forms of religious faith. Training in citizenship in some countries involves training in militarism, in communism, and in the methods of propaganda aimed at the overthrow of genuine democracy, and the spiritual and ethical concepts of the Christian faith. Of course, I do not mean to infer that teachings of the character just indicated would be a part of the curriculum to which the enrollees would be subjected when they were being trained for citizenship.

I am still old-fashioned enough to believe that the home, the church, and local communities are the fountains from which flow currents for the enrichment of the minds and the lives of young and old. Patriotism and the duties of citizenship and loyalties of life find their strongest teachers and influences in the homes.

It is not my purpose to institute improper or offensive comparisons between the United States and other countries, but when we are requiring the Federal Government, through semimilitary organizations, to provide for the training of young men for citizenship, I am reminded of the policies of some nations in the training given to immature youths and youthful citizens.

I visited a number of military camps in Russia a few years ago where the young men were "being trained for citizenship" in the Bolshevik Government and likewise for military service. The two were compounded and the young men were indoctrinated into the ideaology of communism and received training concerning their duties as to what citizenship and its duties meant within the philosophy of the governmental authority. They were trained not only to meet the hardships of military service but also in the philosophy of Karl Marx, as it was exemplified in the government of their country and the obligations which they were to assume as citizens of that government.

Senators are familiar with the training of the youth in Germany before the war and the training for citizenship which they are receiving under the Hitler regime. Citizenship there does not bear the connotations of citizenship in the United States. Training for citizenship there means, in part, at least, hatred of a certain race and an effort to secure an unalloyed allegiance to a form of government which suppresses democracy and requires, if it does not compel, obedience to one man and to policies which he, from time to time, may inaugurate. And beyond the Alps is another country in which training for citizenship compels obedience to a political organization boasting of its power and which glorifies military success.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I assume that these policies of which the Senator speaks in the respective countries were not based upon unemployment or needy circumstances, but were a part of a scheme of advancing their theory.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is substantially correct, and yet it was believed that withdrawing large numbers of individuals from the economic and industrial fields would relieve to some extent the economic pressure which produced repercussions in the social, industrial, and political life of communities.

Mr. President, I would look with considerable concern upon a permanent policy that envisages the control by the Federal Government of hundreds of thousands, or millions, of our young men in camps semimilitary in character, where they are to "be trained for citizenship." No one denies the importance of the young men and women of our country learning of our form of government and the duties and responsibilities which will rest upon them as citizens of the Republic. Undoubtedly, there are many young men and women who are not familiar with our form of government and have not been properly trained in the duties of citizenship and the part which they should play in the economic, industrial, and political life of their country. But I have been unwilling to support policies under which the Federal Government would take control over our educational system. Believing, as I do, in the importance of public schools and academic education, I have not favored any policy that looked like a surrender by the States to the National Government of the control of our public schools or of our educational system. One of the important responsibilities of States is to provide educational opportunities for all the children within their borders.

Thomas Jefferson, the great apostle of liberty, it is thought by many, laid the foundation of our public-school system, and he recognized that that system was an inseparable part of local self-government. Speaking generally, I think the American people have been proud of their public schools, and they have gladly submitted to heavy exactions for their maintenance.

Mr. President, I have not lost faith in democracy or in the competency of the people, through their State organizations, to discharge every duty resting upon them to educate the young men and women, and to prepare them for the responsibilities of citizenship. There is a growing fear among many patriotic Americans that home life is being weakened and that family ties are being challenged. They recognize that democratic institutions and a progressive Christian state can only properly function where there are strong home ties, and where family altars bind the members of the family together. There are many, however, who are willing to superimpose upon the States a powerful national organization which will, through numerous bureaus and Federal agencies, control the lives and the thoughts of individuals from the cradle to the grave.

Love of home is one of the strongest passions of the human race. Men will fight for their homes and their families and make every sacrifice for their protection. The Basques in Spain today, we read, cling to the rugged rocks and hills and mountains where they live and where their forefathers for centuries lived, and the wives and children join with fathers and sons in beating back invading forces.

The home is not only a school for the training of boys and girls for citizenship, but it is, or should be, a most powerful and pervasive force for the development of moral and spiritual forces necessary for the building of an enduring civilization. There are many, however, who are drifting away from those influences, moral and spiritual, arising from home and family and church, and are accepting philosophies and confused teachings destructive of the enduring and fundamental things of life. It is the responsibilities of parents to guide the footsteps of the young and impart those teachings which will prepare their children for the duties of citizenship and for the performance of those tasks which will promote the welfare and happiness of communities, states, and nations.

But, I repeat, when I say that there are some who are willing to surrender their rightful authority and shirk their duty with respect to their children and who complacently look upon the invasion by the Federal Government of States, and impingement by Federal bureaucratic organizations, upon the rights of individuals. Bureaucracy is growing; it has assumed a massive form, and its power and influence are extended into almost every home in the land. It is unfortunate that there is a growing disposition to welcome bonuses and gifts and contributions from the Federal Government, and the assumption by it and its more than a million and a half employees of responsibilities with which the Federal Government should have no concern, and which belong exclusively to individuals or to States and their political subdivisions.

There is a growing spirit in favor of standardization, so that there is being developed a cult whose principal purpose is to bring all persons under the flag into one huge group where individuality is sacrificed.

Perhaps nearly 40 bureaucratic agencies have been created during the past few years, but efforts to diminish the number have not been successful. There are many discouragements when efforts are made to eliminate organizations formed for temporary purposes and to consolidate bureaus and agencies in the interest of economy and of efficiency.

Mr. President, I think it would be unwise, with the limited information which we have, to enact a law which makes the Civilian Conservation Corps permanent. We do not know what conditions will exist in our country 2 years from now. Many pages will be written in the meantime. New problems will have arisen, some of which will relate to this organization and to the hundreds of thousands found therein. And we have just been told that the head of the organization lacked adequate information to submit a plan for a permanent organization.

Mr. President, there will be some who believe that more satisfactory results would be obtained if the more than $300,000,000 per year required to meet the expenses of this organization were devoted to sending nearly twice as many young men to college. My understanding is that the annual cost of each enrollee is approximately $1,200. That sum would send two enrollees to college, and there are many vocational schools where those who might seek collegiate training could find employment and receive vocational education. Can it be said that we are ready to permanently adopt the present plan which governs the Civilian Conservation Corps? Why not defer definite action for 2 years? Undoubtedly at the expiration of that time there will be an accumulation of facts of which we now have but limited, if any, knowledge, which will enable Congress and the country to determine the wisest course to pursue.

The capacity for local self-government is weakened and the States are being deprived of their power and authority.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has indicated the genesis of this organization. It was not for the purpose of training the young for citizenship; it was, as I have stated, to meet an unprecedented depression, which resulted in poverty and reduced millions to want. One of the means suggested by President Roosevelt was the establishment of C. C. C. camps where several hundred thousand young men, who were in needy circumstances, many of whom were without adequate food and shelter, might be provided for. The President acted with courage and ability, and as I have stated, suggested this humanitarian plan for the purpose of dealing with an acute emergency. But those days have passed; new conditions exist and the skies do not obscure the sun. Throughout the land the hum of industry is heard, millions of people have returned to profitable employment, and everywhere there are manifestations of an industrial renaissance. The people, now filled with hope and courage, are going forward with happy strides to meet the problems of the hour and to lift our country to a high pinnacle of prosperity. In many places there are evidences of a revival of religious faith and a desire upon the part of millions to seek that spiritual guidance which will make for cooperative effort for peace and happiness.

Mr. President, I hope that the House bill will be preferred to the Senate bill. If it shall be, I shall vote for it; but the Senate bill, in its present form, does not meet with my approval.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], proposes to strike from line 7, page 1, the words "and in needy circumstances."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. And on page 5, line 16, to strike out the same words.

Mr. BLACK. And to strike out the same words on page 5, line 16. So the amendment which is under consideration has no relation to the question whether the Corps shall be permanent or temporary. It is an amendment proposing to strike out the words "and in needy circumstances."

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in determining what enrollees shall be accepted, the words "who are unemployed and in needy circumstances" define the type of enrollees who are to be accepted. So it is a question of whether the Senate wishes to define those who are to be enrolled in the camps as "unemployed", or whether the Senate wishes to define those who are to be enrolled in the camps as "unemployed and in needy circumstances." I ask the Senator from Utah if that is the fact.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. The words of the House bill are "unemployed and in needy circumstances." I myself have not felt that the words "in needy circumstances" constitute any reflection upon the enrollees. The very able and distinguished Senator from Utah—who, I may say, is one of the most useful and conscientious members of the committee which considered and reported the bill—does feel that to use the words "in needy circumstances" may be in some way a reflection upon the young men who enter the camps.

The committee did not vote on this exact amendment. As I recall, the committee did vote upon an amendment which suggested striking out the entire line. The Senator from Utah suggested in the committee an amendment which would have stricken out the words "who are unemployed and in needy circumstances." That amendment was defeated. The Senator from Utah now proposes an amendment which strikes out the words "and in needy circumstances."

Frankly, I do not consider the amendment as of any great importance in connection with the interpretation of the bill, because the possibility is that the word "unemployed" might be construed to include those who are in needy circumstances. I simply wanted the Senate to have directly before it the issue which is involved in the amendment.

I desire to state, in connection with some of the other things which were said, that I can see no difference between a permanent authorization and a 2-year authorization insofar as the number of 300,000 is concerned. If, as suggested, it is wrong to take young men into permanent camps and limit their number to 300,000, it would be just as wrong to limit their number to 300,000 in temporary camps; and I cannot recognize that distinction.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I have no more to add than to emphasize the fact that the amendment suggested in committee was an amendment dealing with the theory of justifying the C. C. C. on its merits as an institution; not at all as a relief institution, but because it had actually built men, and it had actually done something toward developing conservation in our country.

Economically, I feel that the C. C. C. has justified itself, and that, so far as the C. C. C. organization is concerned, it may be justified in a number of ways, so that it may properly become part of our national policy.

There are in our country thousands and thousands of young men who, for one reason or another, do not have any socializing influences brought to them as a result of attendance upon high schools and universities, who do not go into the Army or the Navy or the Coast Guard, in fact who have no chance at all to meet with their fellows, and gain that which is so important in building citizenship, an opportunity to exchange ideas and to tussle with those on their own level. Therefore I say the C. C. C. may be justified from almost any standpoint from which we wish to justify it; and it was in an attempt to justify it permanently that I suggested in committee the amendment to which the chairman has called our attention.

We probably hit upon the idea of those in needy circumstances, though we did not argue the matter as I have tried to argue it here today. If we are to adhere to the idea of a classless society and the methods we have grown to respect in regard to taking care of the underprivileged, I think the less we stamp the underprivileged the better for them and the better for our society. I do not think there is any disgrace in being unemployed. I do not think there is any disgrace in being underprivileged. That comes to a man quite by nature, and quite as a result of circumstances with which he has nothing to do. But to be marked as being either does something to that man which probably is not tangible, but which has much to do with making or marring him and his future. For us to permit, for example, an interpretation in a fundamental law under which someone in administrative authority would go so far as to stamp these boys and their families as those in a community who are in needy circumstances would do damage to the boy and the family and the community.

That is my point. There is absolutely no need for these words to be in the bill, and yet with them there we are enacting definite class legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, at the end of section 9, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided further, That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month, except for not more than 10 percent who may be designated as leaders and who shall receive not more than $36 per month, and not to exceed 6 percent who shall receive $45 per month.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this amendment is similar to an amendment adopted in the House, and limits the compensation of members of the C. C. C. to the salaries which are now being received.

The bill which the Senate is considering authorizes the enrollment of 300,000 men, and there is no limitation as to the amount of their compensation or salary. Under the bill, if it should be passed in its present form, the President and the director of this permanent organization could fix the salaries at $100 per month, $50 per month, or any other sum; and as this is an authorization to enroll a certain number of men, of course, Congress would be compelled to appropriate the money.

I assume that it is not the purpose of the Senator from Alabama to increase the compensation that is now being paid to the enrollees in the C. C. C. camps; and this amendment simply fixes the compensation as it now is.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be rejected, for the reasons which were stated in the colloquy between the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and myself and, in addition, for the reason that I do not think it is wise to legislate in connection with a certain percentage of the enrollees who shall receive a certain amount per month unless we definitely know that under all circumstances and conditions that amount will be adequate to take care of the situation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The basic salary, as I understand, is $30 per month.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. There is no objection to that?

Mr. BLACK. I have no objection if the Senate desires to so vote. As a matter of fact, I would like to have an expression of the Senate on that particular point if the Senate desires to record its wish. But I think it unwise to state the percentage who can get $30 and the percentage who can get $45.

Mr. BYRD. Would the Senator agree that not less than 90 percent should receive $30 per month?

Mr. BLACK. I am very frank to state to the Senator that I am not sufficiently familiar with what may occur hereafter, and with the necessities of some particular camp or some particular condition which might develop—a flood, for instance, or something we might not know about.

I asked Mr. McEntee, and he stated to me that under conditions as they now are the organization could properly work with these limitations. I asked him if he could assure me that it could do so hereafter under all conditions in a satisfactory way, and he said he could not. For that reason I would personally regret to see the Senate attempt to place those limitations in the bill.

Frankly, I believe that if this organization is to be permanent we should fix the salaries by legislative enactment. I do not know at this time whether this will be a permanent or a temporary organization. I do not know how the Senate will vote on such an amendment if it shall be offered. If the Senate should vote that it is to be legislatively permanent, as I believe it will be actually permanent, I would not know then whether or not the House would accept that provision, and I am sure the Senator would not wish to place any amendment in the bill which might affect the proper operation of the camps.

Mr. BYRD. But the Senator's bill makes the organization permanent. Until the Senate changes that we must assume it will be permanent.

Mr. BLACK. The House measure does not make it permanent, and the matter would be left in conference as to the amendment which was inserted on the floor of the House. I may say to the Senator that I think that while it is true, as stated by the Senator, that under the law as it now is and as it has been for the last 4 years, and under the bill as proposed, there is no limitation, there has certainly been a very decided position taken by the administration not to raise the wages above $30 a month.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator agrees to the principle that if the C. C. C. is to be permanent Congress should fix the salaries?

Mr. BLACK. I believe in that principle.

Mr. BYRD. That is being done with respect to all other departments.

Mr. BLACK. I thoroughly believe in that principle where it is possible to carry it out. There might be special circumstances in connection with some department because of which it might sometimes be difficult to adjust the salaries, and there would result the inequities which have been mentioned here today. But I certainly believe that where there are 300,000 enrollees in a permanent institution the basic wage should be fixed by Congress.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator agree to fixing the compensation on the basis of $30 a month?

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator wishes to submit an amendment to that effect, I shall certainly be rather glad to have the viewpoint of the Senate, if it wishes to express it, because the matter will come up in conference.

Mr. BYRD. I may say to the Senator that my amendment is more liberal than the agreement the Senator has just mentioned because it provides that not more than 10 percent may receive more than $30.

Mr. BLACK. I should not be willing to vote on an amendment providing that the compensation be limited to $30, but I would agree that that should be the basic salary or wage for those who are not needed to perform special tasks. I do not know—and I do not believe anyone can know at the present time—what percentage will be needed to perform the other tasks. I believe it would be bad legislation to attempt to act upon it. That is the position I take with reference to the other limitation.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator agrees that, so far as this amendment is concerned, it will not interfere with the present operation of the camps.

Mr. BLACK. I thoroughly agree to that and I hope the amendment will be defeated only because of the fact that if the amendment should go into the bill in the form suggested, no one could assure us that conditions would permanently remain as they are now.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, it seems to me the amendment is subject to division. It contains different substantive proposals. One such proposal is to fix the base rate of pay at $30 a month. The other proposal is a limitation on the percentages of those who may be employed at a higher rate of pay. I should like to vote for the $30 per month provision, but I should be opposed to the percentage provision. May the question be divided?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the parliamentary clerk that it may be divided.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then I should like to have a vote on the $30 per month provision. Let that be stated, and let the Senate vote on it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. If the question were divided the effect would be that there would be a complete 100-percent limitation to the $30 per month and the Senator agrees with me that we should not say exactly how many can be employed at a higher wage because of particular qualifications to become leaders. That is the difficulty of dividing the amendment. I do not believe it is possible to vote on the $30-per-month provision in its present form, as suggested by the Senator from Virginia himself, unless there are some other stipulation that, for the number necessarily needed to perform other duties, the basic rate of pay of $30 shall not prevail.

Mr. BYRD. I may suggest to the Senator that that difficulty can be overcome by providing that the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month unless such enrollees are paid as leaders.

Mr. BLACK. As leaders, or in the performance of special duties. That would make the basic rate of pay $30 per month.

Mr. BYRD. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. HAYDEN. May the amendment be perfected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair ask the Senator from Virginia whether or not he is modifying his amendment or merely making a suggestion?

Mr. BYRD. I will amend it to read as follows:

That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month unless such enrollees are used as leaders.

Mr. BLACK. I would suggest the addition of the language "or for special services for which an additional amount of pay is justified." That would leave the basic rate of pay $30, which I understand the Senator is willing to have stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia withdraws his previous amendment and submits a new amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 6, line 10, to strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

Provided further, That the pay of enrollees shall not exceed $30 per month, unless such enrollees are used as leaders or for special services for which an additional amount of pay is justified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION—CONFERENCE REPORT ON SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, before I came into the Chamber this morning the Senate agreed to a conference report on the second deficiency bill. I ask unanimous consent that the action be now reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator state his reason for making the request?

Mr. BULKLEY. I have in mind a Senate amendment providing an appropriation for the Great Lakes Exposition at Cleveland. The amount of the appropriation thus provided is justified by a joint resolution passed by both Houses of Congress without any objection and signed by the President at the present session. The amendment was adopted in the Senate without any objection, and, frankly, I do not believe there is any substantial objection to the amendment in the House. Of course, I have no means of knowing what occurs within the conference room, but I believe there was a misunderstanding about the reasonableness of the amount of the appropriation.

The Government being already committed to participation in the exposition, it would be exceedingly embarrassing to have the amount of the appropriation cut in two, as provided in the conference report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I was one of the conferees, and I may state what occurred. There was an appropriation for a much larger sum for a similar exposition in New York City, and the President vetoed the measure yesterday, or the day before. The House Members of the conference, I think with entire unanimity, insisted that the provision to which the Senator refers go out of the bill because the other measure had been vetoed. However, the very point the Senator now submits, which is that the Congress has passed an act which authorized the appropriation of $175,000, was raised.

There was also found to be an unexpended balance, and the question arose as to the appropriation, together with the unexpended balance, exceeding $175,000. Our committee sent for the authorization act itself, and we found that it authorized the appropriation of $175,000. But the conferees on the part of the House would not agree to the provision for $175,000, and the very best we could get in conference was the $100,000. The Senate conferees contended strongly for the amendment. I think that, without regard to divisions of party or otherwise, they earnestly sought to have the $175,000 provision kept in the bill. The House, however, would not agree to it; and we finally arranged it by compromising on $100,000, which was the very best we could do.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, if the House ultimately will not agree to it, of course, that is a very different proposition. The very statement which the Senator from Tennessee makes, however, bears out exactly what I suspected—that the House members were influenced by a veto message which related to an entirely different exposition and which carried an appropriation which was entirely out of proportion to the very modest sum that is required for the Cleveland Exposition. The veto message related to an appropriation for a new commitment which the Government was not already obligated to carry out, whereas what we are talking about is an appropriation to carry out an agreement which the Government in effect has made.

I hope the Senator will not object to taking the bill back to conference and asking for a reconsideration on the part of the House conferees. Of course, I cannot say what they will do; but I believe, and I am fortified in that belief by what the Senator himself has said, that the conferees were disturbed by something that had happened just that day, and which in fact had no proper relation at all to this appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say that the House conferees further made the argument that this was the second appropriation for the Cleveland exposition; that the exposition has not used all of the first appropriation; and that under those circumstances they believed the $175,000 appropriated was too large an amount.

I wish to say frankly to the Senator from Ohio that I felt very kindly toward the appropriation when the amendment was agreed to in the Senate. I think it ought to have been agreed to. The question was thoroughly thrashed out on all grounds, however, and I am absolutely confident that there will be no change in the position of the House conferees even if the bill goes back to conference.

Mr. President, if the other $75,000 should be actually needed, it would be better to ask for an additional deficiency appropriation of $75,000. We shall have another deficiency bill before us. I hope the Senator from Ohio will undertake to put that amount on the next deficiency bill rather than to send this bill back to conference. I think the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who was also one of the conferees, and who took exactly the same position that I did about the matter, will bear me out in my statement as to what occurred before the conference committee.

I am quite sure the Senator from Ohio will get further by seeking to have the item placed in the next deficiency bill. I am frank to say to the Senator that on the facts as they were revealed to me I thought the exposition was entitled to the amount provided by the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Ohio if it would not be possible for him and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to discuss this matter informally and see if an agreement upon it can be reached by them. I think it will take but a few more minutes to pass the Civilian Conservation Corps bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from Ohio will agree to that course.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have no objection to that.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on the 6th of May I submitted an amendment to this bill which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. The amendment contemplated that the Civilian Conservation Corps should consist of 300,000 men in the camps, with a reserve to fill vacancies. The idea I had in mind was that we should try to maintain the Civilian Conservation Corps companies as near as possible at full strength, whatever that number may be.

If anyone visits any of these camps, he will find that the C. C. C. companies are filled up with enrollees every 6 months. Then, by reason of the young men in the camps finding employment at other places, or because of unsatisfactory conduct, or whatever the reason, the personnel in each company begins to dwindle.

Let us say, for instance, that the C. C. C. company is assigned to the Forest Service, which lays out a program of work. The Forest Service supervisory personnel cannot carry out the complete program unless they have the full complement of men. For that reason it is highly desirable to keep the number of enrollees at the full number in the camps. That could be done by having a reserve of men available to be sent to the camps to fill vacancies from time to time.

I ran into a practical objection to such a plan, however, and that is that men are enrolled for service in the Civilian Conservation Corps at no expense to the United States. The work is done entirely by the State and local authorities. I was not aware of that fact when I first made the proposal. I should not want to have the expense of enrollment transferred to the Federal Government. If it were necessary to do that in order to keep the camps up to their full strength, it would fasten a very material expense upon the United States.

For that reason I hesitate to offer the amendment, but I do hope that as a result of these remarks and as a result of the study which I trust the officials of the Corps will undertake, they will find a way to keep the C. C. C companies up to full strength; otherwise they cannot adequately render the service they are intended to perform for whatever agency of Government the companies are working under. To show that my suggestion has received attention, I ask to have included as a part of my remarks a letter which I received from Mr. W. Frank Persons, Director of the United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor, and also a letter which I receiver from Mr. Robert Fechner, director of emergency conservation work, in which they both discussed the high desirability of keeping the C. C. C. camps at full enrolled strength.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 11, 1937.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HAYDEN: I appreciate your thoughtfulness in sending me recently a memorandum on the subject of maintaining Civilian Conservation Corps companies at maximum strength. I read it with much interest.

As you know, the policies of the corps are determined by Mr. Fechner. Members of the advisory council, representing the four cooperating departments, are consulted on matters of major importance. The subject of monthly enrollments has been discussed on a number of occasions in the past by the advisory council.

In order to have the viewpoint of the State relief and welfare agencies which serve the State selecting agencies, I recently asked the opinion of each State director of selection as to the relative advantages of monthly and quarterly enrollments. Only 14 of the 48 States favored the monthly enrollment plan. Prevailing opinion indicated that monthly enrollments would be more costly and time-consuming to the selecting agencies (who are uncompensated from Federal funds for their work) and would withdraw from their normal duties at too frequent intervals the local workers who serve as selecting agents.

As you know, the Department of Labor has not set up a separate field organization for selection purposes, but has enlisted the voluntary services of the State and local welfare people who are acquainted with the needs of the families from which C. C. C. applicants come. We are greatly advantaged by the splendid service which these organizations and individuals have rendered without cost to the C. C. C. program during the past 4 years. Over 1,600,000 young men have been selected and sent forward as a result of this economical plan. You can readily understand, therefore, how embarrassing it might be from a selection standpoint to recommend a system of enrollments which would be burdensome upon these agencies which serve us.

As to the advisability of having "reservoir" camps, as a means of maintaining maximum work camp strength, I do not feel competent to express an opinion since it is a matter so clearly within the province of the War Department under our present plans of C. C. C. operation. During the early days of the corps such camps were temporarily set up until work projects could be approved. The morale of enrollees thus retained for a number of days or weeks without any useful work to do, frequently suffered.

I appreciate the interest which prompts your thoughtful memorandum, and feel sure that Mr. Fechner will give it consideration as permanent plans of operation are discussed. I have merely indicated one or two considerations which undoubtedly enter the problem.

With all good wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,

W. FRANK PERSONS,
For the Secretary of Labor.

EMERGENCY CONSERVATION WORK,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1937.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HAYDEN: I have a copy of the memorandum that you addressed on April 20, 1937, to each member of my advisory council and myself, in which you suggested that provisions should be made for filling all vacancies in Civilian Conservation Corps enrollments by a system of continuous monthly selection and enrollment. I want to assure you that I fully appreciate the interest and the careful thought that you have given to this important matter.

You will be interested to know that my advisory council and myself have, on many occasions, seriously discussed and considered the same subject. While it is undoubtedly true that the technical agencies cooperating in Emergency Conservation Work (Civilian Conservation Corps) would like to see each Civilian Conservation Corps camp maintained at full authorized strength, the representatives of these technical agencies on my advisory council have recognized the difficulties inherent in the situation and have not pressed for a change in the quarterly replacement policy that has been in effect since July 1933. We realized that there would be losses through enrollees securing jobs and through desertion and other causes.

When the organization was first set up we provided for this by getting the approval of the President to enroll 10 percent above what was considered to be a standard figure. That is, a camp was expected to have not less than 180 enrollees and therefore the maximum strength for the camp was set at 200. Unfortunately, many project superintendents and others connected with the technical operation of the camp seem to have forgotten this arrangement and they appear to feel that the 200-man maximum was also to be the man-strength of the company. That was not the case. If a plan such as you suggest was put into effect, it would add substantially to the cost of operation.

While it is true that enrollees promoted to the position of assistant leader and leader may be demoted when the enrollee strength of the company drops below certain figures as a matter of practical operation, this has rarely taken place. Assistant leaders and leaders are almost invariably the best men in their company and naturally are the ones who are most likely to be offered jobs in private industry. This in itself creates a constant turn-over in the assistant leader and leader personnel and if it should happen that some assistant leader or leader had to be demoted under the regulation, I am quite confident he would not long remain demoted.

I will be glad to again take this matter up with my advisory council at their next meeting and discuss in detail the proposal contained in your memorandum.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT FECHNER, Director.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the bottom of page 1, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the provisions of this act shall continue for the period of 2 years after July 1, 1937, and no longer.

Mr. BYRD. The purpose of that amendment, Mr. President, is very simple. It is to confine the operations of this measure to 2 years from July 1, 1937.

I have observed the work of the C. C. C. camps, and I am heartily in favor of the operation of the camps under the condition that now exists; but I do not believe we should make this a permanent agency of the Government. There are many reasons why it should not be done. The amendment I have offered is to conform to the bill as passed by the House and to limit the operation of the measure to 2 years from the 1st of next July.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	La Follette	Pope
Ashurst	Connally	Lee	Robinson
Austin	Dieterich	Lodge	Schwartz
Bailey	Duffy	Logan	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Ellender	Lonergan	Sheppard
Berry	Frazier	McAdoo	Smathers
Black	George	McCarran	Smith
Borah	Gerry	McGill	Stelwer
Bridges	Gillette	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Brown, Mich.	Green	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Brown, N. H.	Hale	Minton	Townsend
Bulkley	Hatch	Moore	Vandenberg
Burke	Hayden	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrd	Herring	Neely	Walsh
Byrnes	Hitchcock	Norris	Wheeler
Capper	Holt	O'Mahoney	White
Caraway	Hughes	Pepper
Chavez	King	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the merits of the amendment at all, but a number of the Senators have come in who perhaps do not understand what the single issue is. The bill which comes from the Senate Committee on Education and Labor provides a permanent authorization for the Civilian Conservation Corps. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] would limit the operation of the corps to 2 years. Frankly, as I see it, the result will be the same either way. Every realist knows that the Civilian Conservation Corps will continue to exist whether we write the words "2 years" in the bill or leave it as it is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would there not be this difference, however, that, with a limitation of 2 years, inevitably when the termination of the period approaches there will be a slackening of the activities of the C. C. C. because of the lack of knowledge as to what will be its fate; whereas if it were permanent, while each year it would depend on the appropriation available, those in charge of the organization would be able to make more definite plans from year to year for the activities of the camps than if the organization automatically ended at the expiration of 2 years, requiring a reenactment in order that they might go forward with the administration of the act?

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator what I meant by the statement that there was no difference was that there was no difference as to whether the camps shall continue to function. We all know, every realist here knows, that the C. C. C. camps will continue to exist, and that 95 percent of the people of the United States want them to continue to exist.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I wish to make just one statement; then I will yield. There is a great difference, however, in the opinion of those who really believe in economical and efficient operation. It is far more economical for those in charge to be able to make plans and to know that their operations may continue so far as the law is concerned, than it is to split up the operations and be compelled to have the matter taken up every 2 years. Those who actually believe in economy, and are willing to face things realistically, I say, will vote to make the C. C. C. a permanent organization. I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, does the Senator attach any significance to the last three words in the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, namely, the words "and no longer"—that the organization shall be extended for a period of 2 years and no longer? Is there any significance to those words?

Mr. BLACK. I do not attach any significance to them, for I think there could be put in all the "no longers" anybody desires, but still the Senate and the other House next year would continue to function. I think, however, there is this significance, that the loss to the taxpayers would be greater by using the words "and no longer", because about 3 or 4 months before the time came when the organization expired the administrators would not know what to do. There would be but a hollow victory won by the exponents of economy. They might say, "Well, we won a great victory; we provided this organization shall last 2 years and no longer." But that is all it would be, because at the end of 2 years, just as stated by the farseeing Senator from Idaho, Congress would meet; it would pass another, and it would strike out the words "no longer." It might say "2 more years and no longer", but the people of this country are overwhelming in favor of the C. C. C. camps. Every Member of this body knows that to be true, and every Member of the other body knows it to be true. Everyone of them will know it 2 years from now; and I venture the assertion that if the roll should be called and the Senator should vote on the question whether or not to continue the C. C. C. camps—I do not mean whether to make their life 2 years or permanent—there would not be five votes on this floor against the camps. I am perfectly willing to try it out, so far as I am concerned.

However, the point I wish to make clear to the Senate is that while the administration did recommend at this time that a law be passed to make the C. C. C. permanent, and the pending bill provides for permanent camps, the pending bill is not perfect; and if we write another law 2 years from now, that will not be perfect. However, the bill is as perfect as we could make it at this time, in view of the situation as we found it.

The amendment proposes to limit the C. C. C. to 2 years. What would be the effect? If I am right in my surmise—and I believe most Senators will agree I am—the C. C. C. will be continued 2 years from now. Then 5 or 6 months before the expiration of the 2 years the administrators will begin to say, "How much can we spend? We have got to limit our purchases, because if we do not limit them we may have too much material left at the end of the 2 years." They get their goods cheaper if they know their authority will last more than 2 years. They may ask, "Can we make a plan or a survey in order to go into this field of activity?" The answer is, "No; we have to be careful about incurring any expenses for that, because the authority ends at the end of 2 years." Someone may say, "But you know Congress will continue it." The administrator replies, "Yes; I know Congress will continue it, but I know also that someone will be attacking me for incurring expenses when the Congress has not already provided for the expenditure."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator well knows that the Congress must appropriate the money for this activity?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BYRD. And that an appropriation is not effective until July 1, and purchases cannot be made until the appropriation is passed each year in January or February or March?

Mr. BLACK. I know also that when there is an authorization for continuing an organization, those who have to make the plans can plan a great deal better than if the organization is temporary.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator say that the Department makes purchases and contracts before the appropriations are made by Congress?

Mr. BLACK. I say they will make their plans for a continuing organization when the law provides for a continuing organization. I understand it looks more economical to say, "We are just going to provide an authorization for 2 years", and that would be true if the organization were really going to be cut off in 2 years, but I very seriously doubt if even my good friend from Virginia would be willing to say he is going to vote to cut it off in 2 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator when, under the present law, supposing there is no further legislation, the C. C. C. organization would cease to exist?

Mr. BLACK. Under the present law?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. It would cease to exist this year.

Mr. KING. On what date?

Mr. BLACK. On June 30, as I recall.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether, in view of the fact that the law provides that the organization shall die on June 30, there have been any restrictions that have impeded the successful operations of this organization during the last 2 or 3 months?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator was not here when I referred to the fact that I had a letter from a citizen in my State who had been called on to make a bid, and those in charge of the organization had been compelled to put such terms in the proposals and to call attention to the fact that the law might not be continued, that my constituent wrote me to know whether or not he should bid at all. He was fearful of doing so, and I gathered from his letter that those who did submit bids were doing so with fear and trembling.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Referring to the question asked by the Senator from Utah, there are a number of these Government C. C. C. camps in Nevada which is entitled to six of them. Some of the camps, on account of the weather, are shifted to the high mountains in the summer and to the valleys in the winter. The camps are not being shifted at present by reason of the very uncertainty as to what action will be taken between now and July the first.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Many of these camps are soil-conservation camps, and a number of them are drainage camps, cooperating with the Bureau of Agricultural Engineering in the draining of land. Within the last 3 weeks two applications have come to Washington from my State from those interested in a continuation of certain drainage work which has already been undertaken by the C. C. C. camps with the cooperation of Dr. Fechner and the Department of Agriculture. The statement was made to the applicants that until it is known what Congress is going to do with respect to the extension of the C. C. C. those in charge of the organization can do nothing between now and July 1st toward the purchase of any supplies, material, or equipment that will be necessary to continue the work of the various camps along the line referred to. That illustrates that even in May, nearly 2 months before the expiration of the present law, the existing authority for the C. C. C., the director of the organization is unable to determine what his policy shall be for any length of time after July 1.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the Senator. Of course everyone knows the difference between certainty and uncertainty in business plans. A man has a place of business rented, and his lease expires next month, we will say; he finds it impossible to ascertain whether he can rent beyond the next month. Who would claim that his business could function well when he was left in such doubt and uncertainty? I think that is simply a truism.

I may state to the Senator that I shall be very happy, of course, to have the Senate vote upon the pending proposal. I believe its adoption would make a difference in the efficiency in the operation of the camps; but whatever the vote may be on the amendment, I think I am looking at very few Senators who will be here 2 years from now who will not vote then to continue the C. C. C. camps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. BYRD demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when Mr. MCNARY's name was called). The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. If the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] were present, he would vote "nay." If the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and therefore withhold my vote. If present, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

I announce that the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON]. If the junior Senator from Vermont were present, he would vote "nay." If the Senator from Colorado were present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. If present, the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay", and the Senator from North Dakota would vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who, if present, would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] and vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are detained from the Senate because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained on departmental matters.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] is necessarily detained.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] is detained on official business. He has a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea", and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 42, as follows:

So Mr. BYRD's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I wish to ask for the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill. I do not make the request in order to prevent the offering of any further amendment or to prevent any Senator from speaking if he may so desire. I merely wish to be sure that the yeas and nays shall be ordered on the final passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill the meaning of section 6, page 4, wherein it is provided—

> The President may order Reserve officers of the Army and officers of the Naval and Marine Reserves to active duty with the corps under the provisions of section 37a of the National Defense Act and the act of February 28, 1925, respectively.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, that simply authorizes the procedure which has heretofore been in effect. It authorizes the calling into active service of Reserve officers and the utilization of their experience in camps. That is the authority which is given in the bill. That is the authority which has heretofore been given and which has been exercised.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the services of such officers are merely in aid of maintaining discipline in the camps.

Mr. FRAZIER. Section 12, on page 7, of the bill gives the President authority "to utilize the services and facilities of such departments or agencies of the Government as he may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act." While the pending bill is an improvement over the present law and while I feel that the Civilian Conservation Corps camps have been of great benefit in general, yet there has been some criticism of the military or semimilitary control of the camps.

The Baltimore Sun of April 8 carried a front-page story under the headline, "Youth Groups Ask C. C. C. Shift From War to Interior Bureau", and there is quite a long article appearing under that headline. I have noticed in the last pages of the hearings before the House committee on the pending bill that considerable correspondence along the same line was inserted in the record.

It seems that a little publication known as Happy Days circulates through the C. C. C. camps. This particular publication purports to be an official organ of the C. C. C. One issue, according to information I have, was headed "Written by C. C. C. for C. C. C." Then under the name "Happy Days" were the words "Authorized weekly newspaper of the Civilian Conservation Corps." I understand, however, that the head of the Civilian Conservation Corps has denied that this newspaper is an official organ of the C. C. C., and repudiates some of the editorials which have appeared in it. At any rate, it has been circulated through the camps as a sort of an official or semiofficial organ, and there has been a good deal of comment on some editorials appearing in that publication and some of the orders by the War Department in regard to censoring other papers and magazines which have gone into the camps, or in regard to keeping them out of the camps.

One order headed "Subversive Activities" was issued by Maj. Gen. Albert J. Bowley, Third Corps Area commander, and in it he referred to what the publication known as Happy Days said about a paper called Champion of Youth, criticizing it, and that paper was barred from the C. C. C. camps. Some six or seven of the youth organizations which signed a petition and wrote a letter to the President, objected to the discrimination against these magazines that have been barred from the C. C. C. camps; and the discrimination seems to me rather unfair.

I am glad, however, that the pending bill removes from the law some of the military features that now exist, and before the corps is made a permanent organization I hope it can be taken out of the control of the War Department and put under some other department altogether.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I sincerely regret that the Senate expressed opposition to the House bill and indicated its preference for the Senate bill. As stated a few moments ago, I would be willing to vote for the House bill, but I feel constrained to withhold my support of the present bill.

There are a number of provisions in it which I think are unwise and unsound. I am unwilling to vote to fasten this organization upon the Federal Government and make it one of its permanent organizations. I believe it to be unwise—not knowing what the conditions will be 2 years hence; not knowing what economic and political changes may be wrought in the meantime; not knowing the results of the activities and work of this organization in the interim—to fasten this organization on the Government and make it a permanent part of the Federal system of government. We do not know what the developments may be within the next 2 years, nor what forces or influences will dominate this organization, or what policies will be followed which will affect the thoughts and lives and habits of the enrollees.

Moreover, I am not willing at this time to support a plan which looks to the Federal Government permanently engaging in activities such as those comprehended under this bill. If the authority of the Federal Government is expanded and the States and their local subdivisions voluntarily or involuntarily submit to the encroachments of the National Government, then there will be demands not only that this organization be made permanent but that the field of its operations shall be widened until it shall become a factor in many fields of human thought and endeavor. If the Federal Government shall extend its authority as the years go by, and increase the number of fields into which it enters, then, as I have indicated, this organization may expand until it may be a controlling force in many fields in which the youth of the country are called upon to operate.

I regret, as I have stated, that I am denied the opportunity of voting for the House bill. I am, therefore, constrained to vote against the Senate bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point an extract from the message from the President of the United States, which was transmitted to Congress on March 21, 1933, recommending the establishment of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

I propose to create a civilian conservation corps to be used in simple work, not interfering with normal employment, and confining itself to forestry, the prevention of soil erosion, flood control, and similar projects. I call your attention to the fact that this type of work is of definite, practical value, not only through the prevention of great present financial loss but also as a means of creating future national wealth. This is brought home by the news we are receiving today of vast damage caused by floods on the Ohio and other rivers.

Control and direction of such work can be carried on by existing machinery of the Departments of Labor, Agriculture, War, and Interior.

I estimate that 250,000 men can be given temporary employment by early summer if you give me authority to proceed within the next 2 weeks.

I ask no new funds at this time. The use of unobligated funds, now appropriated for public works, will be sufficient for several months.

This enterprise is an established part of our national policy. It will conserve our precious natural resources. It will pay dividends to the present and future generations. It will make improvements in National and State domains which have been largely forgotten in the past few years of industrial development.

More important, however, than the material gains will be the moral and spiritual value of such work. The overwhelming majority of unemployed Americans, who are now walking the streets and receiving private or public relief, would infinitely prefer to work. We can take a vast army of these unemployed out into healthful surroundings. We can eliminate to some extent at least the threat that enforced idleness brings to spiritual and moral stability. It is not a panacea for all the unemployment but it is an essential step in this emergency. I ask its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], as amended, substituting the Senate bill for the House bill.

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass? On the final passage of the bill the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]; but if he were present, I understand that he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." Since I intend to vote similarly, I am free to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], all of whom, I am informed, would vote "yea" if present.

I have heretofore voted in the negative; but I withdraw the vote which I cast under a misapprehension and announce a pair on this question with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If present, the Senator from Pennsylvania

[Mr. GUFFEY] would vote "yea", and if I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] have a general pair; but on this question, I am advised, both Senators would vote "yea."

Mr. BYRD. My colleague [Mr. GLASS] is detained because of illness in his family. He has a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My colleague [Mr. BONE] is detained because of illness in his family. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] is necessarily detained.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are detained in various Government departments.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] is detained on official business.

I am advised that all the Senators I have mentioned, if present and voting, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 67, nays 2, as follows:

LANDS FOR SHIVWITZ BAND OF INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on the 17th of this month the Senate passed three bills, and on the same day the House of Representatives passed three identical bills. The bills relate to the addition of small tracts of land to some Indian reservations in Utah.

The first bill is Senate bill 1833, which is identical with House bill 6250. I ask that the House bill be laid before the Senate and acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 6250) to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Shivwitz Band of Paiute Indians, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundary of the Shivwitz Indian Reservation in Utah is hereby extended to include the south half of section 14, and the south half of section 15, and section 16, township 41 south, range 17 west, Salt Lake meridian: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall designate a stock driveway across said reservation, not to exceed 660 feet in width, from a point on the east line of section 23, township 41 south, range 17 west, in a northwesterly direction through Jacob's Twist to an exit through section 16, township 41 south, range 17 west, Salt Lake meridian. The said driveway shall be staked and shall be used in accordance with rules and regulations which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Valid rights in the above lands initiated prior to the approval hereof shall not be affected by this act. Any lands not belonging to the United States within the described area may be exchanged for other lands outside said area under the terms and conditions of the act of May 3, 1902 (32 Stat. L. 188), or the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. L. 1269), as amended, and any lands so acquired by the United States shall become a part of the said reservation.

LANDS FOR KANOSH BAND OF INDIANS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 6249) to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Kanosh Band of Paiute Indians, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundary of the Kanosh Indian Reservation in Utah is hereby extended to include the west half of the northwest quarter of section 1, and the northeast quarter of section 22, township 23 south, range 5 west, Salt Lake meridian: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall designate a stock driveway across said reservation not to exceed 660 feet in width. The said driveway shall be staked and shall be used in accordance with rules and regulations which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Valid rights in the above lands initiated prior to the approval hereof shall not be affected by this act.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On the 17th day of May the Senate passed Senate bill 1876 and the House passed House bill 6249, to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Kanosh Band of Paiute Indians. I ask for the immediate consideration of House bill 6249, just laid before the Senate.

LANDS FOR KOOSHAREM BAND OF INDIANS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 6252) to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Koosharem Band of Paiute Indians, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boundary of the Koosharem Indian Reservation in Utah is hereby extended to include the east half of section 8, township 27 south, range 1 west, Salt Lake meridian.

Valid rights in the above lands initiated prior to the approval hereof shall not be affected by this act.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On the 17th day of May the Senate also passed Senate bill 1877 and the House passed House bill 6252, for the relief of the Koosharem Band of Paiute Indians. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6252, just laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in order that the House of Representatives may have notice of the action of the Senate on these three Indian bills, I ask unanimous consent that a message be sent to the House advising the House that the bills have been passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GOLDEN GATE EXPOSITION—PROTECTION OF COPYRIGHTS AND PATENTS

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, from the Committee on Patents there was reported favorably yesterday House Joint Resolution 292, for the protection of copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1939. The joint resolution is in the usual form followed in similar cases, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at the Golden Gate International Exposition to be held at San Francisco, Calif., in 1939, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1937

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father everlasting, by searching we cannot find Thee out, nor understand the Almighty to perfection. We approach the light, but its source and glory we cannot measure. We pray that our footsteps may not be timid; give us the open way and the clear sky, where there is neither separation nor the night of mystery. Lead us to enter heartily and earnestly into the labors of this day; we trust that our hearts may be fresh and our visions clear; let the hours be consecrated to vigorous efforts and honest aims. With truth, honor, and manhood may we claim our goodly heritage. The Lord help us to live fine lives, to do our work well, and to exemplify the excellence of faith in God our Father. We beseech Thee to go before us in every temptation, in the way of every duty, and in the approach of every human problem. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Labor may be permitted to continue its investigation of the textile industry during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia may be permitted to sit today during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I understand it is the wish of the leadership to complete the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was not concluded on yesterday. There was a special order granted making the relief bill in order at the beginning of the session today and, probably, that special order would hold good until the consideration of the Interior bill is completed, but in order to obviate any question about it, I ask unanimous consent that that special order continue in force and that the relief bill be in order upon the completion of consideration of the Interior Department bill, and continue as the unfinished order of business until its consideration is completed, and that the House, when it adjourns today, adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to state to the Members of the House that the other day when this matter was made a special order of business, there was some discussion on the floor in which the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from New York and myself participated with reference to amendments to be offered to the bill. At that time the bill had not been introduced and at that time I believed I was justified in assuming that the bill carried a provision for $1,500,000,000 as reported by the committee and that the $1,500,000,000 was not in the bill as a committee amendment, but in the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations. Formerly when bills have come out of the Committee on Appropriations, particularly as to amounts, it has not been customary, at least, for the amounts to be changed in the form of a committee amendment, and I assumed at that time, not having had an opportunity to examine the bill, that the amount of $1,500,000,000 was in the bill as reported by the committee and not as a committee amendment. At that time the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from New York, and I believe, the other Members of the House or at least the members of the committee knew that I was speaking on behalf of an amendment which I proposed to offer to increase the appropriation to $3,000,000,000 and it was understood at that time that full opportunity would be given to the membership of the House to discuss this amendment as well as to give it consideration. Now, the situation is such that if any member of the Committee on Appropriations, who would have priority in seeking recognition, were to secure recognition before I had an opportunity, and would offer a compromise amendment of one billion and a quarter, that matter would be disposed of before I would be in position to offer an amendment to the amendment because any amendment I might offer at that time would be an amendment in the third degree and therefore would not be in order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BOILEAU. Gladly.

Mr. TABER. A substitute amendment would be in order after an amendment to the committee amendment was offered.

Mr. BOILEAU. If an amendment to the amendment naming a compromise amount of one billion and a quarter, for instance, were agreed to, as I understand the rules of the House, a further amendment would not be in order. I may be in error, and it is a matter I want to clarify, and I am sure all the Members are desirous that the situation be made clear, because, as I understand, if the committee should accept an amendment at one billion and a quarter dollars, no further amendments would be in order to change the amount.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will permit, as I understand the rule, and I would suggest that the gentleman put his question as a parliamentary inquiry, as the committee amendment is offered, an amendment to the amendment would be in order and also one substitute amendment. In other words, after the amendment to the amendment has been disposed of, another amendment would be in order, as I understand it, and I would suggest that the gentleman submit the question as a parliamentary inquiry rather than have a statement made from the floor.

Mr. BOILEAU. As I understand the rules, and I may be in error because I do not claim to have any profound knowledge of the rule, if the amendment were turned down, then another amendment to the amendment would be in order, but if it were accepted, then a further amendment pertaining to the figures would not be in order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Gladly, and after the gentleman from Missouri makes a statement I shall be pleased to propound the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman from Wisconsin, of course, is submitting his inquiry for parliamentary reasons and understands there can be pending simultaneously an amendment to a bill, an amendment to the amendment, a substitute for the amendment and an amendment to the substitute. The four propositions may be pending simultaneously, and as rapidly as the amendment to the amendment or the amendment to the substitute are disposed of further amendments of the same degree are in order until the two are perfected. Then both the amendment and the substitute having been perfected, the House takes its choice of the two. So under the rules of the House the gentleman is assured of ample opportunity of having his proposition considered in the perfecting of one or the other.

Mr. BOILEAU. In view of the fact that the committee amendment pertains only to the figure—that is, the amendment on the last of page 1 and the top of page 2, a committee amendment—could there be only one amendment to that?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman could offer an amendment to the committee amendment or he could offer a substitute for the committee amendment; or, if someone else offered a substitute, he could propose another figure as an amendment to the substitute. The rules provide opportunity for consideration of any figure. It is a right which cannot be denied the gentleman.

Mr. BOILEAU. Could a substitute be offered containing a different figure from that figure, so long as the amendment pertains only to the figure? In other words, can you change the figure and have it reach nothing else by both a substitute amendment and an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The question first comes upon the amendment to the amendment. That being disposed of, further amendments are in order until the committee amendment is perfected. The question then recurs on the amendment to the substitute. When the substitute has been perfected, the vote is then taken on the perfected substitute to the perfected committee amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. And I will say, so far as I am concerned, it will be my purpose to give the gentleman an opportunity to have a vote on his amendment, and to give all Members an opportunity to have a vote and to offer an amendment and to talk on it and continue as long as they reasonably can under the circumstances.

Mr. BOILEAU. I have no doubt of the gentleman's attitude on that. He expressed it the other day, and I am sure he would do all he could to give us that assurance.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Under the rules of the House, the gentleman's right to offer his proposition cannot be denied.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has stated that a substitute amendment could be offered, and that that could be pending even during the time that an amendment to the amendment is pending. Because of that situation, Mr. Speaker, is it a certainty that Members of the House would have an opportunity, by either offering a substitute amendment cr an amendment to the committee amendment, to be sure that the House would have an opportunity to vote either for or against an increase of the appropriation, as each individual Member may see fit to desire to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt that whoever may be the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole would so hold.

Mr. BOILEAU. And that a substitute amendment could be offered after an amendment to the amendment had been agreed to?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will allow the Chair to state the parliamentary procedure, this is a committee amendment to the bill. An amendment could be offered to that, and a substitute for the committee amendment could be offered. An amendment to the substitute could be offered, and all could be pending at the same time. Of course, the amendment to the committee amendment would first have to be disposed of, and then the amendment to the substitute would have to be disposed of, and then the question would arise as between the substitute as amended and the original committee amendment as amended, and all could be pending at the same time.

Mr. BOILEAU. Could an amendment to the amendment and a substitute amendment be offered changing the figures in the bill?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BOILEAU. With the assurance of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], in which assurance I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will go along, that we will have this opportunity to offer an amendment to increase the appropriation to $3,000,000,000, I shall not object to the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia please restate his request? The Chair thinks it proper to make this observation: Before this controversy arose as to whether or not it might be necessary to carry the relief bill over until next week, the Chair had given the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, assurance that she should have her call on Monday next. Will the gentleman from Virginia please restate his request?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Why is it necessary to convene at 11 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. WOODRUM. Merely for the convenience of Members who do not want to have a session on Saturday. As far as I am concerned, I am going to hope that the House will cooperate to the extent of completing the relief bill on Friday. I do not want the bill to go over until next week, and there is no reason why it should.

Mr. SNELL. I shall not object to the gentleman's request to convene at 11 o'clock if the responsibility of beginning at 11 o'clock will be assumed by the leadership of the House, and no one will be allowed to get in with 20 or 25 minutes in which to make an address. I think that is the responsibility of the gentleman's side of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. I shall take the responsibility of protecting the committee tomorrow by objecting to any matters not connected with this bill being considered.

Mr. SNELL. I am very glad the gentleman will take that responsibility, because I think it rests upon the gentleman; but if he does not take it, I shall object to meeting at 11 o'clock.

Mr. WOODRUM. And may I ask the gentleman from Texas whether I have his cooperation in completing the bill on Friday?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman certainly has.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order for today making the relief bill in order be continued and that the relief bill be in order at the conclusion of the pending bill, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1938, with the exception of the District of Columbia business on Monday, and that the House, when it adjourns today, adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, in preparation for the consideration of the relief bill today and tomorrow I have gathered by questionnaire statistics with reference to the population, bonded indebtedness, assessed valuation, and annual taxes raised by States. I desire for the purpose of the record to have this available to the Members when the House meets tomorrow. I ask unanimous consent that as a part of my remarks I may insert in the RECORD at this point a table which I have prepared as a result of that questionnaire.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to report to the House the unfortunate loss of Mrs. John Lesinski, who died suddenly this morning.

In view of that fact, I would like to have it made of record, and ask that my colleague, Mr. LESINSKI, be excused from further attendance indefinitely.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6958, the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Salaries and expenses: For carrying out the provisions of section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education, etc.", approved February 23, 1917, as amended by the act of October 6, 1917 (U. S. C., title 20, sec. 15), and of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved June 8, 1936 (49 Stat., p. 1488), $348,560.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEEN: On page 117, line 5, strike out "$348,560" and insert in lieu thereof "$350,000."

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I am offering seeks to restore the full amount of $350,000 authorized in section 4 of the George-Deen Vocational Act enacted last year.

This amendment will not be necessary unless another amendment, which I intend to offer, is adopted. The second amendment, which I intend to offer in just a moment, if I can receive recognition, will seek to appropriate $14,483,000 for vocational education, as authorized in the George-Deen Act. Unless the second amendment is adopted, then the amendment which is offered now will not be necessary, for the reason that this amendment provides the funds for administration of the new act, and unless the full appropriation is provided for, this administration fund will not be necessary. I therefore hope that the Committee will adopt this amendment and then, in a few minutes, adopt the amendment which I shall offer for the full amount.

Mr. Chairman, last year when the bill for vocational education was reported by the committee it contained an amount of $6,000,000. This House, after lengthy debate in Committee, overrode the bill brought in by the Committee on Education and restored the full amount in H. R. 12120, of which I was one of the authors, together with Senator GEORGE. And the House, by a vote of more than 3 to 1, passed that bill.

To the new Member let me say it is a binding contract. It is not my project. It is not in my district any more than it is in yours. It is impossible to tell you in 5 minutes the many things I would like to tell you about vocational education, but I want to quote two sentences from what I think is one of the greatest speeches I ever heard delivered on the floor of this House. I quote from the RECORD of May 26, 1936, when our distinguished floor leader, at present our beloved Speaker, took the floor of the House in support of H. R. 12120, and said:

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I imagine some Members may get tired of the reiteration of the statements so often made by me on the floor of the House that in my deliberate judgment, although I may be in error in my conclusions, the very best money spent by the Federal Government is for appropriations for the Public Health Service and those appropriations for vocational education in the various phases. [Applause.]

Another sentence:

I have always felt that it is at least partly the duty of the Federal Government to make reasonably fair appropriations for this purpose. I am not afraid of this $12,000,000 for this purpose, because I believe that as far as the youths of our country are concerned it is the best money that we can spend. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEEN] has expired.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The suggestion I wanted to make to the gentleman is that perhaps in the interest of time it might be well for him to withhold his amendment at this time to see what action the Committee may take with reference to the amendment which the gentleman says he intends to offer to the next paragraph.

Mr. DEEN. Answering the gentleman from Oklahoma, I have conferred with the Parliamentarian and am advised that since we are reading the bill by paragraphs we would not be allowed to go back except by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have no doubt the gentleman should get unanimous consent to do just that. The committee admits that in case the next paragraph should be increased that it would take more funds to administer the act.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment appropriating the full amount for administrative purposes be withheld until the following amendment appropriating the full amount authorized by the George-Deen Act is disposed of. If the full amount is appropriated, this first amendment will not be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the amendment just offered by him may continue as pending until after the reading of the next paragraph and disposition is made of another amendment which he will seek to offer when the present amendment shall be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I presume that the gentleman means after the disposition of the next paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. DEEN. That is correct.

Mr. FULLER. That is what he means, not just his amendment.

Mr. DEEN. No; all amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the request means at the conclusion of the consideration of the next paragraph to the bill and all amendments thereto.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Further development of vocational education: For carrying out the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories", approved June 8, 1936 (49 Stat., pp. 1488–1490), $7,241,500: Provided, That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the apportionment to the States and Territories shall be computed on the basis of 50 percent of the sum authorized for each of the purposes enumerated in sections 1, 2, and 3: Provided further, That notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1, 2, and 3 providing minimum allotments, the allotment of funds to any State or Territory for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, shall be not less than 50 percent of the minimum amount specified for each of the purposes enumerated in these sections: Provided further, That the apportionment to the States shall be computed on the basis of not to exceed $7,398,750 for the fiscal year 1938.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEEN: On page 117, lines 10 to 20, strike out "$7,241,500" in lines 10 and 11 and the remainder of the paragraph with the period at the end of line 23 and insert in lieu thereof "$14,483,000."

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to insert the amount of $14,483,000 authorized in the George-Deen Vocational Act in lieu of the amount of $7,241,500. The amendment, if adopted, will strike out the language beginning with the word "Provided", in line 11, through the figures "1938", in line 23, because that language will not be necessary if the full amount is inserted, for the reason that the language contained in lines 11 through 23 sets up the distribution of the funds in the event only half of the amount is appropriated.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not trespass on the patience of the House. This is the only time I am going to ask for on this important matter. I cannot, of course, say what I should like to; but let me remind this House of the fact that before this matter is disposed of there will be an appeal made on the basis that we are unbalancing the Budget, that we are putting in this bill $7,000,000 more than was recommended by the committee. We shall be reminded of a veto at the White House. So far as I am concerned—and I want to make this absolutely clear—when I sign a contract to pay, whether it be one dime or one dollar, that contract is binding on me. It is just as binding if I make a bad trade as it is if I make a good one. Assuming that we have made a bad trade in this vocational education matter—and we have not—but assuming that we have, it is a contract, binding between the Members of this Congress and the people of this country; and I, for one, will carry out my contract. If it means my job, any man in my district is welcome to take it if he wants it. In other words, a contract, a covenant, exists between this Congress and the country, irrespective and regardless of whether or not the President may want to approve the bill. If he had not intended to approve the appropriation, he should not have approved the legislative act. I am not criticizing the President. I am for him when I think he is right. I am for his Court bill, not because he is for it but because I think it is right; and I am for this vocational education, irrespective of whether he is in agreement with me.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEEN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. I presume this contract the gentleman refers to arises on account of the fact that Congress authorized the expenditure of the money. Is that correct?

Mr. DEEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DIES. If that be true, if authorization sets up a contractual obligation and we should appropriate all of the money that we have authorized, we would break this Government within 6 months.

Mr. DEEN. That is the gentleman's responsibility along with that of his colleagues. A matter that has been authorized is a contract, I contend.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman think we ought to appropriate it?

Mr. DEEN. We ought to appropriate it or not authorize it, and I for one stand ready not to agree to any further authorizations for any purpose unless we are going to carry out our contracts.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. In the first place, as I understand it, the Congress stands for the educational program provided in the George-Deen Act.

Mr. DEEN. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. The Bureau of the Budget has canceled that to the extent that they have refused to appropriate the amount authorized.

Mr. DEEN. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. The question now is whether we shall do what Congress directs us to do or what the Budget directs us to do.

Mr. DEEN. The gentleman is correct. Other gentlemen will discuss with you the vocational programs in the respective States, what the State legislatures have done and what the States are spending. Other speakers will point out to you the value of vocational training. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of this discussion, let us concede the value of vocational education. There is no contest whatsoever on that point and the committee is in no way in disagreement with the proponents of these amendments as to vocational education. There is no question but what one of the most fundamental things needed in this country is the training of men for skilled labor and for better farming. There are many important matters, Mr. Chairman, before this Congress and in this bill but I dare to add again for your consideration that the greatest issue before the Congress and the American people is that of economy. [Applause.]

The President sent a Budget message to us not long ago and stated in that message that the revenue from income taxes would be $267,000,000 less this year than anticipated and the revenues from other sources would be $337,000,000 less, making a total shortage in anticipated revenues of $604,000,000.

The President also said, and I want you to have this in mind, because when you are considering any matter before the Congress other matters must be taken into consideration in order to draw a complete picture:

> I propose to use every means at my command to eliminate this deficit during the coming fiscal year—

I am reading from the President's message to the Congress—

> I regard it as extremely important that we should achieve a balance of actual income and outgo for the fiscal year 1938, and I appeal to you to join me in a determined effort to bring about that result * * *.
> The maintenance of a sound fiscal policy requires the careful planning of authorizations as well as appropriations. It is impossible to maintain the proper balance between revenues and expenditures unless restraint is exercised with respect to authorizations of appropriations. It is a matter of concern to you and to me who are working for a balanced Budget that so many special groups exert the strongest pressure to bring about increases in Government expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, while we are considering amendments, which cause greater expenditures and increase deficits, we should not lose sight of the President's words:

> I propose to use every means at my command to eliminate these deficits during the coming year.

What we do here may help to force the President to resort to pay cuts throughout the various departments, and our generosity to the cause of vocational education and other needs may result in a flattening of the pay envelope of many in the lower brackets who are having a difficult time now to provide a decent living for their families. I do not care to be a party to that. We have just raised the pay of custodial employees and it would be a tragic thing to bring a pay cut upon these people.

As bad as that is, in my opinion, things far worse may result. Unless the imminence of the danger of the road we are traveling sinks into our conscience we may awaken to conditions undreamed of. People have false conceptions as to how collapses come upon us. There seems to be a general feeling that the amount of the public debt will determine the matter, that theoretically the resources of this country can offset a greater and greater debt and the load limit is far in the future, which might mark the end.

Mr. Chairman, collapses do not come that way. It is not the teaching of history nor the record of mob psychology. Collapses come when the public awakens to a fundamental weakness. The recognition spreads like a forest fire, hysteria appears, and crash and change arrive. Have we forgotten how the debacle of 1929 arrived one day, when a secret fear became everywhere evident and uncontrollable?

People now are talking everywhere that this country is continuing to operate in the red and that deficits and debts are mounting daily. If they have no reason to believe that a concrete program of economy is being carried out to balance the Budget, if they continue to feel that Congress cannot or will not meet the issue, if they think that we have not the courage to say no to the importunities of special groups, if they arrive at a conviction that we have not sufficient self-denial and judgment to govern ourselves, then the way is prepared for hysterical fundamental changes in this Government, irrespective of the amount of the public debt. Such thoughts are being expressed all over the country, and the only way to check those thougnts is to mean and to practice economy.

And so for this vocational education item.

If we had granted in this bill only what the Budget allowed for vocational education, the total of the bill would be approximately $9,000,000 under the Budget estimate. But the proponents of these amendments and many of our colleagues appeared before the committee, and the committee added to the Budget allowance for vocational education an additional $4,241,500, making a total under the George-Deen Act in the bill of $7,421,800. This cut the savings in the Interior bill from $9,000,000 to about $4,741,000, and we labored for 8 weeks making this reduction. The amendments on the floor to this bill have reduced the pitiful saving that we made, to the present amount of $3,792,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment is adopted raising the amount to the full authorization in the George-Deen Act of $14,483,000, which is asked for, we will not have a saving of $9,000,000. We will not have even the present $3,792,000. We will exceed the Budget on the entire bill by about $1,200,000, a fine example of economy. If the amendment, which we understand will later come, is adopted, we will be about what the Budget has set for us. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not all and this is one matter which has not been brought out that I think the House should consider very carefully. The proponents of the amendment should remember that when our committee raised the Budget from $3,000,000 for vocational training to $7,241,000, as it is in the bill, it called attention in the report to the Members of the House that in addition to the amount in this bill there is now a permanent annual appropriation not mentioned in this bill of $7,000,000. This will be available for cooperation with the States for vocational education purposes under the Smith-Hughes Act, and without an amendment, without a dime additional, makes a total of $14,241,500 for the next fiscal year for vocational education.

If the full amount were given as the proponents ask, then the amount would be increased for the next fiscal year to slightly less than $20,000,000.

But that is not all. The President has sent a message to us relative to the finances of our country. This should not fall on deaf ears. It was not just a word of caution, as I read it. I felt an undercurrent of deep seriousness, and a warning too grave to ignore or forget. Therefore, when this matter came to us, our committee presented to the Bureau of the Budget a request to reconsider this item and if possible to send us a revised estimate. The President's Bureau considered it over a period of days, and declined to send a revised estimate increasing the amount over $3,000,000, exclusive of the previous $7,000,000 which I have previously mentioned. The committee voted the increase in the bill without the approval of the President's Bureau of the Budget, and, not satisfied, the proponents seek still more. I do not know the full cause of the Budget's failure to increase the amount, but in the light of the President's ominous economy warning, I cannot help but feel that the financial condition of our country had something to do with it.

I have the impression also, without criticizing anyone, that further study is required to make the vocational program of the George-Deen Act workable and not confused. There are many phases of its objects which need further study and more orderly growth and development than can be attained by a precipitate effort to create a full-grown program. Since the program is not in a condition to be carried out satisfactorily and equitably, since there is a permanent annual appropriation of $7,000,000, since the bill as written adds $7,421,000 to this $7,000,000, and since the President's message is a grave warning, I urge all thinking Members of the House to vote down this amendment and any amendment which will increase the figure above the amount allowed by this bill. Thus we will show that we really mean economy, and set an example for the people of America.

Mr. REED of New York, Mr. DONDERO, Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania, Mr. DIES, and Mr. SHORT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to make a brief statement. It is the purpose of the Chair to be as fair as possible in according recognition on this matter, in which, of course, a great many Members are very vitally interested. The Chair will try to recognize equally those for and against the pending amendment, as far as possible. Two gentlemen have spoken on the majority side, one for and one against the amendment. The one speaking in opposition consumed three times as much time as the one who spoke for the amendment. The Chair feels it would now be fair to recognize some gentlemen in support of the amendment, especially on the minority side, since the other two speakers have been on the majority side.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of seeing if there cannot be an agreement reached as to the amount of time to be used on this particular item. I suggest that inasmuch as a number of Members want to speak on this amendment, and since it is not the purpose of the Committee to cut off anyone who wants to speak, that there may be 40 minutes or 50 minutes of further debate on this amendment alone.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In that connection, may I suggest that it might be left within the discretion of the Chair, if necessary, to limit the speakers to even 2 or 3 minutes, in order that all gentlemen who desire to speak may be accommodated?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, to how many minutes does the gentleman intend to limit debate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have suggested 40 or 50 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 50 minutes.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I object. The gentleman's request is not fair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want to be absolutely fair, but it occurs to me that we must limit debate or we will be here all afternoon on this paragraph.

Mr. FULLER. The friends of this measure are willing to limit debate, but the gentleman knows and every Member on the floor of the House knows there are liable to be two amendments here. If this amendment is adopted, the other amendment will not follow. If this amendment is defeated, another amendment will follow, on which Members ought to have an opportunity to be heard. If the gentleman will arrange to divide the time in some way, it will be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I suggest it would be better to put all the time in one request?

Mr. FULLER. I cannot very well offer my amendment until action is had on the pending amendment. Why not limit debate on this amendment to 30 minutes, and reserve 20 minutes for other amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma permit the Chair to suggest it might be of some advantage to consider the question of limiting debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the chairman of the committee that the request be made for 1 hour of debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. On this one amendment?

Mr. DONDERO. On this amendment.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. There is no unanimous-consent request pending.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman be willing, whatever time is allowed, to suggest that at least half of the time be given to the proponents and half to the opponents, so we will know there is to be some fair disposition of the time?

Mr. RAYBURN. Why not leave that to the Chair?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The Chair, I am sure, will take that into consideration.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. KLEBERG. I wonder if it would not expedite matters to have a raising of hands to find out who wants to talk on this matter, before we limit the time definitely, because in this way we can at least count noses, so to speak.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In that event, every Member who wants to talk on any amendment to the paragraph would raise his hand.

Mr. FULLER. That is not a fair assumption, because we can limit it to this one amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment be limited to 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment close in 40 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York, Mr. SHORT, and Mr. DIES rose.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] had sought recognition of the Chair, and the Chair would feel disposed to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. SHORT. Yes, Mr. Chairman; and I defer to the gentleman from New York, but I should like recognition myself later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, we have been dealing with parks and roads and various other things that cost money. The amendment now before the Committee deals with the future citizens of the United States of America. [Applause.]

I have been interested in the vocational education movement ever since I entered Congress, practically 20 years ago, and I have never failed to take the floor when matters affecting the boys and girls of this country were involved.

Now, let us see just exactly where we stand in this situation. The public fails sometimes to discriminate between an authorization and an appropriation. On June 8 of last year the Committee on Education brought in the George-Deen bill, carrying an authorization of $6,000,000 for vocational education. This House took that bill and raised the amount to $14,400,000; at least two-thirds of the House voted for it, and the bill went to the White House and the President gave it his hearty approval. Many people in this country assumed that the money was available and it was hailed with great delight and enthusiasm by those interested in vocational education. Governors assumed the Congress meant exactly what it had said and the President meant exactly what his act in signing the measure said; in other words, the Congress and the President said to the country, "We are going to let you have $14,400,000, and you build your program around that amount for the boys and girls in this country." Immediately the States proceeded to lay out their programs and make commitments. I know of one State that erected, at its own expense, 90 buildings to carry on vocational education. The States made commitments for teachers, for equipment, and prepared to go ahead, and the first notice they had to the contrary was when the message came here from the President reducing the amount from $14,400,000 to $3,000,000. Then, of course, there was confusion in all the States. They had made these commitments.

It seems to me that sometime in the history of the country we should keep faith with the American people. I do not go so far as to say this was a contract, but I do go so far as to say that the public had a right to rely upon the action of Congress, which was taken without mental reservation whatsoever, and the public had the right to rely upon the action of the President when he signed the bill on the 8th of June last year.

I have been interested in vocational education. I introduced a companion bill to this in 1929, for the benefit of the boys and girls in the country districts; and as a result of that bill alone each of 8,000 high schools put in a course in vocational education for the farm boys and girls.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 more minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is this time to be taken out of the 40 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it will be.

Mr. DIES. There are other Members who want to be heard, who will not have an opportunity to be heard——

Mr. REED of New York. This is the first time I have spoken on this bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I hope the gentleman will not object. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has been at work on this measure for years and years, and he is probably better informed on it than any other man, certainly on his side of the House. [Laughter.]

I hope he may have the 5 minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, under that very illuminating explanation I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not question the statement by my genial friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], but I do feel that there are many men on both sides of the aisle who are vitally interested in this particular problem. I have sat here all week hoping to get an opportunity to have at least 5 minutes in which to address the Committee in support of this amendment. I don't think it is fair for one or two Members to monopolize all of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in the control of the gentleman from Missouri just as this particular point. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman from New York has been working on this proposition for years. I should like for him to have these 5 minutes. I think it will be well worth it.

Mr. SHORT. Some of us have worked on it all of our lives, although we have not lived to be as old as other gentlemen, but I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be given 5 additional minutes, not to be taken out of the 40 minutes allotted to this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be given 5 additional minutes, not to be taken out of the 40 minutes already fixed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I thank the members of the Committee for their indulgence. Let us get right down to the meat in the coconut in this bill and its importance to the country. The Smith-Hughes Act in 1917 came as an absolute necessity to this country. England conducted an exhaustive survey upon the question of vocational training in the early days before the war to find out why it was that Germany was capturing her foreign trade, and after a most thorough investigation—the type that England always conducts, without politics—she found that the reason for it was because of the vocational training that the German people were giving to their children. The result was that England adopted vocational work and other countries have done so. We thought it was necessary to take the same steps, and why? Because prior to the immigration acts we were getting our skilled and unskilled labor from foreign countries, and when these acts were passed restricting immigration we had a shortage of skilled labor in this country. No person will ever know the wealth it has brought to us to have vocational training in this country, but the farm boys and girls were neglected. Finally, when we passed the George-Reed Act, we started them on that program.

This is not a question of just looking at education as a plaything or just a mere toy. It is important to the life of this Nation. It is important as a relief measure at the present time. In our schools today we find literally thousands and thousands of men who are skilled laborers, who are out of a job—out of a job because of some new invention that has come along and taken their jobs and relegated them either to the relief rolls or into the day-laborer class.

Some of the industries of this country are recognizing that fact. When the New York Central electrified its lines leading out of New York City they could have been cold-blooded about it and said to the old engineers, "Go onto the relief rolls." Did they do that? No. They trained these engineers to operate those electric engines, and every old engineer was placed on an electric engine, his self-respect was saved, and he has been permitted to go on through life at his work. When it comes to the farmers of the country, if you will go through the country today, you will find that those farmers who have not come to the Government for help are the farmers who have been vocationally trained in our schools and colleges. The time has come for us to think in terms of the young men who are to step into industry in the future and who are to develop our farms along proper lines. We appropriate for practically everything. Just stop and think of it. Here is a matter of $14,000,000 for which you are asked to support. You put $30,000,000 into Passamaquoddy. Already you are thinking of $100,000,000 for the ship canal in Florida. You never bat an eyelash when a bill comes in to appropriate $60,000,000 for a battleship. You carry it overwhelmingly; but when it comes to a question of giving the boys on the farm and the girls and the aged who are thrown out of work help in order to reestablish themselves and keep off the relief rolls, then there comes this fight against vocational education. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Several Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia, a member of the committee, desire recognition?

Mr. TARVER. I desire recognition in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man or woman in the United States in my devotion to the cause of vocational education. If you will examine the hearings, you will find that I was the first witness who appeared before this subcommittee in behalf of an appropriation for the full amount of the authorization. Many of us appeared before that committee and submitted our case to them in the full confidence that they would be fair. All of us were deeply impressed with the necessity for providing adequate funds to properly carry on this work. Personally I felt that since the Commissioner of Education had indicated in connection with the George-Deen bill last year that we are only reaching 35 percent of the localities in which the work should be carried on with present appropriations, the full authorization of over fourteen millions should be made available.

As far as I know, there is not one single member of that subcommittee who is not as deeply interested in the cause of vocational education as any other Member of this House. They reviewed the evidence. They heard the authorities from the Office of Education. They considered the obligations of the Government not only in this but in other matters and, after having done that, in their wisdom and with a knowledge of the subject matter which we could not hope to have, because of our inability to study the evidence as they have studied it, they gave an increase of more than 125 percent of the amount allowed by the Budget. As far as I am concerned, as a friend of vocational education, I propose to bow to their judgment and to oppose the proposed further increase in this item. I do this the more willingly since I have been advised by a member of the subcommittee that when the Commissioner of Education was before them on one occasion he was asked how much money would be necessary during the next fiscal year to enable every school which had qualified and every school that might possibly qualify to receive the benefits of this act. I am informed that he said, "$6,700,000." This bill carries $700,000 more than that. If that is true, how could we benefit anybody by appropriating twice as much as will be needed? Next year, let us hope, the full authorization can be used; but it clearly appears it cannot be used for the fiscal year for which we are appropriating.

I think in fairness to the President of the United States it ought to have been pointed out that he gave consideration to a veto of the George-Deen Act, but that instead of vetoing it he signed it, and announced concurrently with the affixing of his signature his reason for doing it, which was that he proposed to appoint a commission to investigate this whole subject matter and to determine how much money might in the future be wisely appropriated for these purposes. He appointed that commission and that commission has not yet submitted its report. Yet, in advance of the submission of its report, the House is asked to appropriate a sum which is largely in excess of what even the Office of Education itself says may be wisely and efficiently expended for the purposes specified in the act.

We talk about economy, yet too many of us do not want to economize on things that are of interest to us and our constituents. We oppose delegation to the Executive of the power to cut down appropriations or to spend appropriations made by the Congress, according to his discretion. We insist that those are Congressional prerogatives, and they are; but before we should insist too strongly upon our right to exercise them, we should show that we can exercise them wisely, we should demonstrate ability to handle the financial affairs of the Government in such a way as to bring about, within a reasonable time, a balancing of the Budget.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MAY. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Georgia that we ought to economize, but does the gentleman not think that inasmuch as the Budget is to be balanced in all of our appropriations, there are many activities under the relief organizations that something can be taken from and put on here to better advantage?

Mr. TARVER. I have been in favor of reducing the amount of relief appropriations, but I have observed no sentiment in the House which lends basis to the hope that any such reduction will be brought about. Yet the greatest danger our Government faces today is its unbalanced Budget, its failure to bring down expenditures to anywhere in the neighborhood of receipts. I have noticed that it is too frequently the custom of gentlemen to advocate economies in matters which do not directly concern them or their constituents, and to vote for increases in appropriations in items in which they are directly concerned.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. TARVER. Yes; I yield to my colleague from Georgia.

Mr. DEEN. The gentleman does not mean to imply to the House that he is going to predicate his vote on the one and one-half-billion-dollar relief bill on the attitude of the House toward reduction of expenditures?

Mr. TARVER. I do not think I have told the gentleman what my vote on the bill will be and, frankly, I do not understand the purport of his question. But I respectfully insist that if we desire to bring about economies we ought to be willing to economize in things in which our districts and our constituents are interested. This amendment presents a real test of our sincerity. All of us, and most of our constituents, are deeply interested in vocational education. Therefore, it is proposed to ask the Government for more than can be wisely used. That, in my judgment, is indefensible, especially in a time of national financial distress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] has expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, no nation possibly can rise above the level of the intelligence and character of its citizens. That statement holds true with the people under any form of government, but it is particularly true with people under a democratic form of government such as ours, where the people themselves are the government.

Several years ago Horace Mann stated:

> In our country, and in our times, no man is worthy the honored name of a statesman who does not include the highest practicable education of the people in all his plans of administration. He may have eloquence, he may have a knowledge of all history, diplomacy, jurisprudence; and by these he might claim, in other countries, that elevated rank of a statesman; but, unless he speaks, plans, labors at all times and in all places for the culture and edification of the whole people, he is not, he cannot be, an American statesman.

I believe that all the Members of this House, regardless of party ties, will agree to the truth of that statement. At least, Mr. Chairman, I still believe in the value of education in spite of, more than because of, the fact that in the early years of my life I was exposed to it in several institutions of learning in this and in foreign countries. Before coming to Congress I was for a few years a professor in one of our American colleges; therefore I speak from the standpoint of a teacher as well as a student. The safest and best investment that any parent can make is in the education of his children; likewise, the greatest investment a government can make is in the proper education and correct training of its citizens. It is necessary to build dams, to prevent floods, to generate power, erect buildings, train armies, construct airplanes and battleships; but what value are all these activities if we neglect to train the minds and cultivate the hearts of men?

Mr. Chairman, every educator knows that there are many students in our elementary schools who are neither intellectually nor temperamentally fitted for higher education; in fact, there is a surprisingly large number of young people lacking in educational capacity who should never be permitted to enter college, and some, perhaps, should be kept out of high school. While these students may not have the capacity to acquire all the niceties of a classical education and to become experts in the technical, "high-falutin" theories of some social reformers, they nevertheless possess sufficient intelligence and character to become honorable and useful citizens in the community. Vocational education aims directly to assist these poor boys and girls in the rural and urban centers of our population, who otherwise would be denied the opportunity of such education in agriculture, trade, and industry, home economics, and teachers' training; there is also provided in this vocational-education program an opportunity for adults who were denied the opportunities of education in their youth to learn certain distributive occupations. The money thus spent, unlike the dole which destroys the initiative and industry of our people, rather increases their skill, gives them confidence, maintains their self-reliance, and promotes a spirit of initiative, thrift, and independence.

I believe that no dollar of Government money is better invested, is so wisely spent, or yields such great returns as the dollar that is spent upon the education of the youth of our land. In 1934 we spent in this country for education at all levels, that is in public schools, high schools, colleges, universities, and teacher-training institutions, approximately $1,940,000,000. In that same year, Mr. Chairman, we spent in this country $1,344,000,000 for the one item of tobacco alone. In that year we spent in round numbers $1,229,000,000 for soft drinks, ice cream, candy, and chewing gum. We spent $600,000,000 on theaters, movies, and other places of amusements. We spent on toilet preparations and beauty parlor services, $314,000,000. In other words, for every dollar we spent on public education in the United States in 1934 we spent more than twice as much for luxuries and amusements in this country. In the year 1928 for every dollar spent on public education we spent $2.61 for candy, chewing gum, movies, circuses, and other places of amusement.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Of course, Congress did not appropriate that money.

Mr. SHORT. I understand that Congress did not appropriate that money, but Congress is concerned, or should be, with the general welfare of our country, and particularly with the education of our citizens. During the World War the amount of illiteracy we found among our soldiers was appalling; and today the enrollees in our C. C. C. camps have revealed too much ignorance, thousands of them being unable to read and write.

Mr. Chairman, in this very bill that we are considering we have appropriated scores of millions of dollars upon development of the soil, and there is allotted only the paltry sum of $14,483,000, even if we increase to the full extent and adopt this amendment for the education of our youth. It would seem that we are more concerned in the United States with soil than we are with souls, and that we are spending more money upon the development of mud than we are upon the development of mind. In several of our States more money is spent each year upon the breeding of good horses and cattle than is spent upon the education of our children.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. My time is so short, Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield. I am for this amendment, first, because it is a meritorious measure, and can stand absolutely upon its own feet. The cry of economy and attempting to make the school teachers and youth of this country foot the bill, of course, is all poppycock and bunk. [Applause.]

When one considers the billions of dollars this administration has squandered in wild and reckless fashion, wasting millions of it upon foolish projects, it is laughable to think that the President would dare veto this amendment, which calls for such a modest appropriation for such a worthy cause. After we pass this appropriation bill this afternoon another emergency relief bill will be brought upon the floor of this House, under the terms of which the President is not only requesting but demanding that this House turn over to him, in the form of a blank check, $1,500,000,000 for him to spend as he sees fit. It is high time that we as Members of the legislative branch of Government and duly elected representatives of our people, began exercising not only our constitutional rights but our duties as well. We have control of the purse strings of this Nation and should never abdicate our powers or cowardly surrender our legislative functions to either of the other branches of our Government.

In the second place, I am wholeheartedly and unreservedly in favor of this amendment because I feel that the Federal Government is morally bound to carry out the provisions of the George-Deen Act, approved on June 8 of last year. That act definitely and specifically authorized an annual appropriation of $14,483,000 for allotment to the States and Territories, beginning July 1 of this year. The act was passed by both Houses of Congress at the last session and was signed by the President. Of course, that was during the campaign and before the election last November, when President Roosevelt wanted the votes of school boards, school teachers, poor parents, and the unfortunate youth of the Nation. New Deal orators gave the people over our Nation to understand that they were sincere friends of vocational education, but Mr. Roosevelt now seems to have forgotten all about that act. He and his Director of the Budget are in favor of appropriating only $3,000,000 for this valuable work during the next fiscal year; be it to the credit of the members of this Subcommittee on Appropriations, they have increased the Budget estimate from $3,000,000 to $7,398,750. This sum, however, is woefully inadequate and only about half the amount which was authorized in the act last year. If there were a law against getting votes under false pretenses, many of these New Deal deceivers would be in the penitentiary now.

Since the authorization last year of $14,483,000 to be annually appropriated and distributed to the various States, many communities in different States have erected buildings, purchased equipment, and hired personnel in anticipation of these Federal appropriations. While in a highly technical and strictly legal sense the Federal Government is perhaps not obligated to provide these funds, there can be no doubt that the Federal Government is bound in a moral sense to keep faith with its own citizens. It is strange and inexplicable to see certain Members on the floor of this House oppose this amendment, which is a paltry and pitiful sum compared to the huge appropriations they have received for projects in their own particular districts. Certainly, the President cannot be justified in opposing this amendment when he asks us today to turn over to him $1,500,000,000 to spend as he pleases. Yet we still have among us certain men who strain at a gnat and swallow a camel.

(Mr. SHORT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.)

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein two telegrams to which I shall refer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I have supported all appropriations for education and relief work that have been brought into this House. My first interest in vocational education was brought about by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], who advocated vocational training for many years. In his statement he tells you of all the buildings that are being constructed throughout the country for vocational training. If you will read the hearings you will see that less than 17 percent of the children going to the schools now constructed and to be constructed are taking or will take vocational training. I am wondering if the States would construct these buildings for the 83 percent that are taking general education and not vocational training. Let me remind you further that the greater number of these buildings were constructed by Government funds.

I hold in my hand a telegram from the Association of Mayors of the State of New York, in which they ask that this item be increased to $5,500,000. I read it to you:

ALBANY, N. Y., May 3, 1937.

Hon. JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
Education Committee, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

New York State Conference of Mayors, an association of the cities and first- and second-class villages of New York State, operates in service-training schools for 20 groups of municipal officials. Vitally interested in public-service training provisions of George-Deen Act. Proposed $3,000,000 appropriation would be entirely inadequate to cover all vocational-education purposes embodied in act. Cities and villages of New York State hopeful that at least the $5,500,000 minimum appropriation will be approved. Urge respectfully your support.

WILHAM P. CAPES,
Executive Secretary, New York State Conference of Mayors,
City Hall, Albany, N. Y.

Nevertheless I voted to increase this item four million two hundred and forty-one thousand over the Budget estimate, which brought the total amount up to $7,241,000, and which is $1,741,000 over the recommendation of the Association of Mayors of the State of New York, and a million dollars over what the Department said would be necessary for the fiscal year of 1938.

I want to say to the Members here today, Mr. Chairman, that I doubt if ever such propaganda was carried on in this Congress as has been carried on in relation to this bill. I hold in my hand a copy of a telegram that was supposed to be sent to Dr. Wilson, State department of education, Albany, N. Y. It is signed "L. H. Dennis, Secretary, American Vocational Association, Denrike Building, 1010 Vermont Ave., Washington, D. C." I shall read it to you:

Dr. L. A. WILSON,
State Department of Education, Albany, N. Y.:

Seems quite apparent that House Appropriations Committee may not recommend sufficient amount for George-Deen vocational appropriation. Amendment to report of Appropriations Committee will be submitted on floor of House by Congressman FULLER, Arkansas, to increase amount recommended by committee for vocational education. Very essential that your Congressman contact, cooperate with, and support Congressman FULLER and his amendment. Unless this is done vocational appropriations for next 5 years will be in serious danger. This is most urgent crisis we have faced during last 3 years. We must have flood of telegrams and air-mail letters from influential persons and organizations to all your Congressmen requesting them to cooperate with Congressman FULLER. Chances for satisfactory vocational appropriation depend upon magnitude and thoroughness of this effort. Telegrams and letters must reach Congressmen Tuesday and Wednesday at the latest. Telegrams to Congressman FITZPATRICK should not mention Fuller amendment, but should urge full fourteen million vocational appropriation. A thorough job should be done in his congressional district.

L. H. DENNIS,
Secretary, American Vocational Association,
Denrike Building, 1010 Vermont Avenue, Washington, D. C.

Let me say to the man who sent that telegram that I am not afraid of what they may try to do, because I am for vocational training, and I stand for the amount recommended by the committee for vocational training, and ask the committee to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Would it be within the discretion of the Chair, in view of the number of Members who would like to speak upon this subject, to limit the speakers in the future to 2 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to state in reply to the gentleman that the Chair was just in the act of making a brief statement. Half of the time has been consumed up to this point. It has been equally divided between those for and those against the amendment. It has also been equally divided between the majority and the minority sides of the House.

It is obvious one of two things will have to be done. If all of those who have been constantly seeking recognition are to be recognized each Member will have to be satisfied with less than the usual 5 minutes, or the time will have to be extended. Is it agreeable to accord recognition for less than 5 minutes to those who have been seeking recognition?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of each speaker be limited to 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended 30 minutes, to be equally divided between the proponents and opponents.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the time be extended 30 minutes, to be equally divided between the proponents and opponents of this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the time having been fixed by unanimous consent, is such a motion in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] in support of the amendment.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I take it there is not a Member of this House who does not favor economy, but in favoring economy surely we must let our judgment and our common sense rule. There are many items that can and should be reduced. On the other hand, there are some items that should not be reduced and one of the items for which an appropriation should be made to carry out the full authorization is this item of vocational education.

As has been stated on the floor, this matter was threshed out before the Committee on Education during the last session of Congress. It was then brought to the floor and after much debate this House passed the bill authorizing an appropriation of $14,000,000 for vocational education. The Senate passed the bill and the President signed it.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. While there might not be a legal obligation on the part of the Government, there can be no doubt as to a moral obligation?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. There can be no doubt that when we passed that bill and said to the States of the Union that we were going to provide $14,000,000 for vocational education we then assumed an obligation to make the full appropriation.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I am sorry, but my time is so limited I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, we assumed an obligation to make the appropriation of $14,000,000 and, believing, of course, that this Congress would act in good faith and would meet the obligation, the various States of the Union constructed buildings, bought equipment, and hired teachers to carry out the program. That is the situation today, and if we fail to make this full appropriation we not only go back on that obligation but we completely disrupt and throw out of joint, if not entirely defeat, the whole vocational-education program of the country.

In the authorization bill passed last year we prescribed certain minimum amounts of money that would go to the various fields of vocational education. Unless we appropriate the full $14,000,000, these requirements as to these minimum amounts will work in such a way that some States of the Union will scarcely get any money out of the appropriation. There is nothing more important to the country than vocational education, as has been freely admitted even by the opponents of the appropriation.

Thomas Jefferson well said that "that nation which expects to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization expects that which never was and never will be." The one transcendent question before our country today is not the Court problem, it is not the economy problem, it is whether or not our people have the character, the courage, and the intelligence to carry on democratic self-government. [Applause.] If we are to carry on this Government then, as Thomas Jefferson suggested, "Our people must be trained and educated."

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this increased appropriation because I am for economy. As the gentleman from New York suggested, this money goes largely for the youth of the land who are to be the citizens of tomorrow. I am unwilling that these young boys and girls, made in the image of their Creator, and holding that priceless treasure, the future, shall be denied the opportunity to make the most of their lives because they have not the chance to secure the benefits of vocational education. There is no waste comparable to the waste of a human life, and there is no economy to be compared to that which makes possible a life of usefulness and of service. In the name of our children and of our country, I appeal to you to vote for the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] rise?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to better speakers than I am and therefore ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of a more important expenditure of funds, looking toward the future, than this proposed $14,483,000 amendment to provide a definite guaranty of a means whereby our future citizens may at least learn how to build their homes and obtain jobs from which to earn money to maintain them.

The George-Ellzey Act expires on June 30 of this year. It provides for vocational training in agriculture, home economics, and trade and vocational education, for which the sum of $3,000,000 has been appropriated annually by Congress. The George-Deen Act replaces the George-Ellzey Act on June 30 next, and this act authorizes an appropriation of $14,483,000 for vocational training for the fiscal year 1937, and enlarges the field by adding two vocational subjects, namely, distributive occupation and teacher training. But now, for the fiscal year 1938 the Director of the Budget has recommended an appropriation of only $3,000,000 for the whole five subjects embraced in the George-Deen Act. It is true that the committee has raised the Budget request $4,241,500, for which the committee is to be commended, but that is insufficient to care for the needs.

So we are confronted with this situation, that not only will any expansion be denied in the field of vocational training but existing facilities and existing programs will be curtailed to a large extent. Instead of enlarging the usefulness of vocational training we would have actually cut it down if the Budget should have prevailed on this item.

Congress has expressed itself most emphatically on the question of the value of vocational training. After Congress had spoken last year we do know, as has been stated, that practically every State in the Union, acting upon the expressed will of Congress went ahead with a program of expansion of vocational training. Will we keep the faith with these progressive States and their people or will we disappoint those people and deny training to worthy boys and girls, hundreds of thousands of them throughout the country?

This program is a part of what might be termed the "National Youth Administration." We build up boys imbued with the American spirit in the localities where they live as a result of a constructive work of this character.

I know what it means for a poor country boy to crave an education and obtain it by working his way through school. My heart goes out to that class of people and we can do nothing better for our country and for those who are poor and cannot get an education in any other way.

We are losing our farmers because they get disgusted with conditions. Get the boys interested by teaching them the modern way. It is a great comfort to a man on his farm who has made a pal of his boy to feel that the boy is anchored to the soil and that they are going to live and work the old homestead together; that the boy will be right alongside of him and he will remain there either on the old farm or some other farm in the neighborhood.

I maintain that "utilitarian" education is the most "cultural" kind of education, and it is my desire to give to the farm boys and girls and farmers generally throughout our entire country an opportunity to learn how to be proficient in farming, developing natural resources, and raising the standard of living.

Uncle Joe Cannon was a great believer in practical, common-sense education. He was once asked, "What do you think of a college education?" and Uncle Joe is said to have replied, "Well, I don't think a college education can do much harm to a man of average intelligence."

Of course, the college man has his place in the world, and we must continue to maintain our great academic colleges and universities; but it would be highly ridiculous to expect every boy and girl to get a college degree—and I might say undesirable, because this old world must move along in many different lines, and our youth must be trained in many trades and professions.

May I say in defense of vocational training that I like it, because we get away from needless frills, too often, I regret, found in so much higher education of today. I think that as a rule we direct our attention so much to the technical side of education that we overlook some of the practical things that are being done and some of the benefits that accrue to the average boy and girl from vocational training.

I have seen young men and women come out of vocational-education classes in our schools with an understanding and an appreciation of such important things to our community as the selection, for example, of good seed corn.

Vocational teachers have done a unique and splendid work in my State and throughout the Nation through vocational training in the practical 4–H club work, equipping boys and girls and developing agricultural leadership among young people. In my opinion these results justify any funds which Congress has granted or may later see fit to grant.

I know that hundreds of young men and women are going out of the vocational departments of our schools in Oklahoma, especially the A. and M. College, well equipped for the battle of life in this technical stage of our society. Young men and women are trained as school teachers who have more than bookish learning. They have practical knowledge and skill.

There is no question that hundreds of such young women majoring in domestic science will be better wives and mothers because of the splendid vocational training they have received along with the classical education.

Some seem to think that this vocational program will conflict with the educational program in the C. C. C. camps. One of the outstanding achievements of this administration has been the training given the young men in the C. C. C. camps, and I have nothing but praise for this type of training. I want to say there is no conflict, and I am for both programs; which reminds me of the story that is told of the rival hatters who presented hats to President Lincoln, each waiting to hear the President's comment. He looked the hats over carefully and remarked, "They mutually excel each other." [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, I realize Congress cannot appropriate all the money contained in the requests and demands of various persons, organizations, and so forth. No one realizes more than I do that we are going to have to quit so much spending. An individual cannot continue to spend twice as much as he earns, neither can the Federal Government continue to spend annually twice the amount of its income. But no money, in my opinion, spent by the Federal Government has done more and is doing more to reestablish our people in agricultural work and in industrial work than that which has been done by vocational education.

As I see this matter, we have been making appropriations for all kinds of activities; but of all the activities there is none so important, to my mind, as education. Yet our appropriations for education have been much less than those provided for the great majority of activities.

May I say in conclusion that the delegation in Congress from Oklahoma passed a resolution endorsing the George-Deen Act, and I as chairman was instructed to go before the Appropriations Committee and request that the full amount authorized by Congress last year be appropriated again for vocational education.

Our State has taken a great interest in this entire bill, and what it seems to provide for the system in Oklahoma, and we are alarmed at the present time at the prospect of having to forego the plans already started in anticipation of getting this full appropriation.

Without taking any more of your time, I will insert the resolution from the Oklahoma delegation and close by expressing the hope that the House will see fit to include the amount requested.

The resolution is as follows:

> We, the Members of the House delegation from Oklahoma, respectfully urge the Appropriations Committee to report favorably on the full amount authorized under the George-Deen Act providing for Federal assistance to the States for vocational education.
> Wesley E. Disney, Jack Nichols, Wilburn Cartwright, Lyle Boren, R. P. Hill, Jed Johnson, Sam Massingale, Phil Ferguson, Will Rogers.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair inquire if it is agreeable that Members be recognized for 2 minutes?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. If a Member takes the floor and speaks for only part of 5 minutes, can he yield back the balance of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman seek recognition in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. DONDERO rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan seek recognition in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. DONDERO. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no Member of the House a greater enthusiasm for vocational education than I possess. If I had it within my power, I would like to deduct $50,000,000 from the Navy bill and $50,000,000 from the Army bill and pass the Harrison-Fletcher bill providing $100,000,000 for public education to the States. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I cannot yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Would the gentleman be willing, then, to vote for this amendment if we made those reductions?

Mr. DONDERO. No.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment in order to state to the Committee some facts surrounding the bill which was presented to the House last year by the Committee on Education. The George bill was passed in the Senate last year, carrying an appropriation of $12,000,000.

At the time the House Committee on Education held its hearings, which were extended hearings, on the bill, it reported to the House the Senate had passed the George bill without any hearings whatever. The committee knew this. After extended hearings and careful consideration, the House Committee on Education, without a dissenting recorded vote, reported a bill carrying an amount of $6,000,000 for vocational education, after it had had before it all the testimony and all the evidence on which to predicate that decision, although there might have been one or two members of the committee who had some mental reservations as to the amount.

When the bill reached the floor of the House, what happened? We knew in advance an effort would be made to substitute the Senate bill, carrying $12,000,000, for the House bill. The House bill carried double the amount of the George-Ellzey Act, which had expired. We felt this amount was ample, based upon the evidence we had, for an expansion of the program.

Something strange happened that afternoon on the floor of the House, as sometimes strange things do happen here. What was it? Why, a whispering campaign was inaugurated to the effect that the President of the United States wanted the George bill passed for $12,000,000 in place of the committee bill, which carried an amount of $6,000,000. I do not know whether that statement was true or not, but I have grave doubts that the President of the United States knew anything about it. However, the whispering campaign swept both sides of the aisle. The result was the Deen bill was passed, carrying $12,000,000, and the bill of the Committee on Education was put on the shelf and disregarded. Now the Committee on Appropriations comes before the House and tells you that after extended hearings it feels $7,000,000 is ample. The committee has put a statement in their report to the effect that any more money appropriated to expand the program would be uneconomical and wasteful. The Appropriations Committee in recommending $7,000,000 approves and confirms the judgment of the Committee on Education of this House.

Mr. DIES and Mr. COX rose.

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. At the very time the bill was before the House the gentleman from Georgia, the author of the bill, used the following argument in opposition to the other bill, and I quote his language:

> The gentleman knows that this bill is only an authorization, and that they can come back every year and get an appropriation.

In other words, when the bill was pending the point of whether or not we would be bound to appropriate the money was minimized, but now it is said the authorization is a contract which we ought to fulfill.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman from Texas is correct.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Where is waste to be found in the process of melting down $14,000,000 and fusing it into the mind and character of the youth of the land?

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman from Georgia and I have no quarrel as to the principle and purpose of the expenditure of this money, but let us keep our feet on the ground, and, at least, sustain the House Committee on Education, which came in here with a bill calling for $6,000,000, and sustain the Committee on Appropriations, which has practically confirmed the amount reported to the House a year ago. It is not economy to be swept off our feet by enthusiasm and to try to expand the program beyond what is reasonable, fair, and just.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman please tell the membership of the House that hidden in the laws of this country is a permanent appropriation for $7,100,000, which the Treasurer of the United States places to the credit of the vocational education fund on July 1 of each year? This does not appear in an appropriation bill, and if this amendment is adopted, instead of having $14,000,000 you will have over $21,000,000, or twice the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year.

Mr. DONDERO. That is true. What the gentleman has referred to is the Smith-Hughes Act, which is permanent legislation calling for $7,000,000 a year. They will have $14,000,000 under this bill and the Smith-Hughes Act even if you defeat this amendment. I hope the House will vote it down and sustain the Committee on Appropriations in the amount it recommends.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I have yet to find a Member of Congress who is not strongly in favor of vocational education. We all realize its value. No one criticizes vocational education, but some of us doubt the wisdom at this time of appropriating twice as much money for vocational education for the next fiscal year as we provided for the present fiscal year. My views are fully expressed in the letter I wrote to the vocational educational association of my State, which appears in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Vocational education means as much to those who represent city districts as to those who live in the rural sections. Our schools share in this appropriation just the same as do the schools in the country districts. Remember we are not taking anything away from this activity if we adopt the amount recommended by the committee, but, on the contrary, we are adding over $4,000,000 to that amount above which it is now receiving. It seems to me, in view of the condition of the Treasury and the President's appeal for economy, that this is more than fair. Not one teacher nor one child will suffer if you adopt the committee amendment. New teachers can be employed and the activities enlarged, because with the permanent appropriation of more than $7,000,000, which of course we do not touch, we are providing over $14,000,000, whereas last year you had a little over $10,000,000.

The President yesterday returned to the House the bill that appropriated $5,000,000 for the Government's participation in the New York World's Fair. He told you in his message he felt that was too much in view of the condition of our Treasury. There is no doubt but that the Government will receive in admission and other taxes over $50,000,000, taking the figures of the Chicago World's Fair as a basis, but still he vetoed the bill because the Treasury does not contain the money.

To listen to the debate you would think that the amount recommended by the committee of $7,241,500 was all we are giving to vocational education. As I pointed out in my letter, and a moment ago called it to the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO], we have a charge against the Treasury in the form of an annual appropriation, a permanent appropriation, that cannot be lowered, of $7,167,000, and this does not include the other permanent appropriation which is to take care of those injured in industry. Adopt the committee figures, and you have over $14,000,000, but if you adopt the Deen amendment, you will have over $21,000,000, which is double the figure of the present fiscal year. Remember also the committee is recommending $4,000,000 more than the Bureau of the Budget approved. Let us be reasonable and, simply because the votes are here, do not further disturb the efforts of the President to balance the normal Budget next year.

The gentleman from Missouri, my colleague, Mr. SHORT, cites as an argument for increasing this appropriation the amount spent for luxuries. He admitted in answer to my question that the Congress does not appropriate the hundreds of millions he refers to. It has no place in this debate.

We are confronted, Mr. Chairman, with a bad situation. Just as soon as this bill is out of the way we will consider and pass the annual relief bill, and it will carry not less than $1,500,000,000. At least 8,000,000 employable people in this country cannot get work. We must take care of them. We cannot let them starve. The President realizes that and he asks us to appropriate the full amount that he recommended and not reduce it, and he further urges that it not be increased. He is the pilot of the ship of state. Why not be good sailors and go along with him. The President, like every one of us, is strong for education, for vocational education, but he tells us the Treasury cannot bear this increase. In our campaigns last year we promised to support him, so why forget that promise now. Nothing will be better medicine for this country than a balanced normal Budget. Do that and the road to a lasting prosperity is ahead.

As a friend of vocational education I plead with you to adopt the very liberal increase recommended by our Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to state that only 10 minutes remain of the time fixed. Two members of the committee are seeking recognition, one for and one against. The Chair will have to recognize the two members of the committee.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact the members of the committee have had ample time to discuss this matter under the general rules of the House, it seems to me that in fairness they should not object to a request that the time be extended 15 minutes. I shall not ask for any time, but there are other Members here who wish to speak and who have not had an opportunity to be heard.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time heretofore fixed be extended 15 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. In what way can I get a chance to speak for at least a minute and a half on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to inform the gentleman that the Chair knows of no way to do so, at this stage.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, not to be taken out of the time heretofore fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pensylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, education is one of the greatest instruments to eradicate ignorance and superstition. If we would spend more money for education and less for battleships and other things with which to destroy human life, we would be making more human progress. Therefore this amendment should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD following the speech of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. CARTER rose.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets, as stated before, that inasmuch as two members of the committee are seeking recognition——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Is there any provision in the rules for permitting the members of the committee, since they have control of the time in general debate, to monopolize the time under the 5-minute rule? It seems to me that other Members of the House who are not permitted to speak in general debate should also be recognized. One member of the committee has already taken 15 minutes of this time. I do not care whether I am recognized or not. There are plenty of other Members who are not on the committee, who desire recognition; and I notice that the members of a committee get into somewhat of a strait jacket, and, as a rule, all walk in a beaten path, and when amendments are offered, they are always offered in opposition to what the committee has brought in; and it seems to me that other Members of the House ought to be treated as being on an equal footing with members of the committee when we are proceeding under the 5-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to state, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi, it is all within the control of the Committee of the Whole. The time is fixed and limited by the Committee of the Whole. The matter of recognition is fixed by the rules of the House and members of the committee are entitled to priority in recognition.

Mr. RANKIN. Under the 5-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has to abide by the rules of the House.

The gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I was formerly a member of the Committee on Education. I was a member of the Committee on Education when the present authorization was brought before this House, and I want to recite briefly a little of the history of this matter.

At the time this authorization was before the committee, an appropriation of $3,000,000 was being made annually. There was a proposal in the committee, in fact, a number of proposals, some to increase this amount to $6,000,000, some to $10,000,000, and some to $12,000,000 or $14,000,000. The committee finally worked out a compromise and brought out a bill increasing it to $6,000,000. As a member of the committee, I did the best I could on the floor of this House to abide by the direction of the committee and hold the amount at $6,000,000 annually. I was overruled by the membership of this House.

Now I think, the House having spoken on this matter, it is up to the membership of the House to follow the voice of the House. The House has said that this sum of $14,000,000 should be appropriated annually. Some reference has been made to the fact here that it was stated in debate that this is only an authorization bill. Here is a statement that actually was made during the debate. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEEN] asked me if I did not know that this was an authorization bill, and here is the reply: "I know that this is an authorization bill limited to 3 years and that the sums authorized under this bill will be appropriated each and every year." This statement took place during the course of the debate.

The school people of this country, hearing of and knowing about this authorization, have prepared to carry on their work using the larger sum. Schoolhouses have been built, and other preparations have been made.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], for whose judgment I have the highest respect, recited here that the President signed this bill and then appointed a commission to ascertain whether or not he was going to put the bill into effect and, if so, to what extent the appropriations should actually be made. I want to say to you that that is, indeed, a new theory in our form of government—to have a President sign a bill and then determine afterward to what extent it may become effective.

Here is the situation, Mr. Chairman, in reference to this measure. Last June when we voted on this, we were all facing an election. The congressional election and the Presidential election were just in the offing and this House stood up here and told the voters, told the school children, and told the school teachers, "Oh, yes; we are going to give you $14,000,000. Why, certainly we are very much interested in the youth of this country." The President signed the bill, announcing to the people of this country and to the world, "Oh, yes; I am willing for the schools to have $14,000,000." Now we come along and when it comes time to put the money on the table, what does the Bureau of the Budget do? The Bureau of the Budget increases it not one cent. Pays no attention to the last authorization act. It pays absolutely no attention to it, and I wish to say in behalf of the work of this subcommittee that, if it had not been for their work, the schools would not have been in the position of receiving what they are getting at the present time by the amount of about $7,000,000. We appropriate millions for buildings, investigations, roads, harbors, and many other purposes. I do not say that we should cease these expenditures where the money is carefully and prudently spent, but I do say that no money can be spent that will bring to this country the benefits and dividends received from money invested for educational purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I know that this is a subject that is difficult to discuss without some considerable feeling and emotion, and without probably being placed in a false light. Anyone who opposes this amendment might be placed in a position of being opposed to legislation favorable to education. That is not the fact at all. Let me say to you what I said earlier in the discussion of this bill: This committee gave serious consideration to the evidence that was brought before it. They made mistakes. There is no doubt about that. They endeavored earnestly to remain within the Budget, but they did as every other subcommittee, I am sure, does—attempted to exercise discretion on the evidence that was presented to it. The Department of Education came before the committee and said that for this particular item only $6,700,000, in round numbers, efficiently and expeditiously can be expended this year.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I have only 5 minutes. If I have time at the conclusion of my remarks I shall be glad to yield. Let me point out this in connection with this appropriation. The committee endeavored to comply with the request of scores of Members who came before it and urged an increase. No one suggested that the Budget be reduced, nor did anyone ever suggest in the time that I have been on either the Agriculture or Interior Subcommittees reducing anything. The committee is placed in the position of listening to a witness who is partisan and biased and will always ask for a little bit more than the committee feels he is entitled to. In this instance we gave more than was asked. We gave 60 percent more. That is not all that goes to vocational education. The bill provides that the States that receive these benefits must likewise give 50 percent of the amount of the appropriation. In other words, there will be over $11,000,000 for vocational education next year where you had $3,000,000 this fiscal year. Then you have your $7,000,000 Smith-Hughes money, which makes $18,000,000 in all. This act provides two new activities for the training of teaching personnel, recognizing the fact that we cannot expand too rapidly. We increased by over $4,000,000 this Budget estimate. We slashed on other items in order to remain within the Budget.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEAVY. I have only 5 minutes. If I finish in time, I shall be glad to yield. We asked particularly the Department of Education whether, if the activities be expanded throughout the United States to take up this large increase in vocational work to absorb in an efficient manner this expenditure of $21,000,000, because that is what a $14,000,000 appropriation means. The States will have to pay 50 cents for every dollar, and at the end of 5 years they will be matching by 60 cents, and then 70 cents, and then 80 and 90 cents, and finally up to a dollar.

The point I desire to make is this: We recognize that here is a new activity and that we should not attempt to expand it beyond its possibilities of expansion merely because if you do not vote for the $14,000,000 someone might say that you are an enemy of education. I was a school teacher myself and I am a friend of education. I would not knowingly do anything to hinder or check education in this country, but our expansion should be orderly and systematic. With the amount allowed by the committee there will be nearly 80 percent more money available for vocational education than in the past year. Our boys and girls are entitled to the best possible returns on every dollar we spend for public education. I shall always be delighted to work for orderly expansion of this kind of education. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky) there were—ayes 114, noes 91.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia to the preceding paragraph, which was passed by unanimous consent.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Page 117, line 5, strike out "248,560" and insert in lieu thereof "350,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed an aggregate of $2,500 of appropriations available to the Office of Education for salaries and expenses for vocational education shall be used for expenses of attendance at meetings of educational associations and other organizations which in the discretion of the Commissioner of Education are necessary for the efficient discharge of its responsibilities.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion made by Mr. TABER: Mr. TABER moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States on the 20th of April submitted a message to Congress urging the utmost of economy. Having that in mind, and having in mind also the tremendous increase in the cost of government in the last few years, some of us have made as vigorous an attempt as possible to cut down this appropriation bill. I want the House to know what this appropriation bill contains. At the present time, including reappropriations, this bill, without including the annual automatic appropriations, carries $157,829,764.85. There are items above the Budget of $11,000,000 on this vocational education proposition. There is a reappropriation above the Budget of $33,000,000 on reclamation projects, and on top of all that there is another reappropriation that runs into quite a considerable figure on which I do not at present have the details.

In 1928 this bill carried, without the permanent appropriations, $42,000,000. It has shown a steadily mounting tendency. At the present time, including $33,000,000 of reappropriation of funds that would have expired on the 30th day of June next, this bill is approximately $37,000,000 above the Budget. Without including the reappropriations, it is $7,000,000 above the Budget. It is the first of the regular appropriation bills that will have gone out of this House above the Budget estimates. I wonder how many people can justify votes for items that run $39,000,000 above the Budget estimate? Frankly, I cannot do it. I cannot go along with that kind of a program. Including these reappropriations, this is the first of the annual supply bills that has come out of the committee above the Budget estimates.

I hope that when opportunity is given to cut down on some of these things by separate votes upon the amendments and by a motion to recommit and by amendments that will be offered later on this House will begin to show a spirit of economy and begin to cut something down and make some semblance of economy. [Applause.]

I submit a schedule of appropriations and expenditures for the last 10 years for this Department. Where expenditures are shown larger than the appropriations, about $20,000,000 is accounted for by permanent appropriations and the balance by allotments from P. W. A. and other so-called relief activities.

[1] Estimated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The motion was rejected.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction, repair, and maintenance of roads, tramways, bridges, trails, and aviation fields, Territory of Alaska, $130,000, to be available until expended: Provided, That expenditures hereunder shall not exceed the aggregate receipts covered into the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have no particular objection to the paragraph which has just been read; but, as a very ardent Democrat and as a supporter of the administration, I wish to express a very solemn warning.

Within the last 4 years I personally have voted against billions of dollars of appropriations for worthy purposes, which, however, we could not afford. In addition thereto, I have voted against more billions of dollars of authorizations for appropriations for excellent purposes, which should be deferred. With all the earnestness of my soul, I say we are in a position comparable to that of one drifting in a boat down the river above Niagara Falls. If we value our safety, we had better pull to the shore. Day by day, if we but listen, we can hear more and more clearly the roar of those falls—the falls of national insolvency and then of inflation, with its attendant misery and suffering, which bear hardest upon the poor and those of moderate means. The President has given us warning again and again. He has suggested. He has warned. He has entreated. The leaders of this House have done the same. As you love our country and its people, my colleagues, remember we are not spending our own money. No. We are spending the money of the people of the United States. From every district in this Nation have come protests against extravagance. Repeatedly I have written in answer to earnest and persuasive pleas from special pressure groups for appropriations for excellent but costly schemes, "We cannot do it at this time. We cannot afford it."

I entreat you when we come to vote separately in the House on some of the amendments that have been adopted in Committee of the Whole to be reasonable. Think of the fact that we are not spending our own money. We are spending the people's money.

Please remember another thing. The receipts by the Treasury are hundreds of millions of dollars below the estimates from the revenue act which was passed last year. Furthermore, we have exceeded in this and some other appropriation bills the figures approved by the Budget. The Budget figures were based on estimates of much larger returns from the tax bill passed last year than we now know we can hope to receive. In short, we now know that our income will be less than we had expected and our expenditures are greater than we had planned. And daily we are borrowing more money to run the Government.

I entreat you, as one who has in his own part of the country many worthy projects which I should like to have the Government undertake if we could afford it, for Heaven's sake be reasonable.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, it is not often that I take the floor, but some things are transpiring here that make it hard for me to constrain myself any longer Yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] called attention to some of the huge expenditures being made under the Department of the Interior, and he brought prolonged laughter in this House when he said, "Why, somebody in this Government must be crazy. Who are they?" How anyone can laugh in the face of the silly and wasteful expenditures that are apparent in many places is beyond my understanding. To my colleagues on the Democratic side of this body, let me say that the calls for decreased spending and governmental economy are not coming from the Republican side of this House. They are coming from a great Democratic President, whom most of you professed to support last fall. If there was ever an occasion upon which he should be supported, it is on the request for decreased Federal expenditures.

Returning once more to the figures inserted in the RECORD by our colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], I call your attention to the figures on expenditures in the city of Washington for parks. Take that item for Meridian Hill Park, located at Sixteenth and Florida NW. It was stated that $137,725.09 had been spent for remodeling and replanting. I used to have an apartment in the hotel facing the Meridian Park, and from my windows I could watch the progress of this work week by week. I know something about the costs of grading, building walks, and planting shrubbery and trees, because I have been engaged in such work for a long time. If over a hundred and twenty thousand dollars was spent on that park, then someone must be crazy. The work that has been done there is nothing like the expenditure which has been claimed. I have not time to go into other similar cases, but I have no doubt that they are all too high. We are not getting anything like our money's worth out of these projects.

Just the other day we appropriated money for the Blue Ridge Parkway and Natchez Trace. I dare say that those will be fine improvements and that the people in those areas will be duly appreciative of the hundreds of millions of dollars of other people's money that is being expended there. I opposed the appropriation for the Blue Ridge Parkway when it first came before us, but it was passed, and contractual obligations must be recognized.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I refuse to yield because I only have a few moments.

Mr. KNUTSON. I wanted to come to the President's defense.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. In this Interior Department appropriation bill we have appropriated huge sums of money for reclamation. Those reclamation projects have merit individually and collectively, but to a businessman it is hard to understand that it is good organization and administration for one Department—Agriculture—to be engaged in taking land out of production while another Department—Interior—is reclaiming land so that it can be put into production. Just ordinary horse sense would seem to indicate that reclamation is really a function of the Department of Agriculture and that it should be consolidated under the department which will have to handle it later on. Once that land is put into cultivation it will become a problem for the Department of Agriculture to devise ways and means of bringing that land within the scope of its present land-use program. Consolidations of this kind could and would save hundreds of millions of dollars to the taxpayer.

You may say that there is now at work a committee investigating and studying possible consolidations in governmental agencies. That is correct, but as of today there have been no recommendations from that committee, and meanwhile we are continuing appropriations for these overlapping and conflicting agencies and bureaus. Recently Brigadier General Hines proposed that the Veterans' Administration be abolished and that it be consolidated with the Departments of War and Navy in one regular defense department. The general held that such a consolidation would eliminate millions of dollars of expense incurred in overlapping functions between his own Administration and those of the War and Navy Departments. In addition, many more millions would be saved by the elimination of duplicating boards and bureaus of the two defense departments. But will we get such a reorganization? Not on your life, because the experts that would be called in to testify before such a committee would be the experts of the War and Navy Departments themselves, and they will copper their jobs and hang on to their traditions and perpetuate their wastes until the crack of doom.

Our President has voiced his earnest desires in these matters. He knows, just as every one of you know, that the little fellow, the taxpayer, has a great stake in this matter. Every dollar we spend unnecessarily adds to the burden of taxation that the man who labors must pay. The little fellow is already staggering under the load of city, county, State, and Federal taxes. At the rate of present spending we must either issue more bonds or increase the taxes now being paid. We do not provide the money. We just spend it after the taxpayer does provide it, or we spend it and then tell the taxpayer that he must provide it. Expenditures along lines that will increase the future productivity or wealth of the people can be justified, because they are investments which will in the future pay out in increased national wealth and therefore in increased Federal revenues. The appropriations for esthetic and pleasure purposes may pay out in cultural and esthetic returns, but I have never seen a Treasury statement that showed those values. Let us provide worth-while, permanent improvements, of a kind that will pay their own way when we are faced with shortages of Federal funds, and cut our spending to the bone where we get our full dollar's worth for every dollar we spend. Then in the days when our Budgets are balanced we can improve the scenery to our hearts' content. There are great sections of this country where drought, dust storms, and insect pestilences have retarded the return of recovery. The farmers and laborers in those sections of the country are still far behind their more favored brothers in other sections. We need to help those sections meet the conditions they face day to day, and when they are pulled up to the general recovery level we will all be far better off. Our consuming power will be increased and a definite basis of economic well-being will be established. Useless and wasteful expenditures from the public purse bear just as heavily upon the drought-stricken farmer as they do on the one who lives where drought has not fallen. The only difference is that the drought-stricken farmer has nothing with which to meet his tax bills except by increasing his mortgage.

I am not defending the capitalistic system or the apparent evils of that system when I say that we cannot levy the taxes upon industry to make up for our Federal deficits. Killing the goose that lays the golden eggs is no solution to our problems, because when industry is forced to the wall by excessive burdens of taxation labor goes to the wall far ahead of the capitalist. Shut-down plants do not provide pay rolls for those who labor, nor do they buy bread for the families of those thrown out of work by those closed-down plants. I know what it is to work 16 hours a day, and I also know what it is to meet a pay roll every Saturday night and what it is to meet bills on the first of the month. As business men and women we should put forth our efforts to make Uncle Sam's business the same kind of a business we ourselves would conduct. Build for the future, spend where we can get a return, and meet our bills when they are due. With reasonable economy this can be done. Increasing Federal revenues will enable us to carry out the needed activities of government, but they never will allow us to carry out foolish and wasteful projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, as much as I dislike to do so, I shall be forced to object.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks. It is remarkable that when a person is in opposition to this expenditure program he cannot get time to voice his sentiments. The people of this country will voice their sentiments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska to revise and extend his own remarks?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take much time. I merely want to observe that this session of Congress, I believe, is beginning to wind up, because we are just beginning to talk economy. In the other two sessions of Congress which I attended, nothing was said about economy until they began to get down toward the bottom and talk about farm people and farm expenditures. When they got that far along the line somebody began to talk about economy.

Let me tell you my estimate of this bill. I think that this Congress in the passage of this bill to make appropriations for the Interior Department, particularly the item for vocational education, is coming nearer to responding to the demands and the will of the common people of America than they have in all the other things that have been done in this session.

Permit me, Mr. Chairman, to say that the people of my State are deeply indebted to the members of this Subcommittee on Appropriations for what they have done in the matter of vocational education. The chairman of this Subcommittee on Appropriations, my personal friend, Congressman JED JOHNSON, comes from my State, from the adjoining district, and I know about him and his work in behalf of the farm people that he and I represent. Way back in the days when he was a member of the State senate in Oklahoma he led the fight for the adoption of the law in Oklahoma making possible the operation of the Smith-Hughes Act in that State. He has been a consistent advocate of this type of legislation in the interest of the farm boys and girls in Oklahoma and in other rural communities throughout the United States. No greater service can be rendered by any man in Congress than service of this type. I congratulate him as a member of the Oklahoma delegation for that service. His consistent and untiring efforts in his committee for increasing the amount allocated to vocational training is evidence of his esteem for the young manhood and womanhood of the Nation. It has been my pleasure to support this bill to the full extent of my power and I am very happy that its passage with $14,000,000 devoted to vocational agriculture is practically an assured fact.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, it does me a great deal of good to see Democratic Members advocating economy, many for the first time. I think that eventually we will get some place if you get new recruits for economy. I am glad that they are now quoting the President of the United States as being for economy, because this is the first indication I have noticed that he is for economy since the first month that he took office in 1933. He has been the greatest spender in the history of this Nation. He now realizes, however, that he has about wrecked this Nation and he is hollering for economy. Oh, how he must regret his past orgy of spending! The Members of Congress begin to realize that there is some sense in that statement, and they now realize it is "spend less, tax more, or bust."

Many Members have criticized this Subcommittee on Appropriations, saying it is not trying to hold expenditures down. Permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, that its members have worked very hard. Some of the best men in the House are members of this subcommittee. Its make-up is just as good personally as that of any Subcommittee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

It is my purpose to draw your attention to some of the other appropriations you have made this session of Congress. Independent offices, $1,140,000,000, 11 times the amount carried in the pending bill. The Treasury-Post Office bill carried $1,500,000,000, 15 times, almost, more than the pending bill. Do not use your ax on this bill only, use it on all bills that have already been passed, if you want to economize; and I am for it.

Mr. Chairman, may I say to my colleagues that we are on the threshold of danger not only for this bill but for the bill that is to come up shortly when we finish this bill. We shall be asked to appropriate $1,500,000,000. Yesterday I called your attention to a lot of money that was spent on P. W. A. projects. Members of Congress could hardly realize that public money had been spent so foolishly; some of them did not believe me. I could call attention to many more items of expenditure under W. P. A. that would cause you to think—they will astound you in their relative unimportance to the public benefit.

When you come to discuss the next bill, through which you propose to give to the President of the United States $1,500,000,000, it is your duty as Members of Congress to designate the purpose for which this money is to be used. You are criticizing the administration for this enormous spending. Itemize for what purpose it is to be expended. Before you appropriate this $1,500,000,000, stop, look, and listen! Amendments will be offered to that bill asking that it be cut down to $1,000,000,000. That would be a sensible thing to do. I am in sympathy with people who need relief; but let me tell you an incident that happened this morning. A young man asked me to take him to Union Station. I was going that way, and I did. He asked during the conversation, "Do you know what happened to relief out in Columbus, Ohio, just recently?" He said that they put relief under the control of the local communities. They took everybody off of relief and asked them to make new application if they needed relief. He said that 75 percent of those formerly on relief made application under the new plan. They immediately cut themselves off by 25 percent. You could do this all over the United States. Remember this story when you start to talk about the next bill, and act and vote accordingly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Salaries of the Governor and of the secretary, $15,800.

For contingent expenses, to be expended by the Governor for stationery, postage, and incidentals, and for traveling expenses of the Governor while absent from the capital on official business, $2,000; private secretary to the Governor, $3,100; temporary clerk hire, $750; in all, $5,850.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the House at this time to a matter of grave concern to the people of the Territory of Alaska and of equally grave concern to the people of the United States? It relates to the greatest industry in the Territory of Alaska, that of salmon fishing, and involves also a serious question of international law.

THREAT TO ALASKA FISHERIES

Mr. Chairman, on March 8, 1937, in another body, a speech was delivered that deserves the attention of Congress, the administration, and the country—an address at once scholarly, logical, and powerful, dealing with the threatened, and in part actual, foreign invasion of American fisheries. When that address was delivered it seemed that some action would be promptly taken to allay the danger to American fisheries shown to exist, but although the statement excited wide and favorable comment, so far as I can learn nothing has been done to correct the conditions therein described.

In this discussion I shall treat only of one phase of the subject covered by the address to which I have referred, that part of it which relates to the salmon fisheries, and particularly to the salmon fisheries carried on in the Bristol Bay and Bering Sea region and along the shores of the Alaska Peninsula in the waters adjacent to the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. Chairman, the salmon fisheries of Alaska constitute the greatest industry of that Territory both in number of people employed and in value of the product. More than 20,000 people work each year in the salmon-packing industry in Alaska and the value of the product of that industry amounts yearly to approximately $35,000,000. This industry is of the greater importance because it involves the use of a source of natural wealth which requires only reasonable conservation to make perpetual. No herders and no feeding of special food containing a certain number of calories or a certain vitamin content are necessary in the case of salmon. The salmon herd themselves and obtain their own food without the assistance of man, and the only labor to be performed by man in order to avail himself of this vast store of annually replenished natural wealth is to take the fish from the sea or rivers and enclose them in cans or other containers under proper conditions so that the flesh of the fish will be preserved in a fresh and nutritious state.

While what I have to say today affects potentially the entire salmon-packing industry of Alaska, my remarks will be particularly directed to that part of the industry which is carried on on both sides of the Alaska Peninsula, extending from the northern end of Shuyak Island to the extreme tip of Attu Island, the most westerly of the Aleutians, and thence north to the Diomedes, situated in the very throat of Bering Strait, and following the dividing line between the United States and Soviet Russia. In this region a large part of the most valuable salmon—the red species—is obtained. The principal salmon-fishing region of this area is Bristol Bay, a large bay situated on the west side of the Alaska Peninsula and opening into the Bering Sea. The Alaska Peninsula produces each year on the average at least 3,000,000 cases of salmon, of 48 pounds to the case, most of which is the valuable red salmon. So it is, if anything, an understatement to say that the value of the yearly product of the salmon fishery of this area is approximately $15,000,000.

In thinking of Alaska fisheries most people think of the Bristol Bay area, because it is the best known. But in this connection it is to be considered that many of the salmon taken on the east side of the Alaska Peninsula, particularly in the Shumagin Islands region, spawn in the lakes and rivers which flow into Bristol Bay. For some reason, as yet unknown, a part of the salmon which come into Bristol Bay each year first swim along the easterly side of the Alaska Peninsula as far north as Kodiak Island and then return and pass along the west side of the peninsula into the rivers which flow into Bristol Bay and thence into the lakes at the heads of those rivers. So it is that whatever is done with respect to the salmon which enter Bristol Bay affects not only the fishery at Bristol Bay proper but the entire fishery of the Alaska Peninsula, which is of such outstanding value.

Unlike many other kinds of fish, such as mackerel, herring, and halibut, salmon do not confine themselves to the ocean. They are hatched in the fresh water of lakes and rivers and at the end of their life cycle they die in those waters. The life cycle of the salmon varies from 2 to 8 years, according to the species. Salmon eggs are laid in the gravelly bottoms of lakes and rivers and hatch within the period of from 6 weeks to 6 months after they are deposited. Subsequent to hatching the young salmon remain in the fresh water, again dependent upon species, from a few weeks to 3 years, and then proceed down stream to the ocean and remain in the ocean from 2 to 4 years. At the end of their ocean life the salmon, both male and female, return to the streams or lakes in which they were hatched or released in order to deposit their eggs. They spawn only once, and after spawning, both male and female of the species, die in the same rivers or lakes in which they were hatched. It is estimated that a spawning salmon will deposit approximately 3,000 eggs.

Many natural enemies attack the salmon. The sea gulls eat the spawn and the newly born fish; the trout in the streams where the eggs are deposited do the same thing; at sea the salmon are, of course, subject to the depredations of the larger species of fish. In addition to all of that, when the salmon return to spawn at the end of the period of their life in the open ocean, man takes his toll. Unless care is exercised, the toll of man may be so great as to absolutely destroy the species. This has happened in many rivers, both of the United States and Europe, in which salmon were formerly plentiful. In those rivers the salmon have either entirely disappeared or are now so few in number as to be commercially negligible.

Realizing the economic advisability of maintaining unimpaired such a valuable natural resource, the United States Government has for many years past conserved the salmon by law and by administrative regulations having the force and effect of law. Under the laws and regulations mentioned the taking of salmon has been limited, both as to time and also as to the comparative number that may be taken of the run destined for any particular stream or lake. The Government of the United States in the last 10 years has spent approximately three and one-half millions of dollars in such conservation work, and it is certain that were it not for the conservation laws and regulations of the Government, so made and enforced, there probably at this time would be few salmon remaining in the waters of Alaska.

The foregoing is of importance for the reason that the catch of salmon usually occurs in the waters of the seas and bays near the mouths of the streams in which the salmon spawn. As a consequence all along the coast of Alaska where salmon run, canneries have been erected on the bays and inlets and near the mouths of the principal salmon rivers. Twenty-six salmon canneries are located in Bristol Bay alone and an equal, if not greater, number on the east side of the Alaska Peninsula. The total number of salmon packing plants in Alaska during the year 1936 was 117.

Recently the salmon fisheries of Alaska in the Bristol Bay have been threatened with disaster through the operation of Japanese ships equipped as floating canneries which remain some distance from the shore but nevertheless intercept the salmon on their way to the mouths of the streams to spawn, and thus endanger the permanent supply of salmon. The operations by the Japanese have taken place in Bering Sea and in Bristol Bay which, as I said a moment ago, opens into Bering Sea. Such packing operations carried on at some distance from shore are particularly adaptable to the Bristol Bay and Bering Sea region on account of the slight depth of the water. Bristol Bay and Bering Sea are shallow indeed. An inspection of the chart of that region showing depths of water reveals no place in Bristol Bay having a greater depth than 300 feet. At least one-half of Bering Sea is equally shallow. If a line were drawn from the west end of Unimak Island in the Aleutian chain to Cape Navarin south of the Gulf of Anadir on the coast of Siberia, we would find that all of Bering Sea to the north and east of that line so drawn to be at no place more than 500 feet deep. So that if the bottom of that portion of Bering Sea were elevated a distance equal to the height of the Washington Monument, it would all be above sea level, and the North American continent would be joined to the continent of Asia by a land bridge at least 600 miles wide. Most of Bering Sea, particularly that part west to a line drawn through the Pribilof Islands and St. Lawrence Island, is less than 250 feet deep, and, as a consequence, it is a simple enough matter for a floating cannery to anchor anywhere in Bristol Bay or in the adjoining portion of Bering Sea and carry on its operations in the waters of that region.

A few years ago the Japanese commenced their operations in Bering Sea by fishing and canning crabs. No protest was made against this, because the Japanese fisheries were carried on some miles from shore and they were utilizing a product which citizens of the United States had not sought to utilize in that region, and, moreover, the product taken had no association with the inner shore waters or the inland waters of Alaska. Within the last 2 years, however, the Japanese operators in Bering Sea have not confined their operations to the packing of crabs, but in their great nets, some of them more than a mile in length and extending from the surface to the bottom of the sea, have taken a heavy tonnage of other kinds of sea life—the groundfish for meal and oil, for freezing and salting, and also the salmon en route from the waters of the deep ocean to Bristol Bay to spawn. In addition to the Japanese floating canneries above mentioned, which have been operated by commercial interests, the Japanese Government each year since 1932 has sent one or two of its public vessels to the waters off the coast of Alaska in the Bristol Bay region for the purpose of studying the fisheries resources of those waters and, in certain cases, to visit St. Paul Island to inspect the American fur seal herd. As a result of all of these operations the Japanese now propose to enter the field in force, claiming that they have a right to do so, and to share in the Alaska salmon fisheries, which have been conserved and preserved as a result of so much care and at such cost by the Government of the United States. This purpose of the Japanese was unmistakably declared at a conference held in Seattle, Wash., February 23, 1937, when Mr. T. Takasaki, managing director of the Toya Seikan Kaisha, Ltd., of Osaka, presented a prepared statement and made informal proposals to a group of American salmon packers and others interested. Mr. Takasaki was accompanied by Mr. M. Tamura, of the same company, which is a leading Japanese can manufacturing concern. At this meeting Mr. Takasaki presented a memorandum which is a remarkable document in that it forecasts what the Japanese desire and intend to accomplish if not prevented. The document begins by saying that in compensation for the scarcity of natural resources in Japan, God has endowed the Japanese with a unique gift of excellent fishing talent to take care of their population; that their destiny is, therefore, to develop that art further and further, and to exploit the fisheries products even from the open sea where, as they claim, the international law gives them absolute freedom and protection for such operation in the use of what are commonly called floating canneries—that is to say, ships which have been built or equipped for the packing of sea-food products on board the same as in an ordinary land cannery; that this is the only way for them to provide the necessary development by means of which they will take care of their excess population.

The memorandum so submitted by Mr. Takasaki further proceeds to assert that due to experience in the operation of floating fisheries since the year 1920 Japan has succeeded in putting crab, fish meal, salmon, and whale floating factories on the basis of a perfectly sound industry; that Japanese floating salmon canneries were licensed and actually operated off both sides of Kamchatka for many years up to a few years ago, but as those floating canneries rapidly developed the Japanese Government felt anxiety as to the possible effect on the shore canneries, so that an order was issued to consolidate them in one concern, and the order was obeyed. In the meantime, as the memorandum proceeds to state, many enterprising fishery operators turned their eyes to the possibility of the Alaska fisheries; that at least 10 applications for operating licenses have been made to the Government of Japan since 1933 by well qualified and well equipped out-of-job Japanese cannery operators, but that the Government has so far refused licenses, and only in 1936, by parliamentary sanction, it was decided to send out an investigating ship.

It may be remarked in passing that the last statement above mentioned taken from the memorandum is probably inaccurate, since we know positively that every year since 1932 ships have operated in Bristol Bay, and we have every reason to believe that they have so operated with Government sanction.

Now, in considering this memorandum, we come to a part that is of startling interest. The Japanese, through Mr. Takasaki, propose to conserve salmon by forbidding any fishing in the rivers of Alaska first, by forbidding any fishing along the coast next, and leave the "open-sea fishery last", which is the fishery the Japanese propose to carry on. This language is so important that I desire to quote it. It is as follows:

> Looking into the problem of conservation, although I am not a student of physiology of salmon, it is my humble opinion we should forbid the river fishery first, the coastal fishery next, and the open-sea fishery last for more efficient conservation of the salmon.

In other words, the Japanese rather cooly propose to us that the types of fishing which we carry on on the coast of Alaska, and particularly in the Bristol Bay region, should be entirely eliminated, for our fisheries take place near the mouths of the rivers and in the adjacent coastal waters of the sea. The conservation which the Japanese propose is as to those fisheries, and they further propose that the fisheries operated by floating canneries some miles from the coast proceed without restriction, unless there is some need for restriction later as a conservation measure. Therefore it is suggested that we should put ourselves out of business in order that the Japanese may enjoy the business. And they suggest this despite the fact that there would be no salmon fishery in Bristol Bay except for the laws of the United States and for the expenditure of money supplied by the taxpayers of the United States to make effective conservation measures enacted by Congress and supplemented by departmental regulations.

However, Mr. Takasaki was generous enough finally in his memorandum to further suggest that the proposed Japanese fisheries in the Bristol Bay region be financed jointly by American and Japanese capital. It is evident from the context that only Japanese are to be employed, since Mr. Takasaki was careful to point out that the labor cost of Japanese floating canneries was much lower than the labor cost in American canneries, indicating an average wage under Japanese operations of about $39 per month, including cost of food and bonus on fish caught, and including also the salaries of the captain, chief engineer, and other officers.

The suggestion of the Japanese to forbid us the continuance of our own carefully supervised and regulated coastal fishery in favor of the Japanese open-sea method of fishery, so proposed by Mr. Takasaki because, as he stated, "it seems to answer best the question of conservation", should be accepted and considered with the proverbial grain of salt in view of the fact that the present urgency of Japan to find employment for her out-of-work fishermen and fishing vessels was brought about through her failure to effectively conserve the fisheries provided for her off the coast of Siberia through treaty with Soviet Russia. If this is the proven result of the "conservation" practiced in Japanese fisheries, and which Japan now offers to thrust upon the United States, what have we to look forward to if we allow such practice in our hitherto carefully preserved fishery, which Japan not only threatens but plans to invade as her right, untouchable by law or treaty?

The Americans who took part in the conference, and particularly the representatives of labor, rejected without qualification or reservation the proposals so made by Mr. Takasaki. In this connection it may be remarked that, although Mr. Takasaki did not suggest that he represented the Government of Japan or any governmental agency of that Empire, knowing as we do the interest of the Japanese Government and Parliament in the entire subject, and knowing as we do the close relation between big business and the Government in Japan, it is only fair to assume that the proposal which he made had the tacit, if not the express, approval of the Japanese Government.

What the Japanese have thus proposed to us, Mr. Chairman, is in effect that we abdicate and turn over to them the Alaska Peninsula fisheries. The draught is sweetened a little by the offer which they make to us of financial participation. They do not tell us how they intend to conserve the fisheries, since they claim to be operating beyond the jurisdiction of not only American laws but of the laws of any other nation save and except as to the operation of Japanese law upon Japanese shipping. So the only rational conclusion to which we may arrive is that no conservation restrictions will be effective and the Japanese in a few years by their operations will exhaust the great fisheries of that part of Alaska just as they have already in part depleted the salmon fisheries of Siberia, and in the meantime they will have acquired for themselves considerable wealth which otherwise would be enjoyed by citizens of the United States.

The whole theory of the Japanese is based upon what I consider an untenable assumption with respect to international law—the assumption that it is beyond the power of the United States to prevent or restrict the taking of salmon by the nationals of any country under any circumstances or conditions more than 3 miles from the shores of Alaska, or of any other part of the United States. The Japanese say in effect that as long as they stay without what is sometimes called the 3-mile limit they may fish to their hearts' content and that no provision of either international law or municipal law can reach them. In fact, they claim that they have the full support of international law. That conclusion I challenge and deny.

In the introduction to his work entitled "Jurisdiction in Marginal Seas", the author, Dr. William E. Masterson, directs attention to the lack of definite law on questions of jurisdiction by any nation over the waters adjoining its coast, and he observes that it has been found necessary for the state to retain a certain measure of jurisdiction over such waters—that is to say, the waters adjoining its coast—for the nation's defense and safety, for the safety of vessels visiting its ports, for the protection of the health of its citizens, for the safeguarding of its revenue against smuggling, and for the protection and preservation of the coast fisheries for its nationals. And in this connection he further remarks with respect to the extent of seaward jurisdiction by any nation, that the only clearly defined principle of international law is that such jurisdiction must be considered as extending to sea a minimum of 3 miles or 1 league.

A survey of the entire field has disclosed, as Dr. Masterson so justly shows, that the laws passed to protect or regulate various interests or claims involve different considerations and they have therefore developed along different lines necessarily presenting distinct questions; and that the attempt on the part of some writers, jurists, and governments to establish a single zone beyond which the application or enforcement of all such laws is forbidden, thus treating them as a single problem has cast "this extremely difficult subject into hopeless confusion, and has littered the juristic literature on the subject with careless assertions", and has "resulted in the belief by some English and American writers that no national interests may be safeguarded or regulated, under international law, beyond a single zone of 3 miles from the shore."

Almost anyone, layman or lawyer, who has made a thorough study of the subject, must become convinced that the so-called 3-mile limit is, as Dr. Masterson has remarked, a statement of the minimum limit seaward to which a nation may exercise jurisdiction in all cases and for all purposes and not the maximum distance to which it may exercise jurisdiction over the adjoining seas for one purpose or another. Many States have refused to be bound by the so-called 3-mile limit even as to the exercise of complete territorial jurisdiction. For example, we find that Norway, Sweden, and Portugal have always refused and now refuse to be bound by any 3-mile limit for the exercise of their general jurisdiction, Sweden claiming to possess full sovereignty for a distance of 4 sea miles from the coast and to have possessed and exercised such sovereignty for more than a century past; Portugal asserting a territorial jurisdiction seaward of more than 3 miles and basing it, in part at least, upon the need for the preservation of her fisheries; and that the Spanish Government has claimed jurisdiction over the adjoining waters to a distance of 6 miles.

Moreover, Norway has claimed exclusive fisheries rights in the Westfjord which lies between the Lofoten Islands and the mainland but no definite limits to the waters thus claimed appear ever to have been specified. The distance from the most southerly of the Lofoten Islands to the mainland is about 50 miles.

A rigid 3-mile limit at the present day is outmoded and essentially absurd. The reason for such a rule has departed years and years ago. The 3-mile-limit rule was based upon the length of a cannon shot at that time. It was supposed that a cannon planted on shore had an efficient range seaward of 3 miles, and thus the 3-mile limit was based upon the ability of a nation to protect its shores by gunfire. At the present time, when cannon shoot over the horizon and when, as in the case of the bombardment of Paris during the World War, cannon shot traversed a distance of more than 70 miles, it is, Mr. Chairman, obviously absurd to insist that the 3-mile limit has any support in reason, and we have already seen that it has not at any time met the acquiescence or consent of a sufficient number of the civilized nations of the world to give it the dignified status of international law.

It is beyond dispute that the one thing settled in what is commonly called international law as to jurisdiction over marginal waters is that there is no precise geographical limit recognized by that law to apply to every nation and for every purpose.

At least one segment of this very important question came under the consideration of this House in 1935 when Congress considered and finally enacted what is commonly known as the Antismuggling Act, approved August 5, 1935 (49 Stat. 517). The bill which resulted in the act was carefully considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the House on March 8 and 13 and May 1 and 2, 1935, on what was then H. R. 5496. The printed hearings on the bill contain a citation of many of the adjudicated cases upon the question then considered by the committee, and that question involved the seaward jurisdiction of the Nation for the purpose of protecting its revenue and against smuggling. May I invite the attention of the Members of the House to the extensive brief on the subject by Dr. Hessel E. Yntema, professor of law, University of Michigan, to be found in the printed hearings. The reading of Dr. Yntema's brief will well repay the time spent thereon.

It is realized, Mr. Chairman, that the question presented in consideration of the bill which led to the passage of the Antismuggling Act are only in part relevant to the question presented by the threat to the Alaska fisheries of which I am speaking. But in part, at least, the issues are identical in principle, for each involves a question as to what may be done in harmony with international law for the protection of either the revenues or the commercial interests or other rights or claims of any nation through exercise of jurisdiction by that nation over the waters of the ocean which adjoin its coast. That principle was laid down more than 100 years ago by one who is commonly regarded as the greatest of American jurists—after saying that it is scarcely necessary to say further that his name was John Marshall—in a case which came before the Supreme Court in 1804 (Church v. Hubbart, 6 U. S. (2 Cr.), at p. 187), and which involved the seizure of a vessel of the United States by the Portuguese for illicit trade more than 12 miles from shore, was sustained by the great Chief Justice upon the principle which he has declared in the following language:

That the law of nations prohibits the exercise of any act of authority over a vessel in the situation of the Aurora, and that this seizure is, on that account, a mere marine trespass, not within the exception, cannot be admitted. To reason from the extent of protection a nation will afford to foreigners, to the extent of the means it may use for its own security, does not seem to be perfectly correct. It is opposed by principles which are universally acknowledged. The authority of a nation within its own territory is absolute and exclusive. The seizure of a vessel, within the range of its cannon, by a foreign force, is an invasion of that territory, and is a hostile act which it is its duty to repel. But its power to secure itself from injury may certainly be exercised beyond the limits of its territory. Upon this principle, the right of a belligerent to search a neutral vessel on the high seas for contraband of war is universally admitted, because the belligerent has a right to prevent the injury done to himself by the assistance intended for his enemy; so, too, a nation has a right to prohibit any commerce with its colonies. Any attempt to violate the laws made to protect this right is an injury to itself which it may prevent, and it has a right to use the means necessary for its prevention. These means do not appear to be limited within any certain marked boundaries, which remain the same at all times and in all situations. If they are such as unnecessarily to vex and harass foreign lawful commerce, foreign nations will resist their exercise. If they are such as are reasonable and necessary to secure their laws from violation, they will be submitted to.

In different seas and on different coasts a wider or more contracted range in which to exercise the vigilance of the government will be assented to. Thus, in the channel, where a very great part of the commerce to and from all the north of Europe passes through a very narrow sea, the seizure of vessels on suspicion of attempting an illicit trade must necessarily be restricted to very narrow limits; but on the coast of South America, seldom frequented by vessels but for the purpose of illicit trade, the vigilance of the government may be extended somewhat farther; and foreign nations submit to such regulations as are reasonable in themselves and are really necessary to secure the monopoly of colonial commerce, which is claimed by all nations holding distant possessions.

If this right be extended too far, the exercise of it will be resisted. It has occasioned long and frequent contests, which have sometimes ended in open war. The English, it will be well recollected, complained of the right claimed by Spain to search their vessels on the high seas, which was carried so far that the guarda costas of that nation seized vessels not in the neighborhood of their coasts. This practice was the subject of long and fruitless negotiations, and at length, of open war. The right of the Spaniards was supposed to be exercised unreasonably and vexatiously, but it never was contended that it could only be exercised within the range of the cannon from their batteries. Indeed, the right given to our own revenue cutters to visit vessels 4 leagues from our coast is a declaration that, in the opinion of the American Government, no such principle as that contended for has a real existence. Nothing then is to be drawn from the laws or usages of nations, which gives to this part of the contract before the court the very limited construction which the plaintiff insists on, or which proves that the seizure of the Aurora by the Portuguese governor was an act of lawless violence.

It is to be noted, Mr. Chairman, that in the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall, jurisdiction over marginal seas may be exercised by any nation without express or rigid limits where necessary to secure itself from injury. In this connection it can scarcely be claimed that the actions proposed by the Japanese with respect to the Alaska fisheries do not constitute a direct injury not only to the interests but to the sovereign rights of the United States for the protection and conservation of one of its natural resources.

The law so laid down by John Marshall has never been successfully challenged or disputed. The Congress of the United States acted upon that principle in passing the Antismuggling Act in 1935 in which we expressly gave the President power to declare customs enforcement areas on the high seas adjacent to but outside customs waters so as to permit the seizure and forfeiture within that area of vessels which were seeking to violate the customs laws of the United States. No geographic limit seaward was placed upon the authority of the President to declare such a customs enforcement area and, so far as the act is concerned, that area might be declared to extend 100 miles from the coast of the United States in any particular region.

The history of the Antismuggling Act is well worth consideration. It was recommended to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury who showed that even after the repeal of the United States prohibition laws foreign vessels were smuggling into the country vast amounts of illicit liquor, principally alcohol, and that under then-existing law and treaties it was impossible to cope with the smugglers. The Secretary pointed out that since 1890 we have had on the statute books of the United States laws permitting the seizure of vessels for the protection of the revenue up to 12 miles from shore, and in addition we had made treaties with a number of nations during the prohibition era for the search of the vessels of their nationals within 1 hour's sailing distance from shore, but that despite those laws and treaties it had been found impossible to prevent the smuggling in of illicit liquor from boats remaining outside of the 12-mile limit established by law and also beyond 1 hour's sailing distance of the coast. Accordingly, Congress passed the Antismuggling Act and within a few months the smuggling of liquor into the United States had been almost entirely eradicated—not through the making of more treaties but through the exercise of the power and jurisdiction which this Government has always possessed and which it finally determined to use by the enactment of a law of Congress.

If jurisdiction exists over territorial waters to prevent smuggling and to protect the revenue for a distance of 12 miles from shore, as set down in the statute of August 4, 1790, and subsequent statutes, and if it exists to an undetermined distance in any customs enforcement area that may be, upon proper grounds, declared by the President, then I insist that the power also exists to protect ourselves from injury through the protection and conservation of the great salmon fisheries which we have spent so much money to build up and to conserve. And I suggest that there is nothing in international law to forbid or prevent such an exercise, through municipal law, of the power of the Government.

In the preamble to the British Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act of 1878 (41 and 42 Vic. 73) it was declared by the Parliament of Great Britain that "the rightful jurisdiction of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors exists and has always existed over the open seas adjacent to the coast of the United Kingdom and of all other parts of Her Majesty's dominions to such a distance as is necessary for the defense and security of such dominions." By this and other provisions of the act care was taken to avoid the inference that the adoption of the 3-mile limit for the purpose of criminal jurisdiction involved any recession in the claim of the Crown to exercise jurisdiction "at such limit as was necessary for the defense of the realm."

As perhaps the greatest sea nation of the world in volume of tonnage afloat upon the ocean, the British have done as much as any nation to make that loose body of customs that is referred to as international law. From the early days the British Government has claimed and actually exercised extensive jurisdiction upon the high seas adjacent to its coast to prevent smuggling. While the statute of 1878 just referred to is somewhat narrower in its scope than previous laws of Parliament, jurisdiction is still claimed to an indefinite distance from the coast just as under the Antismuggling Act passed by Congress in 1935.

The various and conflicting claims with respect to jurisdiction over the seas adjoining the coast of Great Britain is worthy of passing notice. Great Britain has alternately claimed almost unlimited jurisdiction even over the high seas, and that no nation could exert for any purpose a jurisdiction more than 3 miles from its coast. And in each case the leaders of the British Empire have solemnly asserted and insisted that the claim made at the moment not only had the support of international law but actually was international law. These assertions were the more serious and indeed could be actually enforced by reason of the overwhelming sea power of Great Britain.

In every age, and indeed in every year, Great Britain seems to have asserted as international law, what at that time best suited her convenience. It illustrates the hopeless confusion in which the whole subject of international law is involved since it is based upon custom and acquiesence, and since in many cases what is strongly claimed to be international law is merely a rule of action which will best serve the interests of that power which is strongest at sea. Such international law is not founded upon equity or justice and is not law in any real sense of the word, unless we may call law any rule laid down by the most powerful Nation and without regard to the consent of those subject to it, and maintained by force alone. In this connection, without criticizing anyone, it may be well for us to remember that during the World War more than one nation treated with cynical disregard several of the rules of the sea that had before that time been widely understood to be supported by international law.

So, today, when we find that one or more nations are advocating a rigid 3-mile limit for all purposes, and confidently asserting that the rule which they now support is embraced in international law, we may be excused for wondering whether such present policy is founded upon a proposed course of conduct which will aid in maintaining their own prestige and power, and not upon acquiescence therein of the civilized states of the world.

Mr. Chairman, we have here to consider a question which involves what may justly be called our own property. It is true that salmon cannot be classed in precisely the same category as those domestic animals which can be kept herded and confined. The salmon at some time in their lives must go to the open ocean or the high seas and remain there for several years. Perhaps it may be admitted that in the remote seas if our Alaska salmon should be caught by any other national we would have no grounds to protest—one reason being that we would have no means of identifying our property. But enough investigation has been made of the life history and the habits of salmon to know beyond any question of doubt that the salmon heretofore taken by the Japanese in Bristol Bay or the adjoining waters of Bering Sea, and the vastly increased quantities they propose to take in the future, are salmon bound for the rivers which flow into Bristol Bay and the lakes at the heads of those rivers—the rivers and lakes in which they were hatched. These salmon exist only by virtue of our conservation laws. They exist only by reason of the fact that we have spent money to protect and preserve them. They are our property. To permit another national within sight of our coast to take this property which we have labored in preserving is, I submit, a violation of our substantial rights, rights which we may lawfully protect, just as we protect our revenues, by an assertion and exercise of jurisdiction upon the adjoining seas.

This Congress has a right to enact a law similar to the Antismuggling Act giving the administrative arm of the Government power to preserve our supply of salmon through prevention of interference by other nationals with the approach of those salmon to the rivers of Alaska for spawning—rivers from which they came and to which they are returning.

Suppose the case were the other way round. Suppose our commercial fishing interests should send a vessel to Japan to lie outside of the so-called 3-mile limit and intercept fish destined for the inland waters of Japan to the ultimate destruction of the entire industry, having the result of not only destroying the capital invested but in throwing thousands of people out of employment, how long do you suppose it would take the Japanese to exercise their authority and jurisdiction in the protection of their own property? Is it any exaggeration to say that within 24 hours not only would the strongest diplomatic representations be made to the American Government by the Japanese but within 48 hours the offending vessel, if it persisted in its operations, would be sunk or seized for forfeiture? Indeed, we could not justly claim injury by any such action even though somebody sometime has mistakenly said that no nation can exercise jurisdiction seaward more than 3 miles.

The Japanese are a great people and a proud people. They have much in them of the energy, the vitality, and the matchless discipline which made Rome the mistress of the world, and they, I am sure, would not for a moment entertain under the conditions which I have mentioned any proposal on our part that we were within the technical letter of the law in depriving them of what they had a right to consider their own property necessary for the welfare of their people.

After all, John Marshall was careful in the language which he used. A reading of the entire opinion which I have mentioned shows that he considered the subject fully, thoroughly, comprehensively, ecumenically, and it is evident that he purposely used language general in its nature in order to preserve intact what he considered and what we all must consider as of the very spirit of international law since it is a law which must be founded upon justice, and the general language so used is in substance that any nation has a right to exercise jurisdiction a reasonable but unlimited distance seaward from its coast to prevent an injury to itself which is a violation of its own national laws.

The suggestion has been made that we enter into a treaty with the Japanese for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, but is it conceivable that the Japanese in entering into any such treaty will not demand tribute for its consent not to destroy the Alaska fisheries? All of the actions of the Japanese in this matter up until the present moment indicate that they are determined, if they can, to share in the wealth of the Alaska fisheries regardless of our rights. If we ask them by treaty to give over this ambition, may we not be certain that they are going to demand pay for it? And how much are we going to pay?

Mr. Chairman, is not this an occasion when we should draw council from the history of the Nation? When we should remember and adopt as the foundation of our policy the courageous declaration of principle embodied in the toast which Robert Goodloe Harper, Member of Congress from the State of South Carolina, offered at a dinner given on June 18, 1798, to John Marshall, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute"? Clearly, to my mind, it is not a case for the exercise of the treaty-making power of the United States but it is a case for the exercise of the national power of the United States to be exercised, if necessary, by an act of Congress and by enforcement of such act by the administrative branch of the Government.

Moreover, if the Japanese are correct in their contention, every other nation has the same right to share in the Alaska fisheries by remaining outside of the so-called 3-mile limit and intercepting the Alaska salmon as they go to the spawning grounds. If we treat with the Japanese and thus pay tribute to them not to destroy our fisheries, how long will it be before we are obliged to pay tribute to some other nation which is engaged in fishing in the seas? If we are going to share the Alaska fisheries with the Japanese, will we not eventually have to share them with the British and the French and the Italians and the Norwegians and the Swedes and the Russians? Just to state that question is to answer it. It is impossible to make treaties with the whole world, and if we attempt to share the Alaska fisheries with all of the nations of the earth, then we had better admit at once that we have not the fortitude to protect ourselves and call the whole world in to share in what we have.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, the Seattle Central Labor Council reached the correct conclusion in this matter in adopting a resolution opposing any negotiations looking toward any treaty on the subject—the paragraph in the resolution being as follows:

Be it further resolved, That no negotiations looking toward any treaty on this subject should be considered.

The resolution also contained the following statement:

Any treaty on this subject with any foreign nation unless it specifically recognizes an exclusive proprietary of the United States in the salmon native to Alaska could have the effect only of granting to the nationals of such nation privilege of sharing what is naturally and properly an American resource.

An American Legion post in Seattle, upon consideration of the subject, took action opposing the making of any treaty with the Japanese for the protection of the Alaska salmon fisheries.

What I have suggested does not involve the claim that the Bering Sea is a "closed sea", though Nature made it almost that. When one considers that the northern part of the sea at Bering Strait is only 56 miles wide and that the Aleutian Islands, which are part of Alaska, extend almost to the Komandorski Islands which belong to Soviet Russia, it will be seen that the Bering Sea probably should from the earliest days have been considered a "mare clausum" or closed sea. But that claim is not made now. I believe it can be justly claimed that the exercise of the jurisdiction of the United States with respect to the salmon fisheries of Alaska may reasonably be extended to all of the shallow waters of the Bering Sea, to the limit of the continental shelf and that limit, as I have indicated, extends approximately from the western end of Unimak Island to Cape Navarin. This part of Bering Sea is little more than a deep pond, and I think it is beyond question that if the Japanese are permitted to carry on their operations unobstructed they will practically put a fence in the sea across the mouth of Bristol Bay so that no salmon may enter. An exercise of the jurisdiction of the United States over this shallow continental shelf will solve the problem. Indeed, in reason it may be claimed that the continental shelf is only a doorstep to our uplands. Just as the owner of a domicile has the right to eject trespassers from his doorstep, so I suggest in logic and reason a nation may justly exercise jurisdiction over its fisheries up to the edge of the continental shelf.

Mr. Chairman, in my view there are four possible approaches to the subject:

First. The voluntary withdrawal of the Japanese from the Bering Sea fisheries—a withdrawal demanded by fundamental considerations of equity and justice.

Second. The exercise of the right and authority of the United States to prevent fishing by aliens in Bering Sea where such fishing interferes with the entry of Alaska salmon into Alaska rivers; this jurisdiction to be exercised through the passage and enforcement of an act of Congress similar in scope to the Antismuggling Act.

Third. The negotiation of a treaty with the Japanese Government and the payment of what will amount to tribute to that Government not to disturb or invade the Alaska salmon fisheries, at the same time entertaining the hope—which, in my judgment, is bound to be a futile hope—that other nations will not demand similar tribute.

Fourth. To let down the conservation bars and permit the American operators to take all of the salmon of Bering Sea that they can get until the salmon are entirely exhausted. For if the Japanese are permitted to carry out their plans unhampered, with nothing more than a few diplomatic protests—if even that—then there is no salvation for the salmon of the Bering Sea region, and it would be folly, Mr. Chairman, to spend money in the enforcement of the conservation laws in order to give the Japanese nationals a chance to enjoy the fruit of that conservation policy.

Unless we assert the jurisdiction which we have and possess, and protect our own property in what are substantially our own waters, then we had better let American operators and workers get all they can while the salmon last. At the end, of course, the capital invested will be lost, for there will be no other use to which a cannery on the shore of Bering Sea can be put than packing salmon, and some 20,000 people will be denied their only means of making a living.

And that is not all: If the Japanese are permitted to "get away with this" in the Bering Sea, will it be long until we have Japanese floating canneries hovering off the coast of all those parts of Alaska where salmon run and thence southward to the entrance to Puget Sound and the mouth of the Columbia River?

May I suggest that a firm exercise of our authority and power now may do much to preserve peace? For I apprehend that if the Japanese are permitted to carry out their plans there will be such grave public resistance to it, particularly by people who are deprived of their livelihood, as to incur definite risk of those hostile incidents which lead to war. I conceive, Mr. Chairman, that the people in the western part of the United States and Alaska will be gravely incensed at the sight of a string of Japanese cannery vessels stretching along the coast of Alaska and perhaps extending down to the ocean waters immediately outside of Puget Sound and the Columbia River, something like the rum runners of former days.

Of course, we can yield to this threat. We can say to the Japanese, "Please go away; but if you do not go away, you can have the Alaska fisheries. Please do not touch the fisheries of Puget Sound and the Columbia River; but if you must have them, take them, and we will do nothing about it." In short, Mr. Chairman, we can adopt a policy of "cut and scuttle"—we can adopt a policy of submission. But what is the final end of that policy? It is said that "He who fights and runs away will live to fight another day", but experience with life teaches us that "He who fights and runs away will have to fight another day."

Mr. Chairman, I have said that the solution of this problem lies in legislation and in the exercise of the power and authority we now have, not in treaties. The administrative policy of the United States with respect to jurisdiction over marginal seas has already been laid down in the Antismuggling Act. That power ought to be further extended and defined by an act for the further conservation of the fisheries of the United States, giving the administrative arm of the Government the right to protect and conserve Alaska salmon in the waters of the ocean adjoining Alaska when it reasonably appears that those salmon are en route to Alaska waters to spawn. The most experienced draftsman of the Government should be detailed for the drafting of such an act, for the reason that the rights and the power of the Government and the interest over the years of hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of our citizens and potential citizens are involved or will be involved. The question is one of the highest moment, of the greatest importance, and therefore the drafting of the proposed legislation should be undertaken by those who have the most experience and the greatest skill. For that reason I have hesitated to present here a bill of my own. But presently, if no one else attempts it, I shall present a bill for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska along the lines herein indicated and ask for its consideration and passage by Congress. This question does not affect Alaska only—it affects the entire Nation—and it involves not only the immediate welfare of some thousands of our citizens but it involves a vitally important question of national policy.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it will be noticed this paragraph refers to the Territory of Hawaii. I want to mention at this time that we members of a subcommittee considered legislation having to do with sugar legislation have been working for about 2 months on a sugar bill, and during the consideration of that bill the question came up as to whether or not we were going to recognize the Territory of Hawaii and give it the same standing and the same benefit as a State of the United States. We saw fit to set up in the proposed bill the difference we actually see between the Territory of Hawaii, the offshore areas, and the States of the United States, and I think we were right in doing so. I think there is a difference, and to demonstrate this difference I want to read to the Committee a statement with regard to the Hawaiian sugar workers:

> The National Labor Relations Board is investigating the complaints of the sugar workers of Hawaii, who said that they were there in a state bordering on medieval servitude. The plantation guards intimidated the workers with machine guns.

May I say that in Hawaii they bring their plantation laborers from the Philippine Islands under labor contract.

The fare is paid from the Philippine Islands to Hawaii, and if the workers do not live up to the contract they are not sent back with fare paid.

May I also call attention to an item in Labor Bulletin No. 534, reading as follows:

Americans do not work on plantations in Hawaii. There was only one American adult on the pay rolls of the island of Hawaii in 1929. Eighty-eight percent of all the employees on the sugar plantations are Filipinos and Japanese.

That appears on page 3. On page 11 we find that the average wage is only $10.92 a week.

On page 14 we find this statement:

The source of supply has largely been from the Philippines, from which labor has been imported to work on the Hawaiian plantations under labor contracts. Independent organization is not recognized. The only labor organization recognized is the barber's union.

Mr. Chairman, when the sugar legislation comes to this House for consideration we are going to be asked to place the Territory of Hawaii and the other similar areas on a plane with the States of the United States. The argument will be put forth that they are under the American flag. That may be all well and good, but Hawaii is still a Territory. I plead with you today and will when that bill comes on the floor for consideration, to protect American labor and continental labor as well as our industry on the continent.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. Hawaii is producing and refining sugar up to its capacity now, while the sugar factories in this country are idle, and yet Hawaii wants the opportunity and the privilege of refining more sugar.

Mr. HOOK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Chairman, we have refined sugar coming into this country from Cuba, which we have cut in order to save industry and labor in the United States. When we started to frame this bill the members of our subcommittee decided that we were going to write our own legislation. Then some little $100 or $125 a month clerks came in and told us we could not write our own bill. But we are going to write it, and we are going to ask you to stand back of us. Let us be legislators and not take all our orders from department clerks or department heads.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. When is that bill going to be brought on the floor for consideration?

Mr. HOOK. I would like to know. We are going to fight to bring it out despite opposition of the department clerks and those who would sell our American labor and industry down the line for their own selfish interests and desires.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will vote with the gentleman on it, but when is he going to bring it out?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

For salaries of the Governor and employees incident to the execution of the acts of March 3, 1917 (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 1391), and June 22, 1936 (Public, No. 749, 74th Cong.), traveling expenses of officers and employees, necessary janitor service, care of Federal grounds, repair and preservation of Federal buildings and furniture, purchase of equipment, stationery, lights, water, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses, including not to exceed $5,000 for purchase, including exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and not to exceed $4,000 for personal services, household equipment, and furnishings, fuel, ice, and electricity necessary in the operation of Government House at St. Thomas and Government House at St. Croix; $116,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the item for the Virgin Islands contained in the pending bill is only $261,000, which is a mere bagatelle compared with the billions being expended year in and year out, yet it is a rather intriguing item if you examine the purpose for which this money is going to be used.

You may or may not recall that we acquired the Virgin Islands from Denmark in 1917 for $25,000,000. At that time the three islands—St. John, St. Croix, and St. Thomas—had a population of only 25,000 people. So for all practical purposes we paid $1,000 per inhabitant. I do not know why we ever bought them. It was stated they were purchased for national-defense purposes. However, I may cite to this committee that Puerto Rico lies to the west of the Virgin Islands, Great Britain owns five islands along the Windward Passage just to the east, and we have made no particular effort to fortify the islands and bring them within a scheme of national defense. They have given us, on the contrary, no end of trouble.

They have been officially recognized and designated as the "Nation's poorhouse." I might say they ought to be called the Nation's dog house or the Nation's hot-dog house, because they are certainly a fruitful field for experimentation and exploration of fancy on the part of somebody in this administration. We never heard of the Virgin Islands until Mr. Tugwell came on the scene, that estimable gentleman of late and lamented memory, who is now associated with the treacle business in this country. When he came on the job we found that the Virgin Islands were composed of anything but good household economists. So as early as 1933 we had to subsidize the treasury of the islands to the extent of $240,000 so that they could balance the budget. Since we have been spending with a free and lavish hand year in and year out, they are no longer concerned with such nonsense as a balanced budget, because good old Uncle Sam will look after the children down there if they run out of funds and cannot balance the budget from sources of revenue within the islands. There is an item in the pending bill for $110,000 to reimburse the island treasury and help them over the rough places. Last year it was $175,000. In 1935 it was about $190,000 and in 1933 it was about $236,000. For the Virgin Islanders it is like getting candy from home and every day is Christmas.

But that is not all. Let us look at the emergency relief in 1935 and 1936. We have already obligated $1,448,000 for emergency-relief purposes down there for one item and another. It must be apparent that a million and one-half for relief, together with other generous hand-outs by the Federal Government for three islands having a population of 25,000, is what one might call lavish bounty. Especially so since living expenses are probably one-fourth of what they would be in the States.

But that is not all. Our former pal and comrade, Rex Tugwell, came along with the idea that since the bay rum business has been decommissioned by the eighteenth amendment and never revived, some other variety of rum ought to be produced down there; so forthwith P. W. A. sets up a little corporation, and it provides a capital structure of $2,000,000 for the purpose of building a distillery in the Virgin Islands and acquiring 5,000 acres of sugar land whereon they can produce the cane which will be processed in the sugar mills and in this rum distillery.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot yield just now.

Fancy a distillery in this country, first of all, receiving $2,000,000 of capital out of the Federal sock. Then, secondly, fancy a distillery in this country getting an outright grant of $170,000 for the purpose of cash on hand and working balances. Then fancy a distillery getting $200,000 for the purpose of employing people to work on the plantations which are to provide the cane to be processed in this distillery and converted into a kind of toothsome and succulent rum. Then fancy a distillery that gets an additional $200,000 for the same purpose. Anytime the company runs out of capital or working balance or working funds, just call up Uncle Sam and he will remedy that little difficulty. There you have a really sweet industrial picture. It is the kind of which businessmen dream when they have trouble meeting the pay roll or reporting to the stockholders. Good old Uncle Sam is just like a rescuing Santa Claus for this little rum-making corporation.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I want to read a letter I have received from the chairman of the board of directors of this rum manufacturing concern, the Virgin Islands Co., which is established in the Virgin Islands. It reads as follows:

APRIL 26, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. RICH,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. RICH: I am sending you herewith a laboratory sample of Government House rum manufactured by the Virgin Islands Co. in St. Croix.

This is the same rum which is about to be marketed through a distributing agency in the United States. It is distilled from pure sugarcane juice under the most modern conditions. The cane was raised by natives of the Virgin Islands in connection with the rehabilitation program, which has been most successful in improving the standard of living on the islands.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Chairman, Board of Directors.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield now.

The Secretary of the Interior is chairman of the board of this rum manufacturing concern, of which every Member of Congress and every citizen of the United States is a stockholder. It is a Government-owned corporation. I have their bottle of rum, and would have brought it over here to show you, but I knew I would never get it out of here, so I made up my mind I would leave it elsewhere for safekeeping. [Laughter.]

Here is the advertisement which is being run in the newspapers, advertising this Government rum for sale in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KENNEY and Mr. RANDOLPH rose.

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield; my time is too short.

I do not believe the Government should be in the rum business or any other business. I do not believe the Government should be manufacturing rum in competition with the distillers of this country. The people of this country who are in the whisky business, and who are in it because the Government grants them permission, are paying taxes to keep this Government going, and I think the Federal Government ought to stay out of that business in competition with them. I do not care what kind of business it is, the Government has no business to be in competition with its private citizens.

I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. Is the gentleman telling this Congress that the United States Government is actually in the rum business?

Mr. RICH. You are in the rum business. I say every citizen of the United States is in the rum business by virtue of the Federal Government owning the stock of the Virgin Island Co. and because the Government is operating it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am delighted to know the gentleman was selected to receive the bottle, because I understand the gentleman is a teetotaler and I know the seal on the bottle was not broken.

Mr. RICH. The seal is not broken. As I have stated, if I had brought the bottle over here, I know I could not have said that. I have too many friends here that like it too well. Every member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations received a quart.

The Government first gave these people a million dollars to start this business. Last year the Government gave them $1,350,000 more. Then it gave them $170,000. The Government has invested in the rum business in the Virgin Islands $2,520,000. What do these people have on hand? They have 600,000 gallons of rum valued at a dollar a gallon, which would amount to $600,000. They have 3,800 tons of sugar, which, at $70 a ton, would amount to $266,000. Their total assets are $866,000, plus the lands which were bought in the Virgin Islands, these two old, worn-out sugar mills, and the one distilling plant. Our taxpayers in the States will meet the deficits annually is my guess.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did the gentleman say we are all stockholders in this rum plant?

Mr. RICH. Yes. You certainly are if you are a taxpayer, and I know you are.

Mr. HOUSTON. Are we going to get any dividends this year?

Mr. RICH. Never. You will never get a dividend, because the Government never went into any business where it did not keep putting the taxpayers' money into it and never getting anything out. The Government does not know how to run a business. It never did and never will.

Mr. HOUSTON. I agree with that if they sent the gentleman a bottle of rum.

Mr. RICH. All members of the committee received a bottle, and the Government puts into that business a lot of politicians from back home who are worn-out and decrepit office seekers. It brings these men down to Washington, sends them to the Virgin Islands, and they try to run a business in competition with the people back home. Its principle is wrong; the Government should get out of the rum business as well as all other business.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, how is business? [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of the agricultural experiment station and the vocational school in the Virgin Islands, including technical personnel, clerks, and other persons; scientific investigations of plants and plant industries and diseases of animals; demonstrations in practical farming; official traveling expenses; fixtures, apparatus, and supplies; clearing and fencing of land; and other necessary expenses, including not to exceed $2,000 for purchase, including exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $35,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, resuming from the point where this statesmanlike effort of mine was so unceremoniously interrupted a few moments ago, here you have a distillery capitalized with $2,000,000 of Government funds, but the rum they produce is not supposed to be Government rum. The working capital came out of the Federal Treasury, but it is not supposed to be Government rum. The plantation fund and the employee funds on the plantations were got out of the Federal sock, but it is not supposed to be Government rum.

I may say that the distillers of this country certainly would like to have a set-up of that kind, because, despite all the counterfeiting and all the disguising we try to throw about this operation by strange language, nevertheless it means that the Federal Government is today in the business of manufacturing rum and competing with its own distilleries in this country. But this is not all. I was rather amazed at the difficulty they had in finding a suitable name for this rum made with Government funds, made by people who for all practical purposes are on the Federal pay roll, and yet is not Government rum. After all these ingenious minds in one of the departments got together, they decided upon the very felicitous name of "Government House Rum." It burst upon the horizon of the National Capital in all its liquid glory not so long ago through the medium of a newspaper advertisement at $1.89 for a fifth.

It is alleged that this rum is one year and a half old. I will take you to any legitimate liquor store in Washington and get you 3-year-old rum infinitely better which is in the same price bracket or even cheaper. Can there, then, be any justification for projecting the Federal Government into the rum or distilling business on a basis of this kind?

Now, they also propose to rehabilitate the Islands through the sugar industry down there and to bring into tillage another 15,000 acres of land, upon which they expect to produce an average of 1 ton per acre, or 15,000 tons, in addition to the 8,600 tons per year that now constitutes the quota of the Virgin Islands under the last quota act.

How singular, I say to you, when 22 nations are sitting around a table in Europe seeking to fabricate some kind of restriction upon the growing of sugar. How singular when there is a committee of the House of Representatives struggling with a bill that will do justice to the Hawaiian Islands, to Puerto Rico, and to the domestic cane producer, the domestic beet producer, the Virgin Islands, and all the rest because there is too much sugar, How singular that they should be talking down there in this offshore possession about more Federal funds with which to expand the sugar acreage of the Virgin Islands, when it is conceded by every one of the 22 civilized, sugar-growing countries in the world that we have too much sugar and that the problem today is a curtailment of acreage, but the official rehabilitators are down there in that sunny, convivial climate, among the groves on the Virgin Islands, talking about using more Federal funds to expand their sugar production, when a House committee, the various departments of the executive branch of the Government, and a host of sugar experts in many countries are tearing their hair over how to curtail sugar acreage and satisfy all the diverse elements that have an interest in the world's sugar bowl.

I am not insensible to the fact that the people in the islands, who are our people now, have been in dire distress and needed help. But why was it necessary for the Federal Government to project itself and public funds into business in the islands when it could have been done by private capital. Someone said that businessmen made a survey of the islands and decided that they did not care to undertake an enterprise down there. I have some grave doubts on that score, and it would be interesting indeed to know whether private business was not actually discouraged in an attempt to make a set-up in the islands.

The question has also been raised as to the squalid condition among the natives, the low rates of pay, and other distressing conditions that would not be remedied by private capital on the theory that private enterprise would only exploit native labor for its own gain. To those who raise such a question I can only say that all the social legislation, all the ameliorating legislation passed by Congress which is designed to improve working conditions among labor, improve wage standards, and elevate living conditions apply no less to the Virgin Islands than to the States. As an example, just examine the relief bill to be considered later in the day, and on page 1 you will find that it applies to Territories and possessions no less than to the United States.

But let me point out two other matters in connection with this Federal venture into the rum-making business. Only recently complaint has been filed with the Federal Alcohol Administration that the Government-made Government House rum now on the market does not comply with various requirements which the F. A. A. imposes upon private distillers and that the F. A. A. has not undertaken to remedy the situation. Can it be that as time goes on there will be discrimination by an agency of the Federal Government in favor of its own product and against privately made products so that it will become increasingly difficult for private distillers to compete. If this is true, and it appears to be, how can such discrimination be justified. While rum is, of course, a liquor that has but limited appeal and is not so widely used by the consuming public, yet what assurance is there that such Government competition and discrimination will not be projected into other branches of the business as time goes on and increase the difficulties of the distilling industry in this country.

The other matter is the proposal of Governor Cramer, who appeared before the subcommittee, that the Virgin Islands tourists be permitted to bring $100 worth of liquor into the States free of duty. The islands now have a local tariff of 6 percent, which they charge on imported liquors which come in from Great Britain and other countries. The Governor believes that if tourists could be permitted to bring $100 worth of this foreign liquor into the States free of the duty that is now imposed, it would help the tourist business and bring revenues into the island treasury.

After awhile I fancy that the same privileges could be extended to Puerto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, and others, and soon there would be enough of these $100 commuters so that the Federal revenues from liquor would be substantially impaired. It is a naive suggestion, but if the Governor insists hard enough for some such provision, he is likely to get it, because the Virgin Islanders have been given most everything else. These Virgin Islands will become a great business in time unless the Treasury runs out of money.

It is not at all strange that the Governor of the Virgin Islands, when he made his report not so long ago, stated that the Virgin Islands are politically and economically moving forward. He might have stricken out the "economically." [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, it may be quite all right for us to stand here and make facetious remarks and have fun at the expense of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, but the fact remains that when we acquired those islands through purchase or by conquest, our people knew they were sugar plantation areas, and insofar as the Virgin Islands are concerned, what action has this Congress or past Congresses taken to set up a proper form of government down there? Look how the overlapping has come down from the Danish Government, although we purchased these islands way back in 1917, or about 20 years ago. What have we done to fix it so these people can be self-supporting and independent of the public funds of the United States, contributed by the taxpayers of this country?

I hold no brief for the Government going into the rum business and using public funds for that purpose. I hold no brief for the American Molasses Co., which is quite capable of taking care of itself, but at the same time, unless there is work for these people to do on private pay rolls or public pay rolls, with our purchasing their products, it is needless to say that the taxpayers of this country will have to contribute funds to the relief chests and let the funds go down there to feed and clothe and shelter them.

The Virgin Islands are somewhat like an entertainment park that belongs to a street-car company.

You go out and you build your places of amusement in order to get the people to ride your streetcars out to those points. Why do we not make a place of pleasure for our tourists in the Virgin Islands, instead of having them go to Cuba and Bermuda, where we obtain no revenue from them whatsoever?

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman speaks of the Government being in the rum business, which I rather regret myself, in view of the basic idealism of the American people; but the gentleman does not mention the fact that the Government is running the Blue Beard Inn.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true; and through our failure to act here we have fertilized the ground so that the Government authorities can have the excuse to take public funds to the Virgin Islands and invest them there in Government enterprises in competition with private enterprise. You should look into the way the judiciary of the Virgin Islands is operated, if you want something interesting, and just check into that matter along with the rum business. Do not misunderstand me.

I am not in favor of the Government coming into competition with private industry in the Virgin Islands or anywhere else; I am opposed to it, but at the same time there is a human side to the Virgin Islands question, and you cannot acquire these territories and then let absentee ownership make slaves out of the inhabitants without having to pay a price, and this is some of the price that we are paying today. That is worth looking into in connection not only with the Virgin Islands but in connection with Puerto Rico.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman that Mr. Cramer, who has charge of the Virgin Islands company, made the statement that he is after legislation so that he can permit $100 worth of liquor to come into this country free. What he wants to do is to get liquor from foreign countries to go into the Virgin Islands, and then in turn have our people go to the Virgin Islands the same as to Bermuda in order to get that liquor, to come into this country free. Keep your eyes open, because he is going to have that on some bill coming into the House of Representatives before this session of Congress is over.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. Without objection, the pro-forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For defraying the deficits in the treasuries of the municipal governments because of the excess of current expenses over current revenues for the fiscal year 1938, municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, $60,000, and municipality of St. Croix, $50,000; in all, $110,000, to be paid to the said treasuries in monthly installments.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on lines 9 to 14, page 126, to ask some questions of the chairman of the committee. What provision of law is there providing that we should pay the deficits of the municipalities of the Virgin Islands, as carried in lines 9 to 14?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that the authority for the administration of the Virgin Islands is to be found in title 48, section 1391, United States Code. Although there is no specific provision of law providing for the payment of deficits of a municipality, the committee felt that the law is sufficiently broad to grant authority for this purpose.

Mr. SNELL. Does that provide that we should pay all municipal deficits?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; except the general authority for that I have just referred to which I hold in my hand.

Mr. SNELL. I wish the gentleman would read that law. I would like to know what it is. If we have to do that down there, why can we not pay our local municipal deficits out of the Federal Treasury also?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I read from section 1391:

Under jurisdiction of the Governor; except as provided in this chapter, all military, civil, and judicial powers of the United States to govern the West India Islands acquired from Denmark, shall be vested in the Governor and in such person or persons as the President may appoint, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President shall direct. The Congress shall provide for the government of said islands; provided that the President may assign an officer of the Army or the Navy to serve as such Governor—

And so forth. This is the section that the Budget referred the committee to, and it will be noted that the authority is general but broad in its scope.

Mr. SNELL. I do not see anything in there that says that the Federal Government is responsible for all municipal deficits.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Nor do I see the specific authority, but I will say to the gentleman that this item has been carried in the bill year after year and no one has ever raised the question as to the authority heretofore. Undoubtedly it was the intent of Congress to confer that authority.

Mr. SNELL. It does not confer that meaning to me, and I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that when the Budget cited this section as authority I, as one member of the committee, assumed, without going into the matter very carefully, that the section in question was sufficiently broad to grant ample authority.

Mr. SNELL. That is broad authority to take charge of the governmental affairs, but it does not say a word there to the effect that the Federal Government shall pay deficits of each one of the municipalities in the Virgin Islands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It does provide for general operation and maintenance, and the committee felt it was broad enough to grant the authority provided in the bill.

Mr. SNELL. There is nothing in what the gentleman read that conveys that opinion to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well, frankly, after reading the section carefully, I am not in a position to insist there is such specific authority granted. I suggest that the Chair rule upon it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no provision of law that the Federal Government shall pay deficits of each one of the municipalities of the Virgin Islands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] makes a point of order against the paragraph appearing in lines 9 to 14, inclusive, on page 126 of the bill on the ground that the appropriation there sought to be made is not authorized by existing law.

The Chair has examined section 1391 of title 48 of the United States Code, to which reference was made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON]. It appears to the Chair that this provision of law authorizes the establishment of a government for the West Indies Islands, acquired from Denmark, and vests certain discretionary authority in the President until the Congress shall provide for the government of said islands. The Chair is unable to find any definite, specific provision of law included in this section which, in the opinion of the Chair, would authorize the appropriation here sought to be made.

The Chair has likewise examined the act of Congress approved June 22, 1936, to provide a civil government for the Virgin Islands of the United States, and in neither the provision of law cited by the gentleman from Oklahoma nor the act to which the Chair has referred does the Chair find sufficient authority of law to authorize appropriations for municipal deficits in the municipalities set out in this provision of the bill.

The Chair is of the opinion that the appropriation is not authorized by existing law, as it is here sought to be made, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

FREEDMEN'S HOSPITAL

For officers and employees and compensation for all other professional and other services that may be required and expressly approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $218,100; for subsistence, fuel and light, clothing, to include white duck suits and white canvas shoes for the use of internes, and rubber surgical gloves, bedding, forage, medicine, medical and surgical supplies, surgical instruments, electric lights, repairs, replacement of X-ray apparatus, furniture, purchase of ambulance at not to exceed $2,500, and maintenance and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, including not exceeding $300 for the purchase of books, periodicals, and newspapers; and not to exceed $1,500 for the special instruction of pupil nurses, and other absolutely necessary expenses, $111,310; in all, for Freedmen's Hospital, $329,410, including reimbursement to the appropriation for Howard University of actual cost of heat and light furnished, of which amount of $329,410 one-half shall be chargeable to the District of Columbia and paid in like manner as other appropriations of the District of Columbia are paid.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 132, line 13, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The amounts of all appropriations set forth previously in this bill are hereby reduced 10 percent."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this bill as it now stands, including reappropriations, as far as I can figure it, is about $36,000,000 above the Budget estimates of $121,000,000.

We have adopted amendments to the bill which have increased it and the committee itself brought out reappropriations involving $33,000,000. I do not see how we can go back and face our constituents with such a bill, and I have therefore offered this amendment in the hope we may be able to reduce it a reasonable amount. I hope we will be able to cut this down. This motion means a saving of $16,027,126.48—10 percent of the total. We will still be something like eighteen or nineteen million dollars above the Budget. If we go on that way with that sort of thing there will never be anything left.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Is the gentleman's amendment a horizontal 10-percent cut in the bill?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. All items in the bill?

Mr. TABER. Every item in it. They can stand it, because there is hardly an item in the bill that has not been increased over last year's bill at least 10 percent. Once in a while there is one. It is the only appropriation bill where there are so many increases above last year's bill. The bill as it was brought in here, except for the reappropriations, was below the Budget, but when you consider the reappropriations, the bill is $29,000,000 above the Budget.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. How much would that 10-percent cut amount to in dollars and cents?

Mr. TABER. Sixteen million twenty-seven thousand one hundred and twenty-six dollars and forty-eight cents. It is not enough, I agree with that, because it does not bring it down to the Budget.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The independent offices appropriation bill was increased $61,225,000. The Treasury and Post Office, $263,500,000; Agriculture, $147,500,000.

Mr. TABER. There is a great tendency to increase appropriations both on the floor and off the floor. If we never stop, the Treasury is never going to be right side up.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. What effect would this amendment have on salaries, for instance, in the various departments? There are men classified in various work in the different departments. Would it affect the salaries?

Mr. TABER. They would have to get along without putting on additional help, because almost every single one of these appropriations for salaries is increased at least 10 percent. All they would have to do is to get along as they have been going in the past. There is an occasional case where they might have to let one go here and put him on some other place.

Mr. LANHAM. But it would not reduce the salary of any particular man in the service.

Mr. TABER. Oh, no.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. With respect to imposing more work on employees, that would not be any different from what industrial workers have to do in a rising tide of industrial prosperity; they would have to do more work themselves.

Mr. TABER. But this would not require them to do more work; it would require them in the Department to get along without embarking on so many new and radical activities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment of the distinguished gentleman from New York should be adopted, this would be the first regular appropriation bill, or any kind of appropriation bill, passed during the present session carrying such an amendment. It would be manifestly unfair to apply this 10-percent cut to all the items in this bill. It would be unfair to this Department of the Government and the 20 new governmental activities that have been placed under the Interior Department to apply a 10-percent cut to this Department alone. If such a cut is to be made, it certainly ought to be applied to all the departments. We realize that something along this line is in the making, either a horizontal cut or 10 or 15 percent will be impounded by the President under direction of the Congress, he will be given authority to cut some items more than 10 percent and possibly increase some of the items not only in this but all other appropriation measures.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In a moment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not hesitate to tell this Committee that I am disappointed that this bill is some $3,000,000 above the Budget estimate. As this bill was brought from our committee it was $4,700,000 below the Budget estimate and more than $5,000,000 below the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. When I finish my statement I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Chairman, to make a drastic cut on this Department alone, without having it apply to all the departments, as I said, would be manifestly unfair. I think there are some items in this bill that ought to be cut more than 10 percent. I am hopeful that when the bill goes to the other end of the Capitol and is finally worked out it will be below the Budget estimate. Personally, I shall continue to work to that end. The fact is that if this bill remains considerably above the Budget estimate, in my humble judgment it is in serious danger of receiving a veto from the White House. May I remind Members that upon yesterday I took the liberty of pointing out the danger of a veto, and some ridiculed the suggestion as being absurd and ridiculous.

But I would never agree to a 10-percent cut on all of the items. It would be unfair and most unreasonable.

A few days ago, another committee brought in an Army appropriation bill, not $5,000,000 below the appropriations for the current year, as this bill was reported, but over $25,000,000 above the appropriations for the current year; and, as I recall, the gentleman did not offer his 10-percent cut to that bill. A few days before that we passed the Navy appropriation bill, one of the largest in the peacetime history of the Navy, and as I recall, the gentleman did not offer his 10-percent cut to the Navy bill. That bill carried appropriations for two $60,000,000 battleships. It seems to depend altogether on whose ox is being gored as to whether there ought to be a 10-percent cut according to the gentleman from New York. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman states that this bill is now $3,000,000 above the Budget estimate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; there has been added to this bill more than $8,000,000 above the bill as recommended by the committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Right in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. We are going to have a vote in the House on the Doughton amendment. If the gentleman wants to accomplish his purpose he should assist in removing that $2,000,000 fcr the 800-foot parkway which is not necessary and which was put on in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I insisted on that yesterday and the Committee showed its attitude. I am perfectly willing to make such a motion if I can receive any reasonable assurance of support from the other side of the aisle.

Mr. MICHENER. The same thing applies to the increase for vocational training.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to submit a unanimous consent request?

Mr. RICH. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close within 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe any Member of the House is more interested in keeping down Government expenses than I, nor do I believe that any Member has supported my colleague, the gentleman from New York, to the extent I have for economy.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is a bill before the Congress whereby all these appropriation bills are to be cut 10 percent. I wonder whether the chairman of this subcommittee is willing to support that bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman want a reply now?

Mr. RICH. Yes. I would like your views.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I will support that bill to cut all appropriations 10 percent. I am not, however, trying to pledge the committee.

Mr. RICH. Then I will say to the Members of the House that the part of wisdom is to treat the Interior Department on the same basis as the other departments.

I think we ought to be fair in our discussion. If the gentleman from New York will present a bill to the House of Representatives which provides for a cut in all these appropriation bills I believe he will receive support from most everybody. But I cannot in justice to the Interior Department vote for a general cut on this particular bill at this time. However, I pledge my support to the House of Representatives and will vote for a 10-percent cut in all the expenses of the Government and will do everything I can to that end.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman is in favor of a 10-percent cut, why is he not willing to start now?

Mr. RICH. This is the last appropriation bill to come up for consideration.

Mr. SNELL. If we are for it, we are for it now.

Mr. RICH. Can the gentleman get the rest to vote for a 10-percent cut?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; and I am for it now.

Mr. RICH. I am for it now on all appropriation bills.

Mr. SNELL. Then vote for the cut now.

Mr. RICH. I am for it, but I want to treat everybody alike. Every department of government. I do not want to make fish of one and fowl of the other.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In connection with this cut of all expenses, would the gentleman include the salaries of Members of the House?

Mr. RICH. I would include everybody. I would not exempt anyone. Right is right and wrong is wrong.

Mr. RANKIN. Now, the gentleman has lost his party.

Mr. RICH. When you are right you lose no one that counts.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has weakened immeasurably in the position he has taken here for economy. He has demonstrated a fact which exists in connection with practically every item in this bill. For instance, the reclamation people are for economy so long as it does not affect reclamation. The vocational-education people are for economy just so long as it does not interfere with them. Our good friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, is for economy so long as it does not affect the 800-foot parkway he desires to construct down in his district, at a cost of millions of dollars. So it is with every pressure group and bloc.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further. I want to be fair. I want to cut everybody.

Mr. MICHENER. But the gentleman is not doing that.

Mr. RICH. Then I do not know right from wrong if you treat everybody alike. The chairman of the subcommittee said he would get up here and ask the Democratic Members of the House to support a 10-percent cut. I believe the Democratic Members of the House should support a 10-percent cut in all of these bills; and if they will, I want to be fair, I will oppose this one; but if they will not do that, I want to start in right now, because I want to see economy in Government brought about.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Suppose we did cut off 10 percent and impound it, does the gentleman think that money would be spent, nevertheless?

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentlemen are not talking on the amendment pending before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. RICH. I am talking about the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] is one of the best fighters we have in the House, but I do not concur in his statement, because I am addressing myself to this amendment and I want to stay on it. I want to cut down the expenses of Government. I want to cut down on everything, but I do not want to do it on the Interior Department appropriation bill and let the other departments get away without a cut. Believe me, I know what I am doing, and no one in this House has a better record on that score than I have, and the voting record tells the story. Look at my record and then look at your own, and judge for yourself.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I began offering these amendments to cut the appropriations 10 percent on every single bill just as soon as the President announced a program of economy, and I have gone down the line and offered the amendments on every bill.

It is possible for this House by a special rule to take care of all these appropriation bills afterward. But let us start right now and begin to cut. So far the House has refused to follow a program of cutting down and being square with the program of economy. They have not been willing to cut these appropriation bills. There is not an activity in this whole outfit, in my opinion, that could not stand a 10 percent cut, and we ought to begin to reduce these appropriations now.

The only way to start is to begin now. You cannot dodge the responsibility for failing to economize by refusing to vote for this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will stop pusyfooting and begin doing business.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman offers an amendment to reduce all the bills 10 percent, will he exempt this bill from a further 10-percent reduction?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Then I will vote for this 10-percent reduction.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—yeas 81, noes 123.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the O'Connor of Montana amendment for $200,000, on page 39, line 18; a separate vote on the Scrugham amendment, on pages 78 and 79, appropriating $8,250,000; and a separate vote upon the Doughton amendment, on page 111, increasing the appropriation by $2,000,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the so-called O'Connor of Montana amendment on page 39, line 18.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 18, after the word "reimbursable", insert "Crow, $200,000, reimbursable."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 58, noes 127.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seventy-three Members are present; a quorum.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, after line 20, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For administrative expenses on account of the above projects, including personal services and other expenses in the District of Columbia and in the field, $750,000, in addition to and for the same objects of expenditure as are hereinbefore enumerated in paragraphs 2 and 3 under the caption 'Bureau of Reclamation'; in all, $8,250,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $75,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the unexpended balances of the amounts appropriated from the reclamation fund, special fund, under the caption 'Bureau of Reclamation, Construction', in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, shall remain available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1938 for projects authorized under the reclamation law."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. This is the item which was carried in the original bill, was stricken out on the point of order that it was legislation on an appropriation bill, and was restored by amendment?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no knowledge of what transpired in the Committee of the Whole. The Chair sustains the point of order that the gentleman's question is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. A vote of "aye" is a vote for the amendment? I think there is some confusion about it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not stated the question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITE of Idaho) there were—ayes 63, noes 110.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 111, line 14, strike out "$3,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DOUGHTON) there were—ayes 108, noes 113.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 221, nays 160, answered "present" 1, not voting 49, as follows:

EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, with Mr. O'CONNOR of New York in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is recognized for 2 hours, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for 2 hours.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 hour of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], to be yielded as he may wish to yield. I yield myself 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, in 10 minutes I shall try to say just a word or two explanatory of the joint resolution and discuss very briefly the parliamentary situation. The resolution is very largely patterned after existing law. In substance it gives the President a fund, whatever it may be ultimately, with practically unlimited authority. He may use it for work relief, he may use it for relief. On page 2, following after the formal recital in the bill of last year, we designate certain amounts for certain projects. That is not, literally speaking, earmarking those funds, but it designates that not more than a certain amount shall be used for certain purposes. The resolution then in addition to the provisions carried under existing law provides on page 3 that the program shall be so laid out that the funds shall run through the fiscal year, the purpose of that being to prevent requests for deficiencies.

There are a number of other small changes in the procedure and in the language. Two amendments were added in the full committee having to do with the regulation of the handling of the W. P. A. funds. In addition to that I might say that section 14 contains a provision designed to prevent the use of funds for the erection of prisons and the making of goods in prisons which would come into competition with goods manufactured by independent industries.

Of course, in this bill, as we understand, the question that we will be called upon to consider and decide is the question of the amount to be allocated for relief. The resolution as reported by the full committee raises the Budget estimate $223,000,000. I say that deliberately, and I pause when I say it, because I call attention to the message of the President in which he asked for a billion and a half for relief. This resolution as reported by the full committee in their enthusiasm appropriates a billion and a half and reappropriates unexpended balances amounting to $223,000,000. You will find fully set out in the hearings and in the report the manner in which these unexpended balances occur and where they are. During the course of the discussion and the handling of the resolution our distinguished and beloved acting chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], will maintain the position of the full committee for a billion and a half. I shall endeavor to demonstrate to the House the fact that a billion dollars will be a liberal allowance for real relief. [Applause.] Not a liberal allowance if you are going to keep hanging on at the public trough all of the relief racketeers, all of the political appointees regardless of their merit; not a liberal allowance if you want to continue as a matter of Federal policy all the idealistic and socialistic experiments [applause]; not a liberal allowance if you want to continue publishing and have laid on your desks books and stacks of books printed by all of these relief agencies; but if you want money to help the destitute and needy American citizens, if it is administered in that way, a billion dollars is a large amount, and an adequate amount for that purpose. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, permit me to say that there is no question here involved in this matter of loyalty to the administration. I say to my brethren on the Democratic side that I do not think I need tell you how I feel toward the President and the administration. I do not think I need tell you that the President knows where to find me if he wants me. He has never had any trouble in the past locating me. Up to this good hour, in spite of all the publicity, in spite of the fact that propaganda emanating from the Works Progress Administration and the Workers' Alliance says that the heat had been turned on, yet not one word has come to the acting chairman of the subcommittee other than the message of the President of the United States delivered in this House.

I think I might assume, if the President had anything to say about this matter other than what he said in his message, that he would say it to the acting chairman of the subcommittee that is handling the resolution. I think I might be permitted to assume that.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman is aware, I suppose, that the President has expressed his approval to the leader of the House and our distinguished Speaker, the official representatives of the House.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I am not aware of that.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Then the gentleman has not read the newspapers.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, I have read the newspapers with great interest. After the conference at the White House the newspaper headlines said that the President would insist on a billion and a half, but not a living word came from our distinguished Speaker or our leader to the press as to what the President had said. Of course, these gentlemen can speak for themselves.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am certain either of them would have been glad to confer with members of the committee at any time. The gentleman knows they were called into conference at the White House and have information on that subject.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not know it. I know that the President said he wanted a billion and a half, and I am sure he stands on that now.

It has been demonstrated in this House so many times, even this very day, that when Members of this House have a contrary idea as to how much ought to be appropriated, they do not hesitate to express that idea, and express it without a roll call, express it in the face of definite instructions that their action will be vetoed by the President when it comes to him. Gentlemen, do we not have any rights at all in this House? I do not think the President of the United States is going to be mad with me because I undertake to exercise my legislative prerogatives here as to the amount that ought to be appropriated for relief. [Applause.] I do not believe he will. I do not believe anybody will come here and say to me that he will, because I do not believe he would undertake to usurp the prerogatives of this Congress in that manner. The President wants to take care of the needy in this country. That is what this committee wants to do, every member of it. That is what this House wants to do. That is what we will do, but, gentlemen, we have an opportunity now to take racketeering out of relief if we want to do it. We have the opportunity, I say to you Democrats, to fulfill the campaign promise which we gave the people of this country, to try to reduce Government expenditures, and to try to cut down these emergency expenditures as fast as the country recovered. God knows the country is recovering. It is recovering under the splendid leadership of the President. Every business index shows the country is recovering. The time has come when we can show by our action in this House whether or not we mean it when we say we do want to cut down expenditures and reduce the Government Budget in order that funds, when we have funds, may be spent on the splendid public improvements that are needed in this country, rather than to throw them down ratholes on all sorts of wild ideas such as we have had to do in this great emergency. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the resolution under discussion sets forth as its principal consideration the means "to provide relief, and work relief on useful public projects in the United States and its Territories", and it is especially useful public projects I propose to discuss.

The resolution appropriates $1,270,000,000 and such of the unexpended balances of previous appropriations for relief as the President may determine, to be expended under his direction with but minor limitations and restrictions.

A study of the hearings on this joint resolution might profit the Members of this body in determining their vote when that time arrives. Arguments stressing the need for a billion and a half were presented to the committee by the usual staff of department heads and officials.

Secretary Wallace has stated that $75,000,000 would be needed for loan purposes of the Resettlement Administration, and Mr. Baldwin stated that $25,000,000 additional would be needed for administrative expense and for "winding up" work under way with funds provided by previous appropriation acts.

Mr. Chairman, if we could only wipe out and wind up the record of this Resettlement Administration everyone would be happy, but facts always have the unhappy faculty of staring us in the face when we come to a final reckoning.

Let us take a look into the Resettlement Administration. They were the sponsors, as you know, of the Matanuska Valley project in Alaska. You all know what an expensive experiment that has been. The Resettlement also went in for housing projects at Greenbelt, just outside the District; at Greendale, near Milwaukee; and at Greenhills, near Cincinnati, Ohio. These projects with the one abandoned at Greenbrook, N. J., have all demonstrated that we were very green when we appropriated funds for this visionary scheme.

Mr. Chairman, these four projects represent a total investment of $33,724,455, spent in an attempt to house 3,500 families at an average cost of approximately $10,000 per family, which is not quite as bad as the per-capita cost of the Matanuska project in Alaska, where the average cost per family is in excess of $13,000, but I will submit that it is bad enough.

Suburban Resettlement projects

Project	Area	Land cost	Acre cost	Families housed	Total	Average cost per family
Greenbelt, Md.	12,393	$1,170,271	$94	1,000	$9,740,576	$9,740
Greenbrook, N. J.	(1)		220	750	6,750,000
Greenhills, Ohio	5,926	1,778,621	300	1,000	9,206,273	9,206
Greendale, Wis.	2,511	1,259,019	350	750	8,027,606	9,673
Total					33,724,455

[1] Abandoned.

This is a summary of what has or will be spent in an attempt to house 3,500 of our families.

The cost per family housed of approximately $10,000 defeats the very purpose of the projects, for it is obvious that families in the low-income class, between $1,200 and $2,000 per annum, can ill afford to occupy the suburban dwellings and pay transportation charges to their places of employment.

Another equally discouraging picture is the relation of resettlement loans to farm population. I find that loans and grants to farmers from July 1, 1935, to April 23, 1937, totaled $169,481,273.02. Of this sum, $127,390,950.51 were approved loans and $42,090,322.51 were disbursed as grants. A breakdown by States on a per-capita farm population basis indicates the benefits have been rather inequitably distributed.

For instance, Kansas, with a farm population of 707,196, according to the late census, received a total of $8,519,694.36 in loans and grants. The loans amounted to $12.04 per capita and the grants to $4.59 per capita.

By contrast, Pennsylvania, scourged by floods and torrential rains, with a farm population of 856,694, received but $842,879 in loans and grants. This averaged 98 cents in loans per capita and 5.17 cents per capita in grants, not enough during the 22 months to buy a loaf of bread.

Shall we infer from the above comparison that the administration was particularly desirous of carrying Kansas in the late election, and that the State of Pennsylvania, notwithstanding a most distressful condition, was considered as being in the bag, hence the small per-capita loans and grants made to the farmers of that State?

According to a table inserted by Mr. Alexander, page 35 of the hearings, the funds received for Resettlement activities so far amount to $436,931,927.34. Of this sum, $318,537,523.73 has been spent and there are net encumbrances of $363,735,866.01, leaving but $73,196,111.33 on hand for pending projects. This, together with the $100,000,000 now requested, makes $173,196,111.33 that the Resettlement Administration will have under their direction for 1938 if the resolution passes without amendments. Administration expenses heretofore have amounted to $50,404,937.80.

Now, I submit to the Members of Congress that too much of this resettlement money is going for administrative expenses. The relative amounts spent for administration are entirely out of line with general practice, either public or private, and are only helping to build up a Federal bureaucracy which we will have a hard time getting off our hands. Like most of the New Deal legislation, this joint resolution has been submitted hurriedly and with but little opportunity for the Members of the House to do anything but vote. One day of consideration is surely too short a time in which all of the inconsistencies in this measure can be dealt with.

Mr. Chairman, during the early days of this session Members received a beautifully printed and bound copy of the first annual report of the Resettlement Administration. This was just before Mr. Tugwell left the Government service to enter private employment. In looking over the tables in this report I find that in region IV, comprising parts of Kentucky, North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia, a great number of people were employed in the land-development program even before the Government had acquired title to the lands involved. I find that in the Shelby Forest, Tenn., up to June 30, 1936, $142,878 was paid in salaries and wages, although the Government up to that time had not completed title to a single acre of the 9,688 option, to be purchased, for $141,874.

Mr. Chairman, what necessity can possibly require our Government to continue appropriation for projects where the spending is so haphazard and so careless? I mention this in passing, because at some later date I propose to bring to the attention of the House the enormous sums which have been squandered for attorneys' fees, legal expenses, and other incidentals in the acquiring of lands under the Resettlement Administration and under the Tennessee Valley Authority, expenses which, in some cases, have been greater than the value of the lands so acquired.

The funds requested for public buildings, parks, and other recreational facilities, flood control, and miscellaneous work projects will, when appropriated, total $420,000,000.

Mr. Hopkins and his W. P. A. have been engaged in some exciting and unusual adventures during the last 3 years. These include every type of project known to the human mind to keep a person busy without materially bettering his position in life, either physically or mentally. As an example of these projects, you will recall the boondoggles of the past. These have nothing on the 5,133 hardy souls on relief in New York and the 3,046 in Illinois, who make up a part of the 25,000 men in the mosquito brigade who rendered distinguished service in the month of December fighting mosquitoes in the snow and ice of the frozen North. The records are replete with similar enterprises.

There were actors' projects in New York City, and it was started off by buying enough grease paint to daub up all the actors since the time of Adam. Then, I hear about a golf course and swimming pool being built in the little city of St. Charles, Ill. St. Charles is a city of 5,377 persons, situated on the Fox River, about 35 miles west of Chicago. The swimming pool and golf course being built there with W. P. A. aid is to cost $376,000.

If we were to extend this same proportionate spending to equal segments of our population, we would be committing ourselves to a program of spending for golf courses and swimming pools which, if carried out, may involve expenditures for these recreational facilities as great as $7,000,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I can see much merit in the proposal to appropriate $276,700,000 for highway construction, but a substantial part of that vast sum should be definitely earmarked for farm-to-market roads as heretofore, while the farmer has been taxed his full share of the cost of road building, he has received in return comparatively little. In the construction of these farm-to-market roads preference should be given to those who owe for seed and feed loans that they may be given an opportunity to pay their obligations.

But for many of these other work projects there is also a halo of mystery around them which leads one to speculate—"What new way have they thought of to waste the taxpayers' money?"

Blind to the need for constructive and productive enterprises, a great portion of our spending for so-called work relief has been directed into channels which, while intended to relieve the sufferings of the people, have only aggravated them by making poverty a permanent feature in our national economy.

Music, art, the theater, and the drama can never be substituted for the production of food, clothing, and shelter.

It has been said that a hungry man will not look too closely for flies in his pudding, but, as this spending goes on, let us ask, Where are we going to get the money to pay for these projects which are of no permanent economic value?

Mr. Hopkins has been subjected to a great deal of unjust criticism for some of the things which have happened in the past, criticism which should have been directed higher up. We all recall how promptly Mr. Hopkins acted to stop the building of those industrial sweatshops, to be known as vocational training schools, in Mississippi. We know how his heart is burdened with the troubles of the poor. And right here I want to absolve Mr. Hopkins from any responsibility for the $6,750,000 allotted to the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial in St. Louis, $6,000,000 of which will go for the relief of real-estate promoters and option holders and only $150,000 will go to employ 300,000 man-hours of common labor at 50 cents an hour. Here is a project being carried forward as a work-relief project. Six million dollars to buy property and $150,000 for labor. Where is there any work relief in that? This money, $6,750,000, together with $2,500,000 of the taxpayers' money of the city of St. Louis, voted at an election in which fraud has been established, is now in the hands of the National Park Service. The project is neither useful nor necessary and will not comply with the objectives of this resolution.

This project should be specifically killed by Congress, for we have never sanctioned it, or any project of its kind.

Mr. Chairman, there is much more that can be said in favor of moderation in our public spending. We are told that the depression is over, and that our duty now is to help balance the Budget. We can never balance the Budget by acceding to each new request of the Executive for more money. If we take a hurried look at the record of our past spending, it will quickly be apparent that there is little of equity in it. Take the record of the now outlawed A. A. A., for instance. I have before me a record of the spending and expense from May 12, 1933, to December 31, 1935. Who can claim there is equality in these benefits to farmers?

TABLE 1.—Agricultural Adjustment Administration distribution and administrative expenses, per capita, for the 3 years from May 12, 1933, to Dec. 31, 1935, inclusive, not including administrative expenses at Washington, D. C., which were $31,835,368.13 additional

Only a few days ago the Congress was asked to appropriate more than $40,000,000 to carry forward the work of T. V. A. for 1938. This development was embarked on as a measure to aid navigation, flood control, generate power for industrial and agricultural purposes, and for the national defense.

In 1936 the Authority generated 778,378,800 kilowatt-hours of energy. At the end of last year it was serving energy to less than 6,000 farm customers, and only 26,000 retail customers were being served at T. V. A. rates. The average consumption of electrical energy being about 1,000 kilowatt-hours per year, it is readily seen that the greater portion of the energy generated must either go to waste or be dumped at secondary power rates. In brief, here is the picture: The power generated is 778,000,000 kilowatt-hours, the power reaching individual consumers is, roughly, 32,000,000 kilowatt-hours; the surplus is 746,000,000 kilowatt-hours.

Now what is happening to this surplus? From Norris Dam, on Clinch River, the T. V. A. are building a transportation line to the plant of the Aluminum Co. of America at Alcoa, Tenn. The Aluminum Co. has contracted for the secondary power from Norris Dam for a period of from 4 to 6 years at 2.51 mills per kilowatt-hour. That takes care of Norris Dam power.

It is now reported a contract has been made by T. V. A. with a large chemical company to sell the energy generated at Wheeler Dam on a basis approximately the same as that entered into by contract with the Aluminum Co. of America.

The situation regarding T. V. A. is best summed up in the opinion of Gen. Hugh Johnson, who, after a visit to Knoxville, Norris Dam, and the Smoky Mountain region, classed the development as one which will cost all of the people a great sum of money for the special benefit of some of the people.

Funds appropriated by this resolution may, under the guise of flood control, be allocated to T. V. A. for the use and in such manner as the directors see fit.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment and commend to the House the Member from the Fourth Ohio District [Mr. KLOEB] for his courageous expressions before the committee. Mr. KLOEB brought to light the waste in only one small project in Mercer County, Ohio. But waste in small things brings on waste in larger ones.

The very fact that it cost the W. P. A. $767 for a painting job that private contractors were willing to undertake for $185 is indictment enough for the present system of relief as applied to many of the communities in every State.

In closing may I remind you that the most expensive and costly of New Deal undertakings has been this Resettlement Administration. It has spent much and accomplished very little. The expenditure of more than $50,000,000 for administrative purposes to loan and spend $268,132,586 should be investigated. By comparison, the Works Progress Administration has supervised the spending of more than $2,000,000,000 up to April 8 of this year at an expense of less than 5 percent.

Now, just one word of caution before this resolution comes to vote. If this resolution is passed without striking out the wording included in the parentheses in lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 reading, "(including projects heretofore approved for the Works Progress Administration which projects shall not be subject to the limitations hereinafter specified in this section)", we will in fact be putting the seal of governmental approval on each and every one of the 226,000 different projects on which three and a half billion dollars have already been spent or wasted, and which will require more than two and a half billion dollars for their completion.

Benjamin Franklin once said: "It is hard for an empty sack to stand upright." Although we are $35,000,000,000 in debt, the almost empty sack of governmental credit still stands. A few more raids of the character of this resolution will complete the emptying process. Then what may happen is a matter I will not venture to forecast.

Mr. Chairman, I very definitely feel that the time has come when we should have a census of unemployment made, that we may know somewhat of what we are doing. Estimates of unemployment vary. Some say 3,000,000, others place the figure at 9,000,000. Until we have this information we must continue to act blindly and by guess. Heretofore, the administration has successfully blocked all moves in that direction. Why, we can only surmise. It is incumbent upon us to know in order that we may do full justice to those in need. Also, it is our duty to see that a much greater part of the relief dollar goes to the needy, rather than for cost of administration. We cannot go back home and justify our failure to act in behalf of those in distress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to insert two tables.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a letter in relation to this bill which I sent last Saturday, in answer to a communication I received.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, while I agree generally with the remarks made by our distinguished colleague from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] in relation to some of the racketeers that are now taking part in relief, yet in driving out these racketeers we cannot deprive the mothers and children of our country of an opportunity to get something to eat and to live as American citizens should live. [Applause.] The great trouble with our country today is that we fail to meet the machine age and mass production. Here in this great country of ours, with an abundance of everything, we find some eight or nine million people unemployed and in want for food. Why? Because of the selfishness and greed of certain individuals in our country who think of profits only and who will not meet the machine age and mass production by lessening the working hours each week, which is necessary if we are going to place these eight or nine million people in useful occupations. [Applause.]

In 1918 the United States Government spent $18,000,000,000 over the Budget. We had 2,000,000 boys in Europe and 2,000,000 boys here waiting to go over. The American people were asked to economize and to save, in order to take care of the boys and win the war. What was taking place with this same group that is now advocating economy in this country? I was a member of a subcommittee in the Seventy-second Congress which investigated war surplus supplies. I am sorry to say that I have to admit to the Members of this Committee that it was brought out in the hearings that this Government paid from 400 to 700 percent over the cost of production for supplies purchased by the Government. I will just mention one article, underwear, which the boys wore during the war. This article cost 75 cents to produce. How much do you suppose the Government paid? The Government paid $4 for each suit of underwear. They paid for every article at that time in comparison with the underwear. That is the reason we spent $18,000,000,000 over the Budget. Now, you can figure that at least $12,000,000,000 of that $18,000,000,000 went into the pockets of the same group who would now try to deprive the mothers and children of our country of a living.

Mr. Chairman, if we could spend $18,000,000,000 over the Budget in 1918 to ship boys to a foreign shore, for God's sake, why can we not spend $10,000,000,000 or $15,000,000,000 over a period of 4 years to take care of the unemployed in our country? [Applause.]

They talk about spending money. We have spent about $15,000,000,000 over the Budget in 4 years. About $5,000,000,000 of that $15,000,000,000 was loaned to big business and will be returned to the Government with interest. Less than $11,000,000,000 went to direct relief for the unemployed in our country, and they tell us today that we must curtail expenses. As I stated before, if we could spend $18,000,000,000 during the war why not spend something now to take care of the unemployed of our country who are that way through no fault of their own. Members of the Committee, this will be necessary until our country meets the machine age and mass production.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Members of this Committee to vote for the recommendation of the President—$1,500,000,000 to take care of the unemployed of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the letter to which I referred earlier in my remarks is as follows:

MAY 14, 1937.

Mr. CHARLES M. O'HEARN,
Chrysler Building, New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. O'HEARN: Your letter of May 12, referring to the expenditures of the Federal Government and the necessity of curtailing same, received.

I want to thank you for the information contained in your letter and assure you that I feel something should be done to remedy some of the expenditures made by the Government if we are to get back to normal conditions. At the same time, I am in a position, probably more so than you, to realize the unfortunate conditions of millions of our citizens who are unable to find employment or care for themselves.

In your letter you refer to returning some of the responsibility to the States. I agree with you on that point, but unfortunately the Governors throughout our country and the mayors of our municipalities claim they are unable to take care of their unemployed and ask for Federal relief. Many of them claim they will not be responsible for what will happen if relief is not given. It seems to me that there is something radically wrong when in a country like ours, where nature has given us almost everything that man needs and where we have the best form of government in the world, that there should be millions of people in want for the necessities of life. The only answer to this can be the selfishness and greed of our people in not enacting proper laws, not to distribute the wealth, but to distribute labor, so that we would be able to meet the machine age and mass production which is causing the millions of unemployed in our country today.

In 4 years this country has spent $15,000,000,000 over the Budget. Five billion of that is loaned money and no doubt will be returned to the Government. That leaves about $10,000,000,000 to actual relief. In the Seventy-second Congress I was chairman of a subcommittee that made an investigation of war-surplus supplies. I was surprised to find that in 1918, we spent $18,000,000,000 over the Budget. We had 2,000,000 boys fighting in France, 2,000,000 more in this country ready to be sent over, and the American people were asked to curtail on the necessities of life so as to help win the war. Now comes the shocking part of this investigation which I am almost ashamed to mention. The very group that is now opposing the Government appropriating money to take care of the starving citizens of our country charged the Government for supplies in 1918 during the war from 400 to 700 percent over the cost of production. You can figure out for yourself what profits they made out of that $18,000,000,000 spent by the Government.

I have received many letters such as yours during this session of Congress, but none of them give any plan as to what to do with the unemployed in this country. I am therefore going to ask you this question, and I would appreciate an answer: The only information Congress has, as stated above, is that the States and municipalities are unable to care for their unemployed. What would you suggest in place of Government relief?

Sincerely yours,

JAMES M. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, it has been said that one-third of the people of this country are ill-housed, ill-clothed, and ill-nourished. This statement was made a few months ago by the President of the United States. Certainly nothing has transpired since that time which would at all decrease the number of our people who are presently in this lamentable condition. These people are looking to us for assistance not because they want to look to us for assistance but because of the fact that conditions beyond their control make it impossible for them through the exercise of their own initiative to earn sufficient money with which to provide for their families and themselves. These people who are presently upon direct relief, these people who are presently doing work relief, and these millions of people who are receiving assistance from the Federal and State Governments at the present time are not desirous that their condition remain thus. They want to improve their condition but are unable to find employment in this great country of ours to permit them to buy a sufficient amount of worldly goods to keep body and soul together. I know that individually there is not a Member of this House who would willingly want to see any man or woman suffer from the lack of a sufficient amount of nourishment, proper shelter, or proper clothing; but acting as a group, acting as the House of Representatives, I fear that we are not willing to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to prevent millions of people in this country from actually suffering for the want of the ordinary necessities of life.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that many of these people today have been suffering for many years. We hear of individuals who find it necessary for a month, 2 months, 3 months, or 6 months to get along on a subsistence diet, a diet just sufficient enough to keep one alive, and we feel sorry for them. We must not forget that many millions of our people who have been unable to get work in private industry have been existing on a subsistence diet, not for 1 month, not for 6 months, not for 1 year, but for 5 years, 6 years, and 7 years. They have been extremely patient and long suffering.

I submit that the welfare of our country demands that we do something now to prevent such a large part of our citizenship from remaining in such an intolerable condition, because we cannot expect people who have been thus suffering to maintain the high ideals of citizenship that you and I want all of our people to maintain in this country. I submit, Mr. Chairman, and give this warning to the House of Representatives for whatever it may be worth, that in my humble judgment the welfare of this country can best be served, not by reducing the amount of this appropriation but by materially increasing the amount appropriated for relief in this bill. [Applause.]

People living now on a nearly starvation income received from the Government in amounts as low as $19 a month for a whole family do not receive a sufficient income to justify you and me in believing that the standard of living in this country is something of which we should be proud. I submit further that when other hundreds of thousands of families in this country are living today on an income of as low as $21 a month, you and I should be just a little hesitant before we talk too loud about this great American standard of living. When the average for city and country folk alike in the North, in the South, in the East, and in the West, the average for all W. P. A. workers under the present program is only about $52 a month, in my judgment we cannot be too proud of our so-called American standard of living.

Let me remind you, my friends, that since W. P. A. was first inaugurated there has been no increase in the wages paid to these people, although during the same period of time there has been a tremendous increase in the cost of living; so that if we are to continue this program, if we are to force millions of American citizens to accept this type of relief through a W. P. A. program, we should at least give them a sufficient income to maintain a standard of living at least as good as the standard of living we provided for them when we first inaugurated the W. P. A. policy. If we are to do that we must, of necessity, increase the wages paid to W. P. A. workers in an amount at least equal to 20 percent. If we are to increase these wages in order to keep these people at least on a scale equal to that which prevailed when they were first forced on W. P. A., and if we are to give employment to all of those who are in need of employment, who have no other means of support, we must not only increase the amount of the wages for those now on W. P. A., but we must increase the number of people who should be placed on W. P. A. We should not compromise the issue but we should enlarge our program so that we give proper aid to American citizens who, in our complex society and economy, are unable to find employment in private industry. If we are to recognize this responsibility and give a sufficient income to those people who are in need of W. P. A. work to maintain themselves and dependents with the slightest degree of decency we shall require an appropriation of at least $3,000,000,000 rather than $1,000,000,000 or $1,500,000,000.

Some of you may say that $3,000,000,000 is extravagant. I know many of you present today have been caught by this so-called economy craze. Many of you present today are sold on the idea that we must balance the Budget. But I want to appeal to you that the best interests of this country require that we do something else before we balance the Budget. It is more important for you, for me, and for all of the people of this country that we preserve democracy in this country.

Mr. Chairman, my own judgment, from my own understanding of the problem, prompts me to say that if we are to preserve America and American traditions and preserve democracy in this country we must make it possible for the lowliest citizen who is ready, able, and willing to work to eke out an existence. I ask for nothing more for them. I do not ask that they be permitted to live in luxury. I do not ask that they be given something that they are unwilling to work for. But I do say that every man and woman who is in need of employment, who needs a job, and who is ready and willing to work, should be given employment either in private industry or in a public-works program.

Thus far private industry has not assumed that responsibility to those people who have been on relief. Private industry has not given them employment. These men and women go to the factories morning after morning in search of employment, but there are no jobs available for them. Oh, yes; the distinguished gentleman from Virginia said a few moments ago that there has been a great increase in business activity. He indicated that the depression is over.

Although the depression may be over for you and yours, for your friends and many of your acquaintances, the depression today is more acute for those people who are unemployed than it has been at any time since the fall of 1929. [Applause.] To those people who are now required to pay more for the things they buy, whose income is still dependent upon the W. P. A. or private charity, the depression is not over—it is at its height.

There has been an increase in business activity. The Secretary of Labor recently issued a statement in which she said in 1936 there was an increase in business activity over 1935 of 25 percent, but she also said in the same statement that in the year 1936 there was an increase in employment over the previous year of 1935 of only 7.9 percent. Oh, yes; the depression is over so far as business is concerned. Oh, yes; the factories are operating. They are making profits, they are giving employment to more men than they did formerly; but the fact remains that there are somewhere between eight and eleven million of employables in this country who want to work but are unable to find employment. For most of them the depression is not over. Until we make it possible for the lowliest of our citizens to find employment and provide for themselves, you and I have the obligation as Members of Congress, at the seat of Government here—we who represent this organized society that we call the United States Government—of seeing to it that those people have the opportunity to live and live decently. [Applause.]

Some people say of these W. P. A. workers and other people on relief that they are unwilling to work. I grant there are some who are unwilling to work. Every time anyone discovers a person of that kind he immediately advertises the fact, so that everyone hears about it. The trouble is we hear about the same fellow so often we think many more of the people are that way.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. May I make this observation: Of the 2,000,000 on W. P. A. work, 600,000 are now over 45 years of age and cannot get employment in the factories of this country.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman for that contribution.

May I say that if we in Congress fail to exercise our responsibility by refusing to cut the hours of labor and give the unemployed a chance to work, we should be the last ones in the world to criticize those poor fellows who are unable to find employment and who are not working. Assuming that out of the eight or eleven million unemployed there are even a million who do not want to work, Mr. Chairman, let us not punish those who are willing to work because of the fault of the few who are lazy and shiftless. Let us not be unfair about this proposition.

Mr. Chairman, on tomorrow I shall offer an amendment to increase this appropriation to $3,000,000,000, and I hope I will have the support of the membership of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KLOEB].

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that much that has been said here today has been said from the standpoint of the city dweller and from the standpoint of the city worker. I represent one of the finest agricultural districts in the entire United States. Sixteen years ago I served as prosecutor of my county, and in that capacity came in contact with many of the township trustees who had charge of relief in those days and who are serving today in the same capacity.

Last fall I heard rumblings of complaint from farmers and other employers concerning the administration of relief and the excessive cost of relief. I set out to investigate the matter. I invited to my office township trustees in whom I had confidence, county commissioners, county relief directors, W. P. A. directors, and the district W. P. A. director. I listened to their story and requested and received from some of them written reports after they had gone back to their homes.

This is the conclusion that I came to, a conclusion that may be put into effect in the rural counties of the State of Ohio, and it is certainly applicable to rural counties throughout the entire United States. The W. P. A. may suspend entirely from May 1 to December 1 in approximately two-thirds of the counties of the United States without injury to anyone. Certainly the W. P. A. workers will not be harmed. The taxpayers will be benefited, as also will be the farmers.

There are 88 counties in the State of Ohio. On April 28—and this is a correct survey furnished by the State director of W. P. A.—3 counties in Ohio had less than 100 clients on the W. P. A., 12 counties had less than 200, 14 counties had less than 300, 12 counties had less than 400.

In the State of Ohio on April 28, in 41 counties, there were less than 400 employees, and in some counties as low as 50 to 75 to a county on the W. P. A. rolls. I venture to say that today, 1 month later, you will find that in at least two-thirds of the counties of Ohio, a great industrial State, the employment on the rolls of the W. P. A. has sunk so low as to make the overhead far overbalance the good that may be accomplished through continuance of the W. P. A. [Applause.] Common sense would require the retirement of W. P. A. from such counties.

Two weeks ago I expressed these views before the subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee. I then wrote the Honorable Harry Hopkins, Federal Administrator of Relief, as per the following letter. In his reply to me, as disclosed hereinafter, he concedes the advisability of my plan. So also does Carl Watson, Ohio director of W. P. A., whose letter is attached hereto. Dr. Watson is a high-class gentleman, and his judgment is valuable. When he says that he intends to retire W. P. A. from numerous Ohio counties because of the low relief load, we may take it for granted that he will do just that. Farmers, who are begging for help, taxpayers who need relief from heavy burdens, and the relief clients themselves will thereby be benefited. Why delay this procedure? Good administration would require that this policy be adopted immediately. There is no necessity to wait another 2 or 4 weeks. If we were furnished with an estimate of the savings that might be effected by such a course, I am certain that it would be very helpful to us here today.

Here is what I wrote to Mr. Hopkins, his reply to me, and Dr. Watson's reply to me:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1937.

Hon. HARRY L. HOPKINS,
Director, Works Progress Administration,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HOPKINS: I represent in Congress six counties in northwestern Ohio. They comprise one of the finest agricultural districts in the entire United States. It is a corn, hog, wheat, and tobacco country. Five of these counties are rural counties, and one of them, Allen County, is an industrial center comprising the city of Lima, with a population of approximately 50,000 people. Last November and December I invited to my office certain township trustees who have served for many years. These men know the relief problems of the rural counties. I also invited to my office the county relief director, who operates under the State, the county W. P. A. director and the district W. P. A. director from Lima, and the county reemployment director. I asked some of these gentlemen to set down in writing the substance of their statements to me, and this they did. As a result of these interviews and these reports, I am convinced that W. P. A. can be completely suspended in rural counties until the 1st of December of this year at a great saving to the taxpayers, a distinct advantage to the farmers, and at the cost of no injury whatever to the limited number of people who remain on the W. P. A. rolls from May 1 to December 1. I am convinced that there is no necessity and no excuse for maintaining a W. P. A. organization in a rural county during these months, because the overhead is far out of proportion to the benefits obtained. In many counties the W. P. A. organization consists of numerous generals, without an army. The mere fact that we have maintained organizations in all of the 3,000 counties in the United States in the past is no reason why we should continue to maintain these organizations in the future. In at least two-thirds of these counties a suspension of activities for the 7-month period indicated would be injurious to no one.

In the State of Ohio we have 88 counties. Assuming that a county in which a city of 25,000 or more people is located would be classified as an industrial center, we would have no more than 18 or 20 counties in that State in which W. P. A. would be maintained on a 12-month basis. Assuming that a population of 15,000 is sufficient to class a city as an industrial center, then we would possibly have between 25 or 30 so-called industrial counties in Ohio. I feel that I am therefore conservative when I say that two-thirds of the counties of Ohio may be classed as rural counties.

Prior to the time when the Federal Government took over the relief situation the township trustees in Ohio included in their budget in August of each year a levy for the collection of a poor-relief fund, which was collected by the treasurer in January and July following. Since the Federal Government has assumed the financial burden and the administration of relief the township trustees have ceased to function as a relief authority. Up to the time that the Federal Government assumed command most of the towns and cities had so-called social-service leagues that operated through a community chest fund for the care of the unfortunates of their various communities. In recent years they ceased to function. In other words, local authorities heretofore charged with the care of unfortunates and of unemployed have cast all responsibility from their shoulders.

It is my opinion that only through returning relief problems to local authorities in rural counties can we diminish the problem of the care of the unemployed through the more effective method of local authority and responsibility.

On Thursday of last week, May 6, I presented these views to the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee that has the proposed relief appropriation bill under consideration. I could not estimate to them what savings could be effected through the suspension of W. P. A. activities in the rural counties for 7 months out of 12 because I had no access to the figures of expenditures in the past. You have access to these figures.

I am therefore writing you for your opinion as to whether or not it is feasible and proper for the plan above outlined to be put into effect. If it is feasible, then why is it not put into effect? If it is put into effect, what savings could be accomplished thereby?

Trusting that I may have an immediate reply, I remain,

Very truly yours.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1937.

Hon. FRANK L. KLOEB,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN KLOEB: I appreciate your writing me in such detail regarding the relief situation in the six counties in northwestern Ohio which you represent. I am asking Mr. Howard Hunter, our field representative for the middle western area, to give careful consideration to your recommendations and to get in touch with you regarding them.

In general, it is our intention to adjust quotas for Works Progress Administration employment in the various localities in accordance with changes in private employment. This would naturally involve a reduction in rural areas during the summer months. While it is, of course, impossible for us at this time to make any commitments beyond June 30, it is expected that if this program continues, the same practice will be followed this summer. Mr. Hunter is expected in Washington this week and I will be glad to ask him to discuss the situation in your district with you.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY L. HOPKINS, Administrator.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION IN OHIO,
Columbus, Ohio, May 17, 1937.

Hon. FRANK KLOEB,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Let me say first that Ohio, I think, is in a peculiar position as compared with the rest of the States because of the fact that the State has not assumed what I consider its normal share of the relief problem.

In Ohio we have built more waterworks, sewer systems, and disposal plants than any State in the Union—also more schoolhouses, either new or remodeled, and more playgrounds and athletic fields, including stadiums and swimming pools, and rank at the top with Tennessee, Illinois, and Indiana in the amount of new roads built. In order to do this we have had to draw heavily upon the resources of the local communities for sponsors' contributions. The State's withdrawal from any contribution will of necessity require the local communities to divert part of their funds to direct relief and make unavailable the former sponsors' contributions. We have generally carried less than our maximum quota so the labor money might be turned into material and equipment to further maintain the integrity of this program.

The number of counties I had in mind that I would like to eliminate from the program are carrying in each case less than 300 employees. The total volume that would be dropped is small compared with our load and will make little difference in the amount of funds required for this coming year. There is an unfairness in withdrawing that might make our position indefensible, because it places a burden upon the counties that are helping to pay the entire bill and gives them no Federal funds in return.

I had the thought that it might be possible to establish an equalizing fund and grant to these counties a definite sum of money each month to reimburse them for the withdrawal of the works program, reducing the monthly allocations by, say, 10 percent each month, so as to be out of the picture at the end of 10 months. While this might apply satisfactorily in Ohio, after discussing this with Mr. Hopkins, it became evident to me that it could not be carried out because of the position into which he would be placed in a great many States.

Our analysis shows that we will have a static load of approximately 100,000 to be carried over the next several months. This load will be composed of people beyond the age that is now acceptable to industry or those who have become of working age within the past years but have had no opportunity to develop work habit or training and are not being accepted by industry as long as there is a pool of unemployed in families who have not been on relief. It requires about four jobs in industry to take one person from the W. P. A. rolls. Where our working load is below 300 it requires travel of the workers, in many cases long distances, and generally makes for unsatisfactory operation and high overhead cost.

I intend to withdraw from the counties with the smaller loads as projects are completed. We will not reassign or open new projects, thereby completing our withdrawal in a comparatively short time. Just what the reaction is going to be I do not know. I think it is worth while trying to find out.

We must withdraw as rapidly as is consistent with common sense and as quickly as the States and counties can again carry the entire burden. You are aware, of course, that in Ohio the municipalities are limited by legal and constitutional restrictions to the amount of taxes that can be levied and bonds issued. It may be necessary to force some legislation before they are able to assume entire responsibility.

Sincerely yours,

CARL WATSON, Administrator.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, in stating my position on the issue presented in this relief bill I wish, first of all, to pay a sincere tribute to a committee comrade, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Deficiencies, the gentleman from Virginia, CLIFTON A. WOODRUM. For a long time I have sat by his side in the hearings conducted on deficiency measures and in the councils of the committee room, and I have been greatly impressed by his capabilities for service and his conscientious and unswerving devotion to duty, as he is given to see his duty. The more I am brought into contact with him the more I admire him for his unusual qualities of mind and heart. He has courage and ability of the highest order. Before I became well acquainted with him I had often heard him referred to as a future United States Senator from Virginia and the better I have come to know him the more I think he would add grace and distinction to the body at the other end of the Capitol. [Applause.]

From the earliest times the commonwealth that was "the mother of presidents" has been represented in the Halls of Congress by an illustrious lineage. In my long career as a newspaper correspondent at this Capitol and as a Member on this floor, it has been my privilege to have known many of these great Virginia legislators, such men as Henry St. George Tucker, Harry Flood, James Hay, Walton Moore, and Governor Montague in this body and in the upper branch eminent Senators with varying characteristics and endowments but outstanding in their sphere; the erudite and dignified Daniel and others of his type exemplifying the highest idealism; the superlatively shrewd Martin and others of his practical school, all of them outstanding and extraordinary men in Congress and in the councils of their party, and I say without flattery that I believe that in the role of Senator, CLIFTON A. WOODRUM would be the peer of any who have gone before. [Applause.] As a representative of a great State that was carved out of the choicest vitals of Virginia, I feel that I may be pardoned if I say that if the fate that shapes our destinies, rough-hew them as we will, sometime transfers Mr. WOODRUM to the Senate, our loss in the House will be great, but the upper branch will gain a Member who in learning, culture, and statesmanship will measure up to the highest and best traditions of the Old Dominion. [Applause.]

The differences between members of the Appropriations Committee on relief are, after all, hardly more than skin deep. As I understand the situation all of us have the same objectives. I think I speak accurately when I say that every member of the Appropriations Committee wants to see the Works Progress Administration terminated and the only difference among us is over the speed with which the activity shall be liquidated.

MY RECORD FOR ECONOMY

I do not think this occasion requires any assurance on my part that I stand for economy. My record speaks for itself. During my 8 years of service in this House I have voted against appropriations totaling $7,000,000,000.

But there is one kind of economy that I am not in favor of and that is economy that is based on human suffering. When I first ran for Congress I made a statement which I have repeated in every biennial campaign since that time and that statement was that while I stand for the strictest economy in governmental expenditures, when it comes to an alternative between dollars on the one hand and the humanities on the other hand my vote and my voice and my limited influence will aways be on the side of the humanities.

Now let us look at the situation that is here presented. At the time of the hearings before our subcommittee a total of 2,255,000 persons were employed on the works program, of whom 2,085,000 were employed by the Works Progress Administration and 170,000 by other Federal agencies on works projects.

On the basis of the recommended appropriation of $1,500,000,000, an average employment would be provided during the coming fiscal year of 1,640,000 on the works program. This would mean a reduction of 615,000 from the number employed, a decrease of 27 percent.

Now on top of this cut of 27 percent in the works program made in the President's estimate it is proposed by some Members of this body to impose a further cut of $500,000,000 which would take 546,000 more persons off of W. P. A. relief rolls, the effect of both cuts being to reduce those rolls by 1,155,000 dismissals. That would be a tremendous reduction and probably would cause many hardships.

I am in favor of closing out W. P. A. entirely as soon as it can be done in a humane way, but I believe this further cut would be gambling with human misery. There are many States like Indiana where the constitutional debt limit has been reached and where the communities are powerless to raise by taxation money to take care of such an enormous relief load as will suddenly be shifted back to them if this drastic cut is made.

TELEGRAM FROM GOVERNOR

It occurred to me, as a Representative of Indiana and its capital district, that before making up my mind definitely how I should vote on this proposition I should consult the officials who are living with the relief problem in Indiana, Governor Townsend and Dr. McCulloch, who has charge of Works Progress relief in Marion County, including the city of Indianapolis. I present their replies for whatever light they may throw on conditions in a typical State. Both officials insist that any cut below the President's estimate of $1,500,000,000 would be inviting misery and distress, hunger and much suffering. Their telegrams are as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., May 6, 1937.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Check with John Jennings, W. P. A. head, shows that local communities are unable to absorb present relief cost. If congressional appropriation is cut it will be necessary to drop deserving people off work in every community in Indiana. Citizens in Indiana would suffer for food, clothing, and other necessities if contemplated reduction is made.

(Signed) M. CLIFFORD TOWNSEND,
Governor.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., May 6, 1937.

Hon. LOUIS LUDLOW,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Contemplated cut in relief appropriation would effect irreparable hardship to local relief situation. Local relief agencies are already staggering under present load and I do not see how they can take over any more. This means that our citizens would suffer for food, clothing, and necessities.

(Signed) CARLETON B. MCCULLOCH.

THE FORGOTTEN MEN

Now let us take a look at the picture that is before us. We have between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 employables who have no present prospects of securing employment in industry, for industry at this time is in too weak a condition to employ them. The honest businessman and the honest manufacturer are the "forgotten men" of recent times. They have been penalized by governmental interference and their surpluses, which ought to be their strength and mainstay in providing employment, have been gutted by ruinous taxation. If we want to make industry strong and self-sufficient to meet its responsibilities, if we want to give it capacity to reabsorb men and women into regular employment and to make unnecessary such relief bills as the one now before us, we should give industry more consideration and we should not pass such tax bills as the tax on surpluses enacted in the last Congress. Now, as I say, we have between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000 unemployed. Industry, weak and discouraged, cannot take back any considerable number of them now and local relief organizations are bogged down with debt, some of which indebtedness should never have been incurred. It was a fatuous proceeding for local communities and political units to plunge themselves up to their eyebrows in debt in order to qualify for P. W. A. allotments, as the future will prove.

But these circumstances exist and we cannot change them. It is a condition and not a theory that now confronts us. What are we going to do about it? The answer is that we are not going to let men, women, and children starve. That is final and positive. Until the conditions spoken of can be corrected those in distress must be taken care of by Federal relief.

I do not know how much money we should appropriate for relief, and I have been studying this problem for months. No one knows. It is a guess, and we all have our ideas.

WHERE OUR DUTY LIES

I believe it is our sacred duty to spend every dollar that is actually needed to relieve hunger and nakedness and dire want until the time comes when local relief agencies can take over the load, but I do not want to spend one dollar more than that, and if in our efforts to be merciful to the poor we appropriate something more than is actually needed I want the administrative officials to cover that balance back into the Treasury.

Relief should be sent back just as soon as it can practicably be done to the States and the local communities and to that end I heartily favor the so-called Bacon amendment which would transfer the expenditure of the funds carried in the pending bill to the State and local authorities and would establish the precedent that will ultimately, and I hope soon, take the Federal Government entirely out of the picture. No one wants the United States Government to get out of the relief business more than I do, but it cannot withdraw at one stroke.

During the transition period while those on W. P. A. rolls are being reabsorbed in industry or transferred to local relief some Federal appropriations are absolutely necessary to prevent intense suffering. We cannot permit hunger and nakedness and dire distress among our citizens. There are many other ways to economize that do not inflict such awful suffering. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, for 5 years Congresses have been meeting and appropriating money as emergency-relief appropriations. I think it is time we came to the realization that unemployment is not an emergency problem, and that one of two things has to happen: Either we have to get down to business and attack this problem in fundamental ways in order to establish an abundance of production in this Nation, and, as has been suggested, adjust the hours and wages of labor to that, or else we must regard our provisions for unemployment relief as something which should be dealt with scientifically, with a policy established by Congress, instead of just appropriating for an "emergency" every time.

I am in entire accord with those who say they would like to get the political appointees out of local W. P. A. offices. I am in accord with some of the criticisms of it. However, I think it is a very unworthy thing to try to take advantage of certain mistakes which have been made in an administration, essentially noble and absolutely necessary to the country, and use these mistakes as an excuse to attack the standard of living of the poorest people in this Nation.

The President has stated the thing most necessary for continued recovery and betterment is consumer purchasing power. I predict that if this Congress appropriates a billion or a billion and a half dollars, either one, but fails to appropriate a very great deal more than either of these figures, we will be laying the ground work for the next depression. Not a penny less than $2,200,000,000 must be appropriated to keep W. P. A. employment where it is now, and if you want money for P. W. A., the amount ought to be $2,500,000,000. [Applause.] Between 1924 and 1929, when Andrew Mellon was directing our country's policy, profits were increasing in this country 70 percent while wages were increasing 20 percent. The result was the collapse of 1929. In the year 1936 profits went up 50 percent and wages went up 11½ percent. If this keeps on there can be but one result, another 1929.

UNEMPLOYMENT DECLINES 20 PERCENT; W. P. A. ALREADY CUT 33⅓ PERCENT

We cannot just pick figures at random and be either fair or honest. Unemployment and the works program have got to be considered in relation to one another.

All current estimates of unemployment indicate a decrease during the past 2 years of approximately 20 percent.

During the same period the number of cases on direct—State and local—relief and workers from relief rolls on the works program has decreased 27 percent.

W. P. A. employment alone has declined from a peak of about 3,040,000 in February 1936 to 2,059,000 on May 1, 1937, a decline of 33⅓ percent. Already, therefore, we have cut W. P. A. faster than unemployment has decreased.

In addition to the 2,059,000 on W. P. A. on May 1, 178,000 relief workers, now employed on the projects of other agencies, must be provided for next year out of the appropriation of $1,500,000,000; that is, there are now employed a total of 2,237,000, representing the basic group to be provided for. I believe the following short table tells a convincing story.

Trend of unemployment and Works Progress Administration employment

Date	Number unemployed (American Federation of Labor estimate)	Works Progress Administration employment
1936
February	11,577,000	3,036,000
March	11,199,000	2,872,000
1937
February	9,722,000	2,140,000
March	9,429,000	2,115,000

In other words, W. P. A. has never employed more than one-fourth of the unemployed. And every person cut off the W. P. A. will go onto charity relief and not onto the pay roll of industry as some suppose.

It is estimated that total expenditures of the W. P. A. from July 1, 1936, to June 30, 1937, will aggregate between $1,850,000,000 and $1,900,000,000. Other agencies operating projects of a similar nature, with funds from the E. R. A. Act of 1936, will spend about $175,000,000 making total W. P. A. expenditures close to $2,075,000,000. The proposed appropriation of $1,500,000,000, therefore, represents a reduction of more than 25 percent from expenditures during this fiscal year, and means, in human terms, that about 600,000 heads of families who want to work will have to take a dole instead.

To cut to $1,000,000,000 means that 1,200,000 heads of families who want to work must take a dole instead.

THERE ARE 350,000 NOW WAITING TO GO TO WORK ON W. P. A.

In my own State of California there are upward of 60,000 people being cared for on direct relief who are certified, examined, and in every way ready to go to work on W. P. A. for whom there are no jobs. In the Nation as a whole there are 350,000 waiting and hoping to go to work. And yet we are saying we ought to cut W. P. A.

No wonder the United States conference of mayors has said that at least $2,200,000,000 should be appropriated for W. P. A. alone.

AMOUNT OF $2,200,000,000 THE MINIMUM TO KEEP THOSE NOW EMPLOYED AT WORK

We ought to employ more people and employ them at more worth-while work. But we must remember that materials for every project cost more now than they did a year ago. We must remember that $55 a month does not go nearly as far as it did a year ago and that if W. P. A. wages are to even meagerly feed families wages must be increased. For $55 a month is bare subsistence even at the lower price level.

Unless we are to abandon Dust Bowl farmers to their fate we cannot fail to allow something for Resettlement. So I repeat $2,200,000,000 is the least amount that will even keep those employed who are now employed on W. P. A. Obviously, from the figures I have quoted we really ought to increase their number.

W. P. A. OVERHEAD NOT GREAT

The charge is made that W. P. A. overhead costs are too large. I myself wish every vestige of political favoritism could be ended. But it is a matter of record that the average wage of W. P. A. workers is $55 a month throughout the Nation. When we consider that in the first quarter of 1937 an average of 2,133,000 were employed at a total cost of $427,000,000, simple arithmetic shows that 82 percent of the money went to wages. Of the remainder 14.2 percent went for materials and 3.7 percent for overhead.

W. P. A. has preserved the hope and faith of millions of people. Mr. Harry Hopkins gets a lot of abuse. He deserves a lot of praise instead. He deserves constructive direction from Congress. The W. P. A. can be improved upon, of course. But the way to do that is to pass policy-forming legislation covering W. P. A. and Government public work. The way not to do it is to throw several hundred thousand people back on relief rolls.

MONEY MUST AND CAN BE RAISED

It would be irresponsible in any Member of Congress to demand a larger appropriation without knowing where the money was coming from.

I agree the Budget should be balanced.

Probably it is easier politically to balance it at the expense of the unemployed.

I believe it is sounder policy and I know it is more Christian to balance it by revision of our tax laws.

The Philadelphia Record, an eminently reliable paper, stated editorially on April 26 that additional revenues of $700,000,000 could be obtained from revision of the capital gains tax alone. I know that there are loopholes in our inheritance and gift taxes which, if plugged up would add much more revenue also. And I believe we have to tax more heavily the people with incomes between $4,000 and $25,000 as well as keeping our rates in the higher brackets up if the possibility of flood control, soil conservation, rural electrification, slum clearance and work for the unemployed depends upon such action.

We need to do what is right and fair and just. I believe we can and that if we do our Nation will be blessed.

When we propose to cut the ground from under 600,000 families in this country, as we will do if only a billion and a half is appropriated, and when we propose to do the same thing to 1,200,000 families if only a billion is appropriated, we are proposing something which will tend to break down the standard of wages of all the people who work for a living; and I submit this kind of action is not the way to continue the march to better times which the President and his policies have started.

We talk about the unemployed depending upon the Government. What we ought to be doing is making the best use we can of the labor of these unemployed people. We need flood control, and we need it desperately. We need to prevent further droughts taking place. We need rural electrification. We need to conserve our own soil. We need playgrounds in our cities as the best safeguard against crime. We need all kinds of things in our Nation. If we could only get to thinking straight on this problem we would see in the labor of these unemployed people an opportunity to get this kind of work done instead of some strange sort of national liability.

If I had my way about it, I would take the P. W. A., with its emphasis on worth-while, constructive projects, on the one hand, and W. P. A., with its emphasis on the employment of unemployed people—without any stigma of relief to it; just unemployed people—I would take these two principles and combine them into one administration. Then I would appropriate sufficient money this year and next year and every year so that we may maintain an America in which we will be building up and conserving our national welfare, and in which every citizen can hold up his head and say, "My Nation guarantees me the right to support my family in a decent way by my own constructive labor." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States stated in one of his wonderful addresses that approximately 30,000,000 people in our country are in need of the necessities of life. I will take it for granted that what the President stated is absolutely true. I believe every word he has said about 30,000,000 people being in need. One billion and a half, or two billion and a half, or even three billion and a half dollars is insufficient to feed and clothe 30,000,000 people. In my opinion, $5,000,000,000 is not too much money to spend for the necessities of life for 30,000,000 people who are right now very much in need. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us appropriates $1,500,000,000 for relief purposes for the next fiscal year. The subcommittee recommended $1,000,000,000, the conference of mayors of the United States recommended $2,200,000,000, and the Workers Alliance $3,000,000,000. These constitute the major proposals for the consideration of ourselves, the administration, and the country at large. Whatever proposal is adopted, the money for that purpose must be raised by taxation. If the Federal Government is liberal, then the municipalities are required to raise less; on the other hand, if the Federal Government is niggardly, then the municipalities must raise more. For to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and house the unsheltered we must have money. The question is, whose money? Federal money or municipal money? Federal money must be raised by income, inheritance, gift taxes, and so forth, while municipal taxes must be raised by taxes on real estate; that is, on farms and homes.

This latter type of property now bears by far the greatest burden of taxation, and the increase of tenancy both in the country and the city is an irrefutable argument that the burden of taxation on property must not be increased. That leaves but one other source of taxes; incomes, gifts, and inheritances.

Every tax expert will tell you that we have reached the point of diminishing returns on large incomes. Therefore, we shall have to broaden the base and dip into incomes below $50,000 per year. I appreciate that the great mass of our people earn less than $3,000 per year, and a tax placed on incomes of $1,000 per year and up would bring in considerable revenue. But it must be remembered that these people already have been heavily taxed by the increased cost of living which has reduced their slender incomes to the danger point. Sickness or an accident to the breadwinner of low income would be a major tragedy in his little home. I would rather increase the pressure on incomes of $4,000 and up, and spare those in the low-income brackets.

We must face the stern fact that considerable additional money must be raised. Real estate has borne such a heavy burden of taxation that the Government has had to come to the rescue of farm owners and home owners in the city, and even though great sums have been advanced to aid these owners in distress, nevertheless, the number of foreclosures is appalling. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN] pointed out in his remarks of May 14, that since January 27, 1936, some 90,000 home owners have had their homes foreclosed by the H. O. L. C., and that the H. O. L. C. Board estimates that by the end of the next fiscal year foreclosures will amount to 20 percent of the loans granted, totaling about $600,000,000.

It is very evident from these figures that Congress must find some way of lightening the burden on these homes, or we shall be faced with the inconsistent policy of foreclosing on homes, dispossessing the owners, and then placing them on the relief rolls, and paying rent for them in some other place to live.

Common sense would say that there is an ultimate saving of money to make the interest rate lower on the present mortgage on homes, and to make the monthly payments less so as to preserve as much as we possibly can the ownership of homes and the morale of the families that live in them. Therefore, I repeat that we cannot place the burden of taxation on farms and homes. How, then, shall we raise this money? We must do two things—cut down on other appropriations and raise additional revenue. I appreciate how difficult it is to do either one of these things, yet we must face this problem squarely and solve it to the best of our ability. I am, therefore, offering a few suggestions—first, as to the saving on appropriations; and, second, as to the raising of additional revenue.

SAVING ON APPROPRIATIONS

In a recent issue of the Washington News the well-known economist, John T. Flynn, had an article on the appropriations for the Navy. I quote from that article:

Americans have little conception of the extent of the naval construction that has gone on under President Roosevelt. When the first P. W. A. grant of $3,300,000,000 was adopted in 1933 the very first use the President made of that was to earmark about 10 percent of it for the Navy. Since that time he has not only gotten large appropriations for Navy construction every year, but he has used several hundred millions of relief money for the same purpose.

As a result, on the 1st day of January 1937 the United States had more war vessels under construction than any nation in the world. While our statesmen and press criticized and lectured Europe about her war madness, we led the pack of nations in naval construction. The following table of warships under construction by various nations as of January 1, 1937, will probably surprise Americans:

	Number of ships	Tonnage
United States	87	276,625
Great Britain	54	248,195
Japan	29	87,194
France	30	180,608
Italy	34	109,870
Germany	42	232,866

When you are paying your taxes, remember that a nice chunk of them goes to support the President's pet plaything, the Navy, and that they are used by us to give the rest of the world an example in warlike preparations.

The United States has been spending more and more each year on war preparations. No doubt there are many economies which can be effected in our recovery and relief spending. But a good place to begin real Government economy is in our war and naval expenditures.

I therefore suggest a reduction of $200,000,000 on the appropriations for the Army and Navy, which will constitute a saving to that extent.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE

As is well known, all mail sent by Members of Congress which pertains to the public business is sent free of postage. The same rule applies to all publications and information sent out by departments of the Federal Government. This is called the franking privilege. The postage thus saved amounts to a huge sum of money every year. The amount of paper, ink, printing, and so forth, runs into millions of dollars annually. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] gave some illuminating remarks on the subject of the franking privilege on March 22. I repeat a few of the items which were contained in his statement. All of these items apply to the year 1937 and are estimated on the basis of 1936 figures.

Franked mail sent by departments, pieces, 669,352,068; lost revenue	$32,236,269
Franked congressional mail, pieces, 29,747,411; lost revenue	751,579
Cost of paper	6,058,150
Cost of printing	18,592,855
Cost of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD	599,664
Annual cost	68,238,517

If we eliminate 50 percent of this printing and franking—and it can easily be done—we can save on this item the sum of $34,000,000 annually. If discussions in the House and the Senate that do not pertain to the bill under consideration were not printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that document could be cut in half.

FOREIGN DEBTS

We might also make an effort to collect something on our foreign debts. Mr. KNUTSON, of Minnesota, in a speech on February 25, gave us some very interesting and pertinent facts relative to our foreign debts. I set out below a table of these items owed by the various countries and the interest rates:

Country	Principal and interest	Average interest rate (approximate) over the whole period of payments
		Percent
Great Britain	$11,105,965,000.00	3.3
Finland	21,695,055.00	3.3
Hungary	4,693,240.00	3.3
Poland	435,687,550.00	3.3
Esthonia	33,331,140.00	3.3
Latvia	13,958,635.00	3.3
Lithuania	14,531,940.00	3.3
Czechoslovakia	312,811,433.88	3.3
Rumania	122,506,260.05	3.3
Belgium	727,830,500.00	1.8
France	6,847,674,104.17	1.6
Yugoslavia	95,177,635.00	1.0
Italy	2,407,677,500.00	.4
Total	22,143,539,993.10

Let us break down the grand total and see what we could do with that huge sum. In the first place, we could pay off all the farm and home mortgages in the United States, and have left over a sum sufficient to build 240,000 miles of hard-surfaced roads at $25,000 per mile, which would be equivalent to 69 hard-surfaced highways clear across the United States.

If the debt owed us by the late Allies were paid and the money put out at 5-percent interest, it would bring in $1,100,000,000 a year, which would be sufficient to give the 1,163,300 now receiving old-age pension an additional $945 per year.

There are thousands of communities in this country that are without hospital facilities. If the Allies were to pay what they owe us, after deducting the $16,000,000,000 for liquidation of farm and home mortgages, we would yet have left over enough money to build 48,000 community hospitals at a cost of $250,000 each. And yet they speak of us as a grasping race of dollar chasers. I make the statement here and now, and without fear of contradiction, that if this Nation ever falls, the historian of the future will date the decline of the Republic from the day that we entered the World War, on April 6, 1917. (Extract from Mr. KNUTSON's speech).

All these foreign countries are anxious to get helium from our Government. I do not favor releasing helium for war purposes, but I do believe that we might release small amounts of helium for medical purposes; and I therefore suggest that we sell to hospitals and to clinics abroad small amounts of helium, providing these countries make some honest effort to begin paying us what they owe. It is a rank injustice to our farmers and our home owners that we should take from them the last dollar in the world, deprive them of their homes, and even pile up against them for future hardship deficiency judgments, when we foreclose on their last possessions, while at the same time we permit foreigners to owe us over $22,000,000,000 on which they do not even pay the interest; and yet we have bought French paper marks with our gold to help stabilize the currency of France. We have entered into trade agreements, trading off many of our agricultural products for the benefit of these countries, who squander every dollar we give them in preparation for the next war. Time and again we have sacrificed the interests of our own people for the benefit of Europe, and all that we have ever gotten out of it has been criticism, vituperation, and abuse. If we could collect only $100,000,000 a year from these debtor nations, think of the homes we could save; think of the families we could feed; think of the farms we could rescue from the auction block. I respectfully suggest to the State Department that, instead of trading away all our business for the benefit of deadbeat foreigners, that this Department spend some time and energy in evolving a policy for the collection of these debts. In support of my contention that we are building up these debtor nations by our trade policy, I submit the following facts, which are the last ones available:

FARM IMPORTS EXCEED EXPORTS

On May 8 the Agricultural Department said that exports of farm products this season still are lagging behind a year ago, while imports are expanding.

March agricultural exports reached 57 percent of prewar volume, highest for the month in 3 years, the Department reported, but deficits in earlier months of the period since July offset the gains.

Exports for the 9 months ended March 31 were valued at $595,464,000, compared with $637,719,000 in the same period a year earlier. The Department said this was a decline of 7 percent in value and of 11 percent in volume.

Imports for July through March passed the billion-dollar valuation, $1,072,817,000, compared with $839,518,000 for July–March a year earlier. Of imports this season, the Department said $528,480,000 were competitive with farm products in this country.

Gains in major imports with values this season and last included:

	1936	1937
Cattle	$5,374,000	$7,109,000
Meats	9,086,000	15,424,000
Cheese	8,694,000	10,593,000
Corn	12,342,000	25,896,000
Wheat (including flour)	29,863,000	40,828,000

Some of us contended on the floor last session that the State Department's foreign-trade policy was building up Europe at the expense of our own people, especially the farmer. These figures bear out our argument.

RECLAMATION AND IRRIGATION

We are spending annually at least $40,000,000 for reclamation and irrigation projects in far Western States. It seems an inconsistent policy to spend huge sums of money annually to create new acreage on which to produce farm products while at the same time we spend several hundred millions of dollars annually to take 30,000,000 acres out of production, and in addition, we admit from abroad, under advantageous trade agreements, the production of approximately 30,000,000 acres. So we have the inconsistent program of taxing our people heavily to make benefit payments in agriculture, while at the same time we tax them to create new acreage by reclamation and irrigation.

These reclamation and irrigation projects start out innocently enough by making a beginning on a new project with a few thousand dollars. The next thing we know, the project is approved and we begin to appropriate money to carry it out, first, with a few hundred thousand, then with a million, and then with five or ten millions, until a vast project covering large areas has been created; and these in States which are sparsely populated and where such projects could well be delayed until needed, but the old policy of "you scratch my back and I'll scratch yours" prevails, and a State that gets such a project votes for all similar projects in every other State, and the taxpayer pays the bill, and that bill now has reached the point where it becomes enormous.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Some real-estate promoters in Florida conceived the brilliant idea of digging a canal through the northern section of the State and thereby promote real-estate prices which were deflated during the depression. Everyone remembers the days of hysterical real-estate prices in Florida when lots changed hands two and three times a day, with an increase of price at every transfer. Lots were sold in the sand, and the burrs, and the jack pine at several thousands of dollars per lot which were not worth $50 an acre. Of course, investors sustained enormous losses when the depression came. Promotion companies with vast tracts of land had to do something, and the Florida ship canal is one of these high-powered real-estate dreams.

Both the House and the Senate turned down this project last session, but nevertheless President Roosevelt generously donated $5,400,000 from the relief funds for this project. I, for one, am unalterably opposed to spending another dollar on this useless project, and I am satisfied that neither the Senate nor the House will ratify it, in this session, at least. I hope we may be able to save $5,000,000, or more, during the coming year by withholding all further allotments of money for this useless purpose.

TAXATION

Of course, it is an old scheme to try to fool the people by telling them that you are passing a tax bill which increases income taxes only on those in the higher brackets. Do not try to fool our people into thinking that we are "soaking the rich", and that 90 percent of them escape the payment of any of these taxes. Every cent of taxes of any and all kinds is charged back to the consumer, and he pays the bill, 100 cents on the dollar. Note your increased cost of living, your food bills, your clothing bills, your shoe bills, and all the rest of your items of expense. They are all steadily increasing. Yet we must raise additional funds in some way if we are to keep down inflation, pay for relief, and save home owners and farm owners. I have two suggestions to make on this subject of taxation:

First, a tax on power of radio stations; and, second, a surtax on incomes of $4,000 per year and up.

TAX ON RADIO STATIONS

Broadcast stations in this country enjoy the use of a great national resource and the protection of the Government without which they could not exist. Two or three great broadcasting networks now have a practical monopoly of the air. It is my belief that stations of great power should be broken down so that we could have a greater number of smaller units. Stations of 25,000 watts and over blanket out smaller stations, and practically eliminate them from the air. This is to be regretted, and some method of control should be devised to protect the smaller units. I quote from the letter of George Henry Payne, Federal Communications Commissioner, written April 14 to Representative JOHN J. BOYLAN:

> The levy on power in the form of a special tax is simple, calculable at once, and is eminently fair. To give you some idea of the profits, it is a fact that there are not more than $40,000,000 invested in the broadcasting business, and the gross revenue last year exceeded $107,000,000, with the possibility of its reaching $125,000,000 to $130,000,000 in the current year. Not long ago one station, which represented an investment of $177,192.15, was sold for $1,250,000; another, which represented an investment of $146,006.02, was sold for $452,500; and still another, which represented an investment of $90,321.09, was sold for $300,000; and so on.

I believe that a special tax on broadcasting stations should be devised somewhat along this line:

For every station authorized to use not in excess of 1,000 watts, $1 a watt for each watt authorized.

For every station authorized to use in excess of 1,000 watts and not in excess of 5,000 watts, $2 a watt for each watt authorized.

For every station authorized to use in excess of 5,000 watts and not in excess of 15,000 watts, $3 a watt for each watt authorized.

For each station authorized to use in excess of 15,000 watts and not in excess of 25,000 watts, $5 a watt for each watt authorized.

For each station authorized to use in excess of 25,000 watts, $10 per watt for each watt authorized.

Such a tax program would assure us of at least $10,000,000 additional revenue per year.

SURTAXES

I am offering as a suggestion for additional revenue the surtax plan which was offered by Senator LA FOLLETTE on August 15, 1935, and was known at that time as the La Follette plan no. 3:

"Rates of surtax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax as follows:

"Upon a surtax net income of $4,000 there shall be no surtax; upon surtax net incomes in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $6,000, 4 percent of each excess.

"$80 upon surtax net incomes of $6,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $6,000 and not in excess of $8,000, 6 percent in addition of such excess.

"$200 upon surtax net incomes of $8,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $8,000 and not in excess of $10,000, 8 percent in addition of such excess.

"$360 upon surtax net incomes of $10,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $10,000 and not in excess of $12,000, 10 percent in addition of such excess.

"$560 upon surtax net incomes of $12,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $12,000 and not in excess of $14,000, 12 percent in addition of such excess.

"$800 upon surtax net incomes of $14,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $14,000 and not in excess of $16,000, 14 percent in addition of such excess.

"$27,720 upon surtax net incomes of $90,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $90,000 and not in excess of $100,000, 54 percent in addition of such excess.

"$61,120 upon surtax net incomes of $150,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $150,000 and not in excess of $200,000, 58 percent in addition of such excess.

"$90,120 upon surtax net incomes of $200,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $200,000 and not in excess of $250,000, 60 percent in addition of such excess.

"$3,566,120 upon surtax net incomes of $5,000,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $5,000,000, 75 percent in addition of such excess."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, my amendment, if adopted, would not establish any new surtax brackets. It accepts the existing law in that regard. It affects only surtaxes and has nothing to do with exemptions or any other feature of the existing law.

This plan of Senator LA FOLLETTE would raise about $100,000,000 additional revenue annually.

I believe that the foregoing program, if adhered to, would produce an increase in revenue of $500,000,000 annually. Such a sum would be ample to meet the requirements we are called upon to face, and I want to urge serious consideration of these suggestions because it is only by free and open discussion, and the suggestions and opinions of the membership of the House and Senate, that we can evolve a plan which will effect the ends we are seeking to accomplish. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] said it was not necessary to agree with the President on this appropriation, and I think he is right. But that does not necessitate my agreeing with the gentleman from Virginia either, and I firmly believe that instead of appropriating $1,500,000,000 that the needs of business and labor require much more than that.

There is no need to bring the President in on this, for when we think about what we have done as Congressmen and what we have done about our own legislative duties we need not be very proud. Gentlemen, after 5 years we have not even a committee which considers the question of unemployment.

Do you realize we have a committee on the Navy and all the different activities, but that we have none on the greatest problem we have in the United States of America today, and that is unemployment? There is no policy-making committee and we have no policy. We come into this House every year and a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations reports that we ought to have a certain sum of money.

But I maintain that there is not any Member of Congress who is able to say definitely how much money we need for unemployment. I do not know how much money we need for unemployment, and I do not think anyone else does. That is because we have not made a sufficient study of the subject, and no committee or group has the information. We have never had an unemployment census.

Still we can make certain conclusions. One is that if we only appropriate a billion, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, we will have to lay off 1,187,000 people. This just cannot be done. We just cannot take that many people off of W. P. A.

Then, if we make the $1,500,000,000 appropriation the committee has recommended, it means we will have to lay off more than 600,000 people. Nearly 400,000 persons at present badly need W. P. A. employment and have applied. So, in round figures, if we only appropriate a billion, a million people, heads of families, are thrown in the soup lines. I do not think we can afford to do this either.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is sensible; I do not think it is humane; and I do not think it is good business.

I first said publicly and on this floor that we should appropriate $2,500,000,000. Since then I have tried to arrive at a figure which is absolutely fair, and so I propose that the amount should be in the neighborhood of $2,200,000,000. This is not too much and it will take, at the very least, all of this amount to get by.

Now, why do I say $2,200,000,000? We have eight or nine or ten million unemployed. We need not argue about that; we have enough millions unemployed. There are three things about this $2,200,000,000. First, we can at least keep going just about as we are now and keep about the same number of people employed. Second, the country can have a little money for resettlement, only $75,000,000. We still have the rural problem with us, and the amount is not anywhere near enough for resettlement. The third thing is that prices are rising all over the United States of America, and, by reason of this fact, more money is necessary than before.

One of the gentlemen mentioned the campaign promise about reducing taxes, and so on. Well, that promise is always made by every party, and I believe our promises should be kept. But, my colleagues, we made a fundamental promise, and that was that we were not going to see anybody in distress or suffer starvation. This pledge the Democratic Party should keep if they want to stay in power; but aside from that it is a duty to the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, on April 20 the President sent to Congress a so-called relief message.

If we analyze that message, we find that it consists of two parts: First, a discussion of the Budget situation, in which the President had to confess that he had overestimated receipts by several hundred million dollars; second, a request for a billion-and-a-half-dollar relief appropriation.

The strange thing about the message is that, if the discussion of the Budget situation is eliminated, the so-called relief message consists of only one sentence, as follows:

I recommend that an appropriation of $1,500,000,000 be provided for work relief for the fiscal year 1938, and that it be made available early in June so that its expenditure can be properly planned prior to July 1.

Not one word is said in the President's message in justification of that amount. No mention is made of relief needs, the number of unemployed, the progress toward reemployment, or anything else that might be relevant in a so-called relief message.

I do not wonder that the President wants to avoid any discussion of his relief program and the unemployment situation. When he can find nothing good to say about his record, it is only natural that he keep silent.

His method of relief administration has been universally criticized. A large part of the funds intended for the needy have gone for wasteful overhead. The machinery set up for relief administration reeks with politics, both as regards the personnel and the using of relief money for partisan purposes. The centralized, bureaucratic handling of relief has caused overlapping of effort and a failure to meet the real problem of relief which can only be done satisfactorily by local administration.

I am in favor of appropriating every dollar that is necessary for relief purposes, but I would like to see the person in need get more of the money that is intended for him. Also I would like to see the taxpayer get more for his tax dollar.

This can only be accomplished under the Republican relief plan, which has been put into concrete form by the introduction of the Vandenberg-Bacon bill. This measure is based upon the relief philosophy set forth in the Republican platform, which I shall quote:

The necessities of life must be provided for the needy, and hope must be restored pending recovery. The administration of relief is a major failure of the New Deal. It has been faithless to those who deserve our sympathy. To end confusion, partisanship, waste, and incompetence, we pledge—

1. The return of responsibility for relief administration to nonpolitical local agencies familiar with community problems.

2. Federal grants-in-aid to the States and Territories while the need exists upon compliance with these conditions: (a) A fair proportion of the total relief burden to be provided from the revenues of State and local government; (b) all engaged in relief administration to be selected on the basis of merit and fitness; (c) adequate provision to be made for the encouragement of those persons who are trying to become self-supporting.

3. Undertaking of Federal public works only on their merits and separate from the administration of relief.

4. A prompt determination of the facts concerning relief and unemployment.

In the spirit of the Republican platform the Vandenberg-Bacon bill sets up a bipartisan Federal relief authority for the purpose of making relief allocations to the States, under which the States would provide one-fourth the total amount to be spent. The States would be free to handle the actual administration of relief in their own way.

The only particular in which I would differ with that measure that Mr. BACON introduced is in his stating of the amount. That, of course, is a matter of debate and decision later on in the House, but the principle is, local control over relief is the basic need at this time.

Of course, this plan has no chance of being substituted for the pending bill, because it would take away the political control the New Deal now has over relief administration. Also it has the merit of being efficient and practical, which means that it is discredited in the eyes of New Dealers. They want to continue the exploitation of the needy and the wasteful, bungling methods now in effect. Also they want to continue the concentration of authority in Washington.

At the present time recovery and relief present somewhat of a paradox. We are told on the one hand that recovery is here. But on the other hand, we find that there are still some 10,000,000 unemployed and some 14,000,000 persons receiving relief.

According to the Federal Reserve index, factory employment in March 1937 stood at 100.8 percent of the 1923–25 level. Yet it is found necessary to appropriate a billion and a half for relief. Something is wrong somewhere.

According to the Treasury statement for April 30, some $19,766,000,000 has been appropriated for recovery and relief thus far, not including the present appropriation. Of this stupendous total, $15,493,000,000 has been spent and $4,273,000,000 still remains to be expended.

Yet with all this money that has been passed out on every hand, where do we find ourselves? We still have the unemployment problem; we still have the relief problem; and all we have to show for the billions that have been spent is a national debt of $35,000,000,000.

Relief appropriations, while absolutely necessary as a temporary measure to save our people from starving, are no solution of the unemployment problem. For 4 long years the administration has been temporizing with this serious question. It has made little progress toward getting jobs for the unemployed.

Of course, we all know that the Government itself can never solve the unemployment problem. That will have to be done by private industry. The least that the administration could do, however, is not to stand in the way of reemployment by private business. Yet its policy all along has been to harass, annoy, and hamstring business and industry.

One of the more recent stumbling blocks to reemployment is the undistributed earnings tax which the President insisted upon passing during the last session of Congress. Many business concerns would now be enlarging their plants and employing more men were it not for the fact that current earnings used for this purpose are subject to a prohibitive tax.

It is quite apparent that we are going to have the unemployment problem with us as long as the present administration stays in power. The unemployed will in the meantime have to continue to live on a mere pittance under the dole system. They will only get their jobs back at substantial American wages when a practical-minded administration is put in power.

Doubtless the unemployed would all have been back at their jobs long ago if it had not been for the impediments which the administration has put in the way. I have already mentioned one of these impediments. Another is the uncertainty created by the failure of the administration to reduce expenditures and balance the Budget.

With respect to Budget balancing, the President has been long on promises but short on performance. Every year, while warning of the dangers of an unbalanced Budget, he has kept putting off the day when expenditures would be made to balance revenues.

While the subcommittee in charge of the pending bill provided a billion dollars—a sum it believed to be ample—the full committee has increased the amount to the original total recommended by the President. Doubtless this change of front was in response to direct pressure from the White House.

If the Republican relief plan were put into effect, the chances are that $1,000,000,000 would provide as much relief to those in need as one and one-half billions under the present method. In the interest of those who are in need, as well as in the interest of the taxpayers, we should return the administration of relief to nonpolitical local agencies familiar with the relief problem.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER].

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, there should be no doubt in anyone's mind about the necessity for continuing the P. W. A. for another 2 years. The supplementing of one's own knowledge of the splendid work which has been done, and is being done by P. W. A., with the facts presented on May 3 of this year to the Appropriations Committee by Hon. Harold L. Ickes, leaves no room for doubt. His report shows that after July 1, 1937, there will still remain in the various stages of construction 1,601 different non-Federal projects, having a total cost of $937,000,000, for which grants amounting to approximately $310,800,000 have been made. While he states that the greater number of these will be completed by July 1, 1938, there will still be a considerable portion uncompleted until December 1, 1938, and that three major projects will not be completed until 1940. In addition the P. W. A. holds approximately $142,000,000 in securities representing more than 1,500 different issues. It also has contracted to purchase an additional $196,000,000.

There can be no question about the fact that the orderly liquidation of these loans and the successful completion of the projects now under way depends upon the continuance of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works. These facts simply stated are all that is necessary to convince my colleagues of the necessity for the continuance of this work, and the foolhardiness of even suggesting a change of horses in the middle of the stream; especially when the one that we have has so adequately proven his value. The only point that could be even considered as controversial would be the appropriation of funds for additional public works. And this dwindles to naught in view of the splendid accomplishments of P. W. A. and of the need for further continuance of public construction.

There is pending now in the P. W. A. files nearly 3,000 non-Federal applications which have met all of the requirements of the Examining Division. In round figures, these applications request grants on a basis of 45 percent of $398,000,000 and loans of $110,000,000, and represent a total estimated construction cost of $888,000,000. They have been submitted by every State and Territory of the United States and involve the construction of useful and permanent public works—works which would be of lasting benefit to communities in which they are constructed, and works which will uphold the present status of employment, increasing employment through our industries affected.

One of the most important of the diversified character of public works is that of the construction of public schools. The necessity of having adequate and safe schools for our children has only recently been brought to our attention by the terrible catastrophe which occurred at the New London school in Texas. The depression through the crippling of school finances threatened the standards of our American educational institutions and has caused the abandonment of reconstruction on many old structures which have deteriorated for the want of repairs. If it had not been for the Public Works Administration program, several thousands of our schools would have been operating under extremely hazardous conditions, and the New London catastrophe might have been reenacted in other instances.

Measuring P. W. A.'s contribution to education in other ways, one finds that approximately three-quarters of all the schools constructed since 1933 had been financed by it and carried out under its auspices. This construction eliminated hazards to our school children, which elimination could not have been accomplished without the Public Works Administration program. Thirty thousand classrooms have been added and new accommodations for more than 1,000,000 pupils made available. The program provided for the construction of 4,000 additional buildings and for the repair and rehabilitation of 1,000 additional structures. All of this, in addition to the actual construction of these most worthy projects, has furnished employment to thousands upon thousands of men at the site of the work, in the forests, mines, transportation, and industrial enterprises of the country. It stimulated and caused reemployment by private industries.

Right now the Public Works Administration has 1,178 school projects pending. Projects which have been submitted to the Administration by the people of those districts in order to ameliorate or eliminate conditions which are hazardous to the lives of their students. With the exception of Delaware, every State in the Union has school projects pending, varying from 3 to 94 in number.

It is interesting to note that Texas, the scene of our recent catastrophe, has 94 school projects pending; more than any other State in the Union. Take, for example, that State, 36 projects have been submitted to eliminate serious fire hazards; 6 to eliminate schools which have been condemned; 6 to replace schools which are unsound and which might cause death to thousands of pupils in any one of a multitude of ways; 10 to eliminate sanitation hazards; 29 to ameliorate health and panic hazards; 6 to replace schools which have burned down; and 1 for the creation of a new school.

And so it goes, State by State throughout the country. Is there anyone of us who would eliminate this type of work; work designed to protect the children attending our public schools from mutilation and death, even if the question of reemployment was not considered? But past experience does show that this type of construction is well adapted to reemployment and rehabilitation of industry. We know from past results that by eliminating these hazards we will stimulate and make possible the reemployment, directly and indirectly, of thousands of our unemployed.

The summary of the pending school applications is amazing. Few people realized, until this information was compiled, the great hazards under which so many of our students are forced to subject themselves. Pupils attending 501 schools are under a constant fire hazard, others are attending 33 condemned schools, and in 56 schools the structures of which are unsound. As bad as this is, there is more; 73 schools have a health hazard as a result of improper sanitation; 437 are stuffed and overcrowded; 21 districts having no school at all; and 57 projects are pending to replace schools which have been burned down. And so it goes, even on other types of work. Projects are pending for water systems for the protection of health and property; sewerage systems for the elimination of insanitary conditions; conditions which might at any time cause epidemics and great loss of life.

SPONSOR DEBT LIMITATIONS AND GOOD FAITH IN SUBMITTING APPLICATIONS

The applicants of great numbers of these most worthy projects are unable to proceed with the work on their own. The total cost of improvements would cause them to exceed their legally established debt limitation. They have acted in good faith. The Federal Government held out offers to aid them in their financial difficulties in order not only to assist them but to create employment and stimulate industry. Acting upon this, the sponsors held referendums, circulated petitions, employed architects and engineers to prepare the plans, and have the work ready to go. All of this has been done at considerable expense to the sponsor. A lion's share of this money might just as well have been tossed out the window if the program is abruptly terminated.

CONSTRUCTION STATISTICS

A great deal has been said recently about the return of prosperity to the construction and producers' goods industry. This industry has increased from the low of 26 percent to a total of 59 percent, based on the average 4 years of 1925 to 1929, inclusive. However, this 59 percent is still far behind the average for the construction industry prior to the depression. And the recovery of the construction industry is lagging far behind the consumers' goods industry. The following estimate of total construction volume published in the Engineering News Record, February 4, 1937, shows the volume for the years of 1925 to 1936:

Year	Amount in millions of dollars	Percent of 1925–29
1925	$8,178	86
1926	8,878	94
1927	9,595	101
1928	[1] 10,580	[1] 110
1929	10,377	109
1925–29 average	9,521	100
1930	8,058	85
1931	5,930	62
1932	2,839	30
1933	[1] 2,440	[1] 26
1934	3,104	33
1935	3,680	39
1936	[1] 5,590	[1] 59

[1] This tabulation shows the average for years 1925–29 inclusive to be $9,521,000,000. The volume fell from a high of $10,580,000,000 in 1928, which was 110 percent of the average, to a low of $2,440,000,000 in 1933 which was but 26 percent of the average. Recovery began in 1934, the year following the creation of P. W. A. and reached its highest point since 1931 in the year of 1936, which is the year following the peak year of P. W. A. loans and grants. In 1936 the total volume is estimated at $5,590,000,000, but this still was 41 percent short of the 1925–29 average and 47 percent below the 1928 peak.

Estimates from the same source show that private construction volume has recovered from a low in 1934 of 11 percent to but 37 percent in 1936, while public works reached 105 percent. A study of these estimates shows that if public works in 1936 had remained at the 1933 low, then the total construction in 1936 would have reached only 42 percent instead of the 59 percent. This simple statement alone is all that is necessary to show the value of P. W. A. in reviving and reestablishing the construction industry.

NEW APPROPRIATION

If this bill for the continuance of P. W. A. does not include an appropriation of $300,000,000 it will be an injustice to the sponsors of pending projects, to the construction and producer-goods industry, and to the men who are now employed as a result of active public works. Besides, it will do much toward retarding the assimilation of our unemployed by private industry.

APPRENTICESHIPS

In regard to the skilled-labor situation, out of the welter of conflicting rumors as to whether or not there is a shortage of skilled labor, one fact stands above all others. There is a great shortage of young skilled craftsmen. Steps must be taken immediately to insure progress in apprenticeship training. As stated in the Architectural Forum, of March of this year, there were approximately 1,600,000 skilled building mechanics at work in the United States in 1929. To this number there were added a theoretical 11,000 by apprenticeships by 1931, another 6,000 by 1935 and this insignificant total has dwindled further in the past year.

Large numbers of our original skilled workmen have succumbed to the fate of the depression, of old age, of physical incapacity, and death. Thus the body of skilled men which has been and is being considerably decreased must do an increasing amount of work if our unskilled and semiskilled are to become reemployed. This situation must be recognized. The craftsmen must be replaced. Millions of our laborers and semiskilled men are dependent on the labors of skilled men. Without trained mechanics, the untrained men cannot construct useful public or private works, and without the erection of useful works, there is no possibility of any important construction increase. The construction industry is the mainstay of the producer goods industries and if we expect business to deplete the rolls of unemployment we must have work which requires skilled men. What better program could the United States Government enter into to stimulate the reemployment by industry of our unfortunate workmen than that of P. W. A.?

By this agency work is done solely by contract and young men can properly carry out apprenticeships in the respective trades. The splendid accomplishments of P. W. A. in aiding industry to recover from the throes of economic strife have been set forth previously by me and many of my colleagues. They have shown that many thousands upon thousands of unskilled, semiskilled, and skilled men are employed directly and indirectly through P. W. A. construction work. I now mention the training of the younger men into skilled workers as this necessity has been recognized recently by many who are vitally interested in the construction industry. Apprenticeship resulting ultimately in new skilled workers is certain, in time, to reap great benefits to the contractor, the builder, the material manufacturer, and laborer alike.

MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM GRANTS

It has been recently suggested that grants for public works will, in the future, equal the wages paid to workers taken from the relief rolls by the contractor and by the industries affected by his contract plus 15 percent of this amount for materials and other costs. While I stress the importance of the P. W. A. program, I cannot support such an impractical plan as this.

It would be impossible for a sponsor to accept such a proposal. How could the sponsor determine the amount paid, by the industries affected, to people taken off the relief rolls and portion it to a particular contract? The administrative costs of determining the indirect labor costs would be so far out of proportion to the benefits derived that no sponsor of a P. W. A. non-Federal project would be able to consider it as a project cost. What would this mean? I will tell you. It would mean complete abandonment of the public-works program.

General statistics, however, can form a basis for Congress to determine and establish a minimum and maximum grant. The Department of Labor found, after conducting an extensive survey to determine the ratio of direct to indirect labor on all P. W. A. non-Federal projects, that there were 2.6 people employed indirectly for each one employed directly. P. W. A. statistics show that approximately 30 percent of all project costs have been expended for labor directly and that approximately 20 percent of this was taken from the relief rolls. Thus 6 percent of project costs has been expended for direct relief labor. Reimbursement of this amount plus 15 percent would make an average of approximately 7 percent. This would be the average grant for public-works projects not considered indirect relief employment.

Since the Department of Labor has shown that 2.6 are employed indirectly for each one employed directly, and assuming that the ratio of relief labor used in industry is comparable with the ratio of relief labor employed directly, the average for indirect relief employment would be approximately 18 percent. Thus, the total grant would amount to this percentage plus 7, or 25 percent. In order to create a practical way to compute grants earned on Public Works Administration projects, it is necessary to definitely establish a minimum grant.

This should be set at not less than 20 percent, which, as the above analysis indicates, is a conservative value. In addition, in order to encourage sponsors to employ as many relief clients as possible, this minimum grant should be increased by the amount of wages paid directly to relief workers with the maximum established at 45 percent. This will make the average grant equal to 26 percent, which is a great reduction from the average now established at 45 percent. Grants established in this manner can be easily computed and understood by all parties concerned. It is practical and will encourage further public works and at the same time enter upon a retrenchment program in work-relief policy. [Applause.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 21, 1937

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, who art above the cloud and beneath the clod, we rejoice that eternal love remains. Thou wilt show us the path of life. In Thy presence is fullness of joy; at Thy right hand are pleasures forevermore. We thank Thee that Thou hast made the earth so bright; deeper and broader in the heart of all is Thy love. We pray Thee to evoke desires and aspirations in us that shall carry with them the measure of true manhood and the purest happiness of which we could dream. Bless our country with a wise and benevolent patriotism. May it grow in power and shine everywhere with the true light of Christian brotherhood. Heavenly Father, shadows so often darken our brightest hours. A heavy burden has fallen on a tender heart. We beseech Thee to let the loss work out the highest and the holiest good. At last may the years of separation be lost in a better world. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EMERGENCY RELIEF APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 361, with Mr. O'CONNOR of New York in the chair.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this is an economy bill. It makes a drastic reduction in the amount provided for relief. It is a retrenchment measure, the first tentative step toward complete discontinuance of emergency relief. Also, it is a compromise measure. As reported by the committee it provides for one and one-half billion dollars, an amount half way between $1,000,000,000, on the one hand, and $2,000,000,000, on the other hand. It is the happy mean, the common ground, between the two extremes.

But most important of all, Mr. Chairman, it is in fulfillment of the greatest humanitarian program in the annals of any people or any nation in the history of the world. [Applause.] It is a program which has taken care of the helpless, which has provided markets for the products of labor and industry, which has maintained an American standard of living, and which has brought renewed prosperity to every trade and every community in the Nation.

The House is largely in accord on this bill. The only major item at issue is the amount. Some favor a billion dollars. Some, $2,000,000,000 or more, and the Budget estimate is one and a half billion.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Presently, if the gentleman will permit.

My good friend the gentleman from Virginia, in charge of the bill, suggests $1,000,000,000, a reduction of half a billion dollars below the amount recommended by the President. Now, what would be the effect of such reduction? I know that statistics are tedious, but I hope you will keep in mind two figures which I am about to give you. We are spending this year in our relief program $2,214,000,000, and we are employing this year, under that program, 2,255,000 workers.

Under present conditions we ought to continue that program. Circumstances justify the expenditure of the same amount we used last year. But the President insists we must balance the Budget; that we must economize; that we must cut appropriations to the bone. So in furtherance of that policy the President of the United States recommends a cut of one-third in the relief program. He proposes a cut from $2,214,000,000 to one and one-half billion dollars. It follows naturally that if we cut the appropriation one-third, we must cut the number of people employed by one-third. In other words, the 2,255,000 men who are now earning their daily bread under this program must be reduced by 751,667, a reduction in round numbers to 1,500,000 workers.

On the 1st day of July, under this program, we must turn out three-quarters of a million heads of families—families which depend on their daily wage for their daily bread; families which have no reserve; families which must go without food the next week after their dismissal unless other sources are found.

Do you know how many people that will involve? At the rate of the standard average of five persons to a family, it will aggregate approximately three and one-half million people who, under an appropriation of $1,500,000,000, will be turned out to starve, to steal, to find employment in industry, or be taken care of by the local community. In brief, in his message to Congress, the President proposes a retrenchment so drastic that three and a half million people must be thrown out of employment, with nowhere to go, with no food for the morrow.

But that is not sufficiently ruthless to suit some Members of the House. A few on this side of the aisle and everybody on that side of the aisle insist that three and a half million people out of employment is not enough. They say that instead of cutting it one-third, we should cut it more than one-half; that instead of throwing out three and a half million people we throw out five and a half million people to beg or to die; that instead of reducing it to one and a half billion dollars we must reduce it to $1,000,000,000.

Now, if we abandon even three and a half million people, what are you going to do with them, my colleagues? How do you propose to take care of them? We cannot shoot them. And if three and a half million helpless people are a problem, what will you do with five and a half million suffering men, women, and children? How are you going to care for them in your State? How do you propose to care for them in your community? That is the problem you must meet if you reduce this appropriation to a billion dollars.

Mr. Chairman, let us analyze the situation a bit further. The effect upon these unfortunate people themselves is not the only consideration.

Let us look at it from the point of view of the rest of the Nation. For example, let us consider the effect upon labor. We are making every effort to reduce unemployment, to shorten the hours of labor, to increase the wages of labor, to advance labor's standard of living. We are adopting every legislative means and employing every economic resource to render the condition of labor more tolerable. The President is today sending to Congress a message recommending the 40-hour week and a minimum wage. And now it is proposed to throw these millions of destitute people upon the labor market? In every community and in every trade there will be men who, under the imperative stress of circumstances, must, perforce, offer to work any number of hours at any wage to keep soul and body together. They will glut the labor market. They will bid down the wages of labor. They will constitute the greatest menace to the constructive system of collective bargaining so laboriously built up under this administration. A vote to reduce this appropriation below the President's recommendation is a vote against labor and, indirectly, a vote against agriculture, dependent to a large extent on the buying power of labor in the agricultural market. [Applause.]

Let us go a step further. What will be the effect of a reduction from one and one-half billion dollars to $1,000,000,000 in this appropriation and the attendant increase of the number of unemployed and their dependents to five and one-half million people upon crime, insanity, pauperism, and their attendant evils? The day has gone by when men will starve peaceably in the United States. The time is long since past when men will see their families hungry in a land of plenty. [Applause.] If you close down employment and withdraw opportunities for self-support, you may at once prepare to open up the jails, penitentiaries, and asylums, and to call out the G-men and the militia. We had an object lesson in that just two blocks away from where we now sit during the depression, when President Hoover used poison gas to drive out the hunger marchers. It is significant that President Roosevelt has never had to resort to coercive measures. He has adopted the humanitarian method. I ask you, Which has been the most effective? Which is the most typically American? Which do you propose to vote for here today—poison gas or food? You have seen them both in operation. You can take your choice. Until this emergency is past, it is one or the other. And for every dollar you save out of this billion and a half dollars you will eventually spend $2 in penal and eleemosynary institutions and for shock troops on the law-enforcement front in every State in the Union.

Let me now talk to you few friends who still have some regard for the farmers of the country.

The farmer has always received a disproportionate share of relief. The great bulk of it has gone to the cities. Throughout the depression, want has stalked like a grim specter through the neglected farm homes of the countryside and especially in the drought areas.

I saw farms last summer on which there was not one living thing, either vegetable or animal; not a cow or a chicken or a single blade of grass. Farmers worked 14 hours a day, not only the bread winner of the family but the women and children, and at the end of the season had nothing but burned fields and barren acres. What can they do until the next crop? The amount recommended by the President provides barely enough to tide these families through to the next harvest. And if you cut one-third out, what recourse have they? Shall we take the responsibility?

Mr. Chairman, the social-security program, of which this bill is a part, is to modern history what the Renaissance was to medieval Europe. It is a milestone that marks an epoch in human progress. When every European dynasty has crumbled, when every man who holds administrative position in the world today has passed into oblivion, Franklin Roosevelt will be remembered, not because he was the head of the greatest nation of his time but because of his supreme contribution to moral ethics, his preeminent service to mankind; because he has given us a new conception, a new recognition, a new enforcement of the rights of man. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, a vote to reduce this amount is not a vote for economy. It is a vote against labor, a vote against agriculture, a vote for starvation. It is a vote to open the floodgates of crime and misery and degradation. It is a vote to turn back the clock of civilization, a vote to sabotage in part the greatest program for human progress since time began. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, partisanship has no place in this discussion. You cannot play politics with human misery. But inasmuch as politics has been injected into this debate, let me admonish you not to make any mistake about the attitude of the country toward President Roosevelt. When you go back into your districts you will find they are not merely supporting him, they are not merely back of him and his program, but that they have a deep, personal affection for him. They love and trust him as no American statesman has ever been loved and trusted before. And when you go back home and find five and a half million people thrown out of employment, walking the streets, without adequate habitation and without the necessities of life, they are going to say, "Oh, yes, President Roosevelt wanted me to keep my job, but you voted with the Republicans to take it away from me." [Applause.]

Let me ask you to support your committee, to support an adequate but economical provision for relief, to support the right of every American citizen to earn his daily bread, the right of every American child to have a chance in life and a part in the national heritage. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS].

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield in my democracy to no man, nor in my loyalty to the President of the United States. There is no man in this House who has the record I have in standing by the President of the United States in this House except probably one man, and that is not the man who just preceded me.

No; we will not go back home and say we voted with the Republicans; we will say that the Republicans voted with us to save the Democratic Party and the taxpayers of this country. [Applause.]

An economy measure! Is this one billion and a half an economy measure? I am glad that the distinguished gentleman made the statement that the President of the United States merely sent this message up here and recommended a billion and a half, but that he has neither done anything nor said anything to indicate whether he wants it taken down or carried up. This is what the gentleman said; and does not that leave us free? Who represents your district; who knows the conditions in your district or the needs of your people? The President did recommend one billion and a half, but where did he get that? From my good friend Harry Hopkins, and the mayors of different cities pouring in on him, who do not want to shoulder this responsibility of caring for relief themselves.

From that he made his figures and presented them to us. I do not criticize Mr. Hopkins. He is my personal friend. He has done a good job, the best way he could, but where does he get his report? He gets it from the men who are working for him, and who were on the pay roll, and you know it. I say we should stand by this subcommittee. No man is better qualified to do the job of investigation, or as a man on this floor to fight the battles of the President of the United States, than the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], and you know it. [Applause.] What does he do? He brings in Mr. Wallace, he brings in Mr. Alexander, he brings in Mr. Hopkins, he brings in Members of Congress, and he gets all of the proof, and his subcommittee says $1,000,000,000 is enough. You Members must not be deceived by the whole committee voting for a billion and a half. That is a very large committee. That committee has its own subcommittees, and the men on those subcommittees are just as busy as you men are on your own committees. Ordinarily the report of a subcommittee is more or less a formal matter, to be endorsed by the whole committee, and you know that some of the best men in this House are on those subcommittees. What happened in this case? The whole committee did not hear the proof. Your subcommittee heard the proof, and then when the subcommittee reported a billion dollars, somebody got busy, and you know who, to try to get that committee to stand by a billion and a half. What I am trying to drive into you folk is the fact that the subcommittee is the committee that you ought to follow, because they heard the proof and made a study, and the whole committee did not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma rose.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Oh, I ask the gentleman to please sit down. I have not time to yield. I say to you men, and especially those from the South, where I know the conditions, what about the people in your districts, to whom you have to be responsible? Do you not know now that in many of your counties relief is working a hardship on your people? You must know it. In some places it is rumored that it is almost getting to be a racket. Why, the proof is here before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee for the District of Columbia, and I ask your attention for 1 minute to the facts, and they have not been denied. I quote the chairman of that subcommittee. The statement was made that there have been more colored people on the relief rolls in the city of Washington than compose the population of the colored people in this District. And did you know that it was shown before that same committee that these colored folk are refusing to take advantage of the old-age pension under the social-security law, because they can receive more money under relief? So, my friends, is it not time to call a halt?

So far as my friend Harry Hopkins is concerned, there was a time when he had to spend his billions, because this country was in a dreadful condition. But he need not spend them now. We speak of billions today, and I know that some of you will remember that play of Brewster's Millions, some 30 years ago where a young man inherited several millions provided he should spend a million in a year. You remember what an awful time he had to do it. If that had been in the days of Harry Hopkins, he could have spent it before breakfast next morning. [Laughter.]

These people are taking advantage of this situation. You people who represent agricultural districts have had letters from your farmers that they cannot get men to work for them. You people right here in Washington and in Baltimore and in other cities, you know that the good housewife cannot get domestic help. Not long since down in my section two old colored ladies went to get relief. They got their baskets filled, and as they walked out one said to the other, "I am so sorry that my husband died last year. Poor old John, it is too bad that he could not be here to help enjoy this relief." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there are three departments of this Government—the judicial, the executive, and the legislative. We were reminded yesterday by the President that it is not proper for the legislative department to encroach upon the prerogatives of the executive department, to which I agree. Neither do we want the executive department to encroach upon the legislative. [Applause.] It is a matter for you gentlemen to go back to your people and answer to them as to what you are here for, if you cannot express yourselves and vote your convictions. If you are not men of that kind, then you ought to go home and stay there. [Applause.]

My friends, I say this personally to you: It has got to stop. They have organized and they are sending organizations here, and what for? They are sitting in the galleries at this time. You have got to cut them loose, and you will still have plenty to take care of the poor unfortunates, whom I am in favor of taking care of. Do not be deceived, my friends. You Democrats, do not be deceived by the statement that you are voting with the Republicans. I know that you are bigger men than that. Think of the conditions in your own home. Be men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to the plea of the distinguished and able gentleman from Tennessee, who joins my good friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] in demanding that the House turn down the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee and cut another half billion dollars from the relief bill. Let me suggest that before Members make up their minds to make such a dracstic reduction that they be fully advised as to the effect of such action on the part of this Congress. In the first place, let us bear in mind that if the $1,500,000,000 relief bill is passed that it means a cut in funds available for the W. P. A. next year of approximately one-third under that appropriated for the same purpose during the present year. So far as my State is concerned, I know it cannot take such a drastic and unreasonable cut at this time. If the bill is reduced to $1,000,000,000 it will mean a reduction of 55 percent of those now on the W. P. A., which in my judgment is too unreasonable to consider seriously. We are told that in some sections of the country, like the States of Mississippi, Georgia, and a few other States, where crops were bountiful last year, that the W. P. A. quotas can be cut more than 55 percent. No doubt this is true, and I am glad that the President has the authority to cut the quota in such States or sections of the country to the minimum; but a 55-percent, or even a 25-percent cut in the allocation of funds for the W. P. A. in Oklahoma at this time would be hazardous and would cause many thousands of people to go hungry.

The gentleman from Tennessee, as well as several other speakers, have based the burden of their opposition to giving the President the amount he is asking for in this bill on the grounds that they do not like the W. P. A. Administrator, Mr. Harry Hopkins. In fact, it seems to be a popular pastime today to criticize and condemn Mr. Hopkins. He is held up as a spendthrift who has no regard for the taxpayer. I hold no brief for Mr. Hopkins. I have differed with some of his policies in the past and may differ with him in the future, but none of us can deny that Mr. Hopkins undertook a stupendous task at a time when there were more hungry and unemployed people in the United States than ever before in the history of this Republic and that he has played an important part in helping the President bring order out of chaos. [Applause.]

I cannot help but remind our Republican friends on the other side of the aisle who are so loud and vociferous in their opposition to the pending measure of the unemployment situation in this country on the 4th of March 1933. For 3 long years unemployment, hunger, and starvation had run rampant in the land. Some 16,000,000 men were unemployed and begging for an opportunity to earn a livelihood. That meant that from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 people, including the men, women, and children, were facing hunger and actual starvation. And what did the party then in power do about it? Absolutely nothing except to say that the problem of relief was a local one; that depressions came in cycles; that nothing could be done about the last one; and that prosperity was "Hoovering" around the corner. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Tennessee, who is usually very courteous and for whom I have great respect, said, when I sought to ask him a question, I had been so busy on the Interior Department bill that I did not know what was going on. I am sure the gentleman really intended no disrespect. It is true I have been in charge of the Interior Department appropriation bill, and have been unusually busy for the past 6 weeks with hearings on that measure that was passed by the House yesterday. It is also true that the committee brought in a bill to this House that had the greatest proportionate reduction of any regular appropriation bill during the present session, but the gentleman from Tennessee, who talks so fervently for economy today, joined others in loading down that bill to the tune of some $8,000,000. May I suggest that his votes of yesterday just do not jibe with his present plea for such sudden and drastic economy.

Another statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee, if I understood him correctly, was that Republicans had joined the Democrats in support of the proposed cut in this bill. To prove this contention beyond the peradventure of a doubt, the gentleman told this committee that the Subcommittee on Appropriations that heard the evidence had reported a $1,000,000,000 bill. Now, that sounds convincing; but let us see about it. What are the facts? How many Democrats on that subcommittee which heard the evidence voted to cut the measure one-half billion dollars? Two Democrats on the subcommittee joined all the Republican members. If I am incorrect, I will ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] to correct me now. I repeat, that two Democrats joined the Republican members of that committee, and the Republicans forced that out. Who did the joining?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, if the gentleman means to suggest that the bill was reported out by the Republican members, he knows that is ridiculous on the face of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I made no such suggestion. I was discussing the subcommittee which heard the evidence. I am simply answering the contention of my good friend from Tennessee that Republicans had joined the Democrats, when in fact it is well known that this is a Republican move that a few misguided Democrats have joined.

But getting back to the discussion of this bill. Another reason why I cannot make up my mind to reduce the amount in this bill a half billion dollars at one stroke is the fact I find earmarked in this bill "not to exceed $75,000,000 for the National Youth Administration." That sum is approximately the same amount allocated to the N. Y. A. during the current year. Let me say in this connection that the National Youth Administration has done an outstanding work in the State of Oklahoma and I think in the entire Nation. If you vote today to cut $500,000,000 from this measure, and that should seriously cripple or practically eliminate the splendid, far-reaching, humanitarian work of the National Youth Administration and throw thousands of splendid young men and women back on the bread lines, what is going to be your answer when you go back to your districts? When you strike down these ambitious boys and girls who feel that they have a right to eat, to work, study, and prepare themselves for the future, I am wondering if the fact that you do not like Harry Hopkins, or some W. P. A. director, will be an answer that will satisfy your conscience or the hundreds of thousands of worthy young people of America who have had the opportunity to have their lives reshaped with and by the help of National Youth Administration. [Applause.]

Oh, yes; in the name of economy you propose to strike down the helpless, unemployed men, women, and children who cannot come here today and speak for themselves. In the name of economy you would turn them back on local communities, where they were when the Roosevelt administration came into power. In the name of economy you would throw thousands of young men, boys, and girls on the highways thumbing their way up and down the roads and riding the boxcars looking for jobs they could not find.

Let me say to you I feel that such a move at this time would be the rankest kind of false economy. [Applause.] For every dollar you might save today this Government—either Federal, State, or local—would spend $2 or more combating crime and in enlarging asylums, orphanages, jails, penitentiaries, and eleemosynary institutions. It is up to you to take your choice, but you should do so with your eyes open and not try to delude yourselves into actually believing that you are effecting any real permanent economy.

I cannot help but be reminded that some of the self-admitted leaders on both sides of this aisle who are pleading so fervently for so-called economy today when human lives are at stake have been reckless spenders in the past. Nor will your people soon forget when you vote for such a drastic reduction, a vote which may mean that babies will go without milk and that women and children will be forced to go hungry, that some of you did not hesitate to increase the appropriations for the standing Army more than $25,000,000 over last year, and were enthusiastic supporters of one of the largest naval appropriation bills in the history of this Republic. It is good business, according to these self-admitted economists, to vote for $60,000,000 battleships that will be out of date and useless within a few years, but those of us who plead today for hungry and helpless men, women, and children must be held up as spendthrifts who want to loot the Treasury and bankrupt the Government.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am sorry, but I cannot yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein excerpts from a speech on public spending by a former Member of the House from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, before I became a Member of the House I had the good fortune to become acquainted with the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee who has just preceded me [Mr. MCREYNOLDS], and through him his distinguished colleague the beloved Joe Byrns; and thus was formed two of the warmest and sweetest friendships of my life, friendships with Christian gentlemen, friendships with patriots, friendships with men who had the qualities of statesmenship. About 4 days before his death I had the privilege of taking our late Speaker on a little fishing trip in Virginia, out on a quiet pond surrounded by tall oak trees where there were no telephones, where there were no public problems to oppress him. Coming back that afternoon he told me he had had the happiest day since he had been in Washington that year. He was so happy that he wanted to sing that song that was the favorite of the late Will Rogers, Home on the Range, with its refrain:

"Where seldom is heard a discouraging word
And the skies are not cloudy all day."

For the last 2 years of Joe Byrns' life there were many clouds in the skies for him. That former chairman of our Appropriations Committee discussed with me the fiscal policies of our Nation and expressed his fears of what would ultimately happen unless we found a suitable manner of curtailing public expenditures. That gripping fear that was never absent from his heart helped to carry that statesman to an untimely grave. I am glad to sit here today and hear his colleague and my friend and your friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] give voice to the sentiments that the late Speaker Byrns, I am sure, would have voiced as a man versed in the fiscal affairs of this Nation.

The time has come, and now is here, when we must give serious consideration to the future of our Government with respect to spending and deficit financing.

It is a source of satisfaction to me to note the development in this House of a genuine sentiment for economy. At least, I hope it is genuine; and an opportunity to demonstrate that fact will be given us when we vote on the pending relief resolution. With me an economy program is not a new one. When the $4,800,000,000 relief measure was before the House in 1935, I called attention to the dangers inherent in such a relief program and have lost no opportunity since to advocate the importance and necessity for reducing governmental expenditures. I regret that the full Appropriations Committee has seen fit to override the recommendation of its subcommittee and vote to increase the appropriation carried by the Woodrum resolution by the sum of $500,000,000. I am opposed to that amendment and hope it will be defeated.

In the speech I made on this subject on January 24, 1935—reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD January 24, 1935, pages 925–926—I stated why I would not undertake to speak dogmatically as to "what is safe and what is unsafe" with respect to a national spending program; but after 2 more years of liberal spending, in which the outgo exceeded the income by substantially seven and one-half billion dollars, it seems now to be generally recognized that further deficit financing on such a scale would be both unwise and unsafe.

Last spring the Grim Reaper called to his eternal reward the distinguished chairman of our Appropriations Committee, Mr. Buchanan. I wish he could be here today to remind this House of what he said on February 5, 1934, concerning the first large relief appropriation of $950,000,000. On that occasion Mr. Buchanan said:

> Mr. Speaker, to those who advocate increased appropriations over this $950,000,000, let me say that relief in a nation the size of ours is like a rapacious maw. It would absorb every dollar you appropriated, whether it was one billion or five billion dollars. We must conduct this relief project with a discriminating judgment, so we will have just enough money to relieve the actual necessities and the real suffering of our people.

I wish to emphasize his statement, "We must conduct this relief project with a discriminating judgment."

I am fully convinced that my distinguished colleague from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is as conversant with the operations of the various relief agencies of the Government as any Member of this House, and when he and a majority of his subcommittee reports that $1,000,000,000 is enough money to relieve the actual necessities and the real suffering of our people, we would not be exercising a discriminating judgment to increase his estimate by 50 percent.

Our public debt now stands at approximately $35,000,000,000, a sum as impossible to visualize as the size and distance of the sun. It will help us to visualize the magnitude of that debt if we state it in terms of per-capita debt and indicate the amount of increase. Prior to the World War our national debt was only $13 for each man, woman, and child. War expenses carried that per capita to $240. Then followed 10 very prosperous years during which the per-capita debt was reduced to $130. Then we had a great depression, during which we have increased our national debt until it now amounts to $270 for each man, woman, and child. For the average family of four that amounts to a debt of $1,080 per family, exclusive of the bonded debt of States and political subdivisions.

We Democrats celebrated last November the end of the depression and took credit for that accomplishment. In 1933 we said that 1926 was a normal year and set that as our recovery objective. That objective has been reached. We adopted deficit financing as a depression policy—to prime the recovery pump with borrowed money. If we continue deficit financing beyond the depression, it ceases to be a controlled policy and becomes a drifting with the current, leading ultimately to financial shoals.

Prof. S. H. Slichter recently said:

> Deficit financing assumes that it is politically possible for the Government to take off emergency expenditures as business improves. This presupposes effective administrative and political controls on public spending. The United States is noteworthy, however, for the absence of such controls.

Tom Paine, who was noted for his skepticism, said that credit is suspicion gone to sleep. Our Government enjoys good credit because the people have faith in the soundness of Government obligations. Destroy that faith through loose fiscal policies and arouse suspicion and the Government's credit is gone. Already there are straws to show how the wind blows. Interest rates are beginning to rise. For the past month certain large city banks have been quietly selling Government bonds and taking the present loss on them in preference to what may later be a still larger loss. This trend has alarmed both the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury. For the 1936 Budget the Secretary of the Treasury had to finance a deficit of about four and three-quarters billions. For the current Budget he will have to finance a deficit of about three billions. He appealed to the President for a balanced Budget for the fiscal year commencing next July. The President submitted a Budget of $6,157,999,000 exclusive of relief. At that time prospective receipts were estimated at $7,293,000,000. That estimate was 77.2 percent more than the actual receipts for the fiscal year of 1936. We now know that estimate was too high by six hundred million or more. If we adopt the committee amendment today and the pending nonmilitary War Department bill, our House appropriations for the 1938 Budget will then amount to $7,375,776,000, exceeding the Budget by $1,117,000,000, with more appropriations still to come, including the last deficiency bill. If we keep this relief appropriation to a billion dollars, the Budget will still not be balanced, but the action will be reassuring to the business and financial world as indicating that we have come to grips with our biggest spending problem and have shown a determination to master it and not let it master us. We will still have a fiscal policy in which the country can have faith.

What the country wants to know is not so much whether the 1938 Budget will balance to the penny, but whether or not from now on the Congress is going to spend "with a discriminating judgment." Robert Browning tells of a picture by the master painter Raphael being scrutinized by the perfect technician Andrea del Sarto. Del Sarto said:

> That arm is wrongly put * * * its soul is right; he means right—that, a child may understand.

Do we mean well with respect to a sound fiscal policy, is our heart right with respect to preserving the faith and credit of the Government, or will we continue to appropriate without discrimination, without knowing where the money is coming from, and without being willing to impose the additional taxes necessary to finance such expenditures?

On April 19 last, our distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] fully discussed the inflation dangers incident to a continuation of deficit financing. I invite your attention to what he said on that occasion. I know of no sensible man who intentionally desires to plunge us into inflation. Assuming that to be true we have two alternatives, one to bring expenditures within receipts, or increase receipts by additional taxation. Our choice of those alternatives will be made today, and I for one choose the first alternative, namely, to reduce expenditures.

Let no Member of this House who represents a farming constituency or a laboring constituency that does not file income-tax returns delude himself into thinking that on such account his constituency would not share in the burden of increased taxation. Through the rapidly mounting cost of living, every consumer in the United States is now sharing in our present tax burden. Income taxes for the fiscal year of 1938 to be paid primarily by corporations are estimated at $3,365,300,000. Is anyone so foolish as to assume that these corporations will absorb that tax or absorb additional income taxes if levied upon them next year? We all know that corporations must include taxes as an item of cost of doing business and add that cost to the price of the finished article. Nothing, in my opinion, can more greatly hamper the opportunity of business to enlarge and increase private employment than a crushing tax burden. And we have found no solution of our current economic problems if we assume that the National Government must permanently furnish employment or support for two or three million nongovernmental workers in addition to the more than 800,000 on the regular civil service and non-civil-service rolls.

I wish every Member of this House would reread the message sent to the Congress by President Cleveland during the depression of 1893, in which he described the burden to be placed upon agriculture and labor by an unsound fiscal policy. The country weathered that financial storm because it followed the sound advice of Mr. Cleveland. It would likewise be helpful to us if we could become imbued with the spirit of some of the leaders of this House in the depression period following the War between the States. In particular I have in mind the year 1876, when there was so much unemployment and great hardship and suffering among the people. Here is what a distinguished statesman from Indiana, Hon. William S. Holman, who won the sobriquet of "watchdog of the Treasury", said on February 7, 1876:

> • • • It is impossible at this time to approach any bill appropriating money without considering in some degree at least the present condition of public affairs and the extent to which efforts should be made to reduce the expenditures of the Government. A very great statesman who had spent a long lifetime in the public service, Thomas H. Benton, in speaking near the close of his career of the growth of our Federal expenditures at the time when the expenditures of the Government had reached about $60,000,000, uses the following language, which I quote from the great work of his later years:
> "At the same time it is the opinion of this writer that a practical man, acquainted with the objects for which the Federal Government was created and familiar with its financial working from the time our fathers put it into operation, could take his pen and cross out nearly the one-half of these sixty-odd millions, and leave the Government in full vigor for all its proper objects, and more pure by reducing the number of those who live upon the substance of the people."
>
> Since that was written the ordinary expenditures of this Government have expanded beyond $60,000,000 per annum and reached the present more enormous sum of $179,166,209.90 for the ordinary administration of our public affairs, independent of the public debt.
>
> This Capital, sir, is not the best point perhaps for deliberation upon the subjects that closely concern the industries of our people and the weight that rests upon them. We are here in the midst of a city where vast expenditures of money are made by the Government in countless forms, and the depression and stagnation of business in every field of industry, the want and destitution of multitudes of laboring men unable to keep the wolf from the door because labor cannot find employment, the actual suffering among our people for want of food and raiment are less prominent in this Capital than perhaps anywhere else; and for that reason it is well to consider the expression of opinion which comes up to us daily through the public press as indicating the judgment of the country upon the absolute necessity of severe and positive retrenchment in expenditures of Government. We are assured, sir, that the people are absolutely unable to meet the present burden of taxation. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. Hale], in discussing the Military Academy bill, spoke very well and clearly of the retrenchments which have been made during the last 2 years; and he remarked cautiously—and his experience is such as justifies confidence in his opinion—that still further retrenchment might be made; and yet I think the honorable gentleman was rather too cautious and inclined to place too much stress upon the assumption that further retrenchment would be found more difficult, as the field for retrenchment had been already severely gleaned, for, in fact, no discretion is left us. We must reduce the burdens that rest upon the country. We must reduce the expenditures heavily, and we can without impairing the efficiency of any function of government. I speak in moderation when I say that our form of government is in peril. Without reference to the public debt of those expenditures which inevitably resulted from the war, excepting the pension list, the cost of government is alarming. In the years 1860 and 1861, the first years of Mr. Lincoln's administration, the appropriations reached little beyond $62,000,000. In 1869 and 1870, with the Army and Navy larger than they now are, the expenditures of the Government had been reduced to $164,658,273.84, and in 1871–72 they were reduced to $153,037,346.15; and yet, instead of a continued reduction, as the country justly expected, for the present fiscal year the appropriations reach $179,166,209.90. The highest point reached since 1869 was in 1873–74, when the enormous sum of $194,217,210.27 was expended. I append the table of the expenditures, including 1860–61 and omitting the years of the war and the years immediately succeeding, that the expenditures in times of peace may be compared with those expenditures, including pensions but excluding the public debt.
> In 1871–72 the expenditures were, as I have said, reduced to $153,037,346.15, but, unhappily, the appropriation for the present fiscal year reached $179,166,209.90, and the estimates for the next year are $180,516,972.76, so that it must be borne in mind that, after the reduction made under the influence of the public vigilance and pressure demanding economy, yet the appropriations for the present fiscal year, made by the last Congress, reached the sum I have named; and yet, Mr. Chairman, no gentleman can assert that the Government was more efficiently administered in 1873–74, with over one hundred and ninety-four millions, than in 1871–72, with little over one hundred and fifty-three millions. Mr. Benton was certainly right in his theory. In the meantime the capacity of the country to bear heavy taxation has been greatly diminished, for year by year oppressive taxation is exhausting the productive energies of the country.
> Sir, we must resist this tendency to increase expenditures, go back along the track we have traveled. It is not now, as it has been at some periods, a matter which might or might not arrest the attention of Members of the House. It comes in a form that Congress cannot evade. Through the unfortunate example of the General Government throughout the country the local expenditures and indebtedness have reached an alarming magnitude. States, counties, townships, cities, towns, and villages have followed the perilous example until every industry staggers under the load of Federal and local taxation, and it is positively asserted that the aggregate taxation exceeds the products of the industries of the country. No nation can stand that. I do not assert that Congress is responsible for the general tendency to extravagance and profligate expenditure throughout the country in local government, but it must be admitted that the example set by the National Legislature has contributed largely to that unfortunate result, and a great example set by the Federal Government of severe frugality cannot fail to check the present fatal tendency, and it must be checked or universal bankruptcy and dishonor must follow. It was our boast through the first three-quarters of the first century of our Government that a republic was the most frugal, economical, and purest of Governments, simplicity, frugality, and virtue its sure foundations. We are in peril that it shall be charged that a government of the people is liable to be more profligate of expenditure and the people more oppressed by taxation than in governments where the people are not the masters. Will any representative of the people consent that that shall be possible? • • •
> I trust that such a statement cannot much longer be made with any approach to truth, and I indulge in the hope and belief that both the great political parties of the country, as represented in this House, in considering the appropriation bills which will come up during the present session of Congress, will manifest a determination that these heavy expenditures shall be heavily reduced.

I repeat the hope expressed at that time by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that "the present session of Congress will manifest a determination that these heavy expenditures shall be heavily reduced." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] 5 minutes.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I think it will be generally conceded that the President has done a most effective work in saving this country in a great crisis. In my judgment it now behooves us all so to restrict expenditures under emergency measures and so to make those measures temporary in their operation that we may not be plunged into the depths of another depression and have no such sources of emergency aid available to combat it. I have been impressed with the President's very recent admonitions stressing the importance of economy at this session of the Congress. During the last few years the conditions of business in this country have been very greatly improved, and it seems to me imperative now to get the Government back to its normal functioning.

It has been a month since the President sent his letter to the Congress suggesting that a billion and one-half dollars be provided for relief. With the unexpended balances for such purpose still available, there seems no necessity for the present measure to carry that full amount. Provision need only be made for the sum which would bring the funds to be used to the figure the President suggested. Since sending that letter he has impressed upon us further the importance of economy in appropriations and has attested his absolute sincerity in this regard by vetoing an appropriation for his own State which, in comparison with the money here proposed, is relatively inconsequential.

One of the elements which seems to bring about a depression is the lack of confidence which results from serious impairment of the Government's credit. What is the present situation in this regard? We observe in the daily quotations that securities of the Government have fallen materially in their market value in the last few months and some of them are now below par. Surely it is incumbent upon us to stop the impairment of the Nation's credit. If continued, it may prove a step toward another crisis. How can we avoid it? There seems but one way and that is to stop appropriating large sums of money that we do not have and have no reasonable prospect of getting any time soon. [Applause.] We can begin practicing the economy that is preached, we can effect savings and apply them to our indebtedness, and thus decrease our obligations and enhance our credit.

The idea must be dissipated in this country that there is in Washington some mythical Federal grab bag into which we can reach and pull out financial favors to bestow. Except for about $1,000,000,000 that we get through customs duties and miscellaneous receipts, nothing goes into that bag except what the people themselves put in it. And all the people put it there. Oh, we hear a great deal of idle talk to the effect that we should get the money for extravagant expenditure from the millionaires of the country. Any well-informed person knows that if through our revenue laws we should take for the Treasury every cent of the income of every millionaire in our land the receipts would suffice to run the Government but a very short time. The money taken in taxes necessarily comes from men and women of all classes and conditions. Some of their contributions are made without their knowing it. Every time they take a smoke or go to a show or buy gasoline or attend a baseball or football game, and so forth, they are putting some money into the Treasury. We can take out only what all the people put in.

And so, except for the $1,000,000,000 I have mentioned, we necessarily have to get our revenues inside the country. It comes from all the people. The only way to increase those revenues is to stimulate the sources which furnish them. That requires the successful functioning of all kinds of business and agriculture and industry of every character. They must operate successfully if the necessary money is to be available. They are the agencies furnishing employment to every kind of labor. So business and labor are mutually dependent in the prosperity that assures revenue.

A revenue law was enacted in the last Congress with the optimistic prediction that it would greatly increase Federal revenues. As a matter of fact, the receipts this year have been far below such glowing expectations. It is very evident that this law requires some amendment and modification. Especially has it handicapped small business concerns. Business, large and small, cannot grow and expand and afford employment for greater numbers of our people unless it can operate with some feeling of certainty and security. Without such confidence commerce in its various ramifications can hardly be expected to move forward.

There is an enlightening incident recorded in Holy Writ with reference to the prophet Elijah who had foretold a period of famine and drought. By divine command he betook himself to a sheltered place and was fed by the ravens and took his water to drink from the brook Cherith. The Scriptures tell us that it came to pass after a while that the brook dried up. I want to impress it upon your attention that unless agriculture and industry and all other sources of employment can operate with relative certainty and confidence which will enable them to function normally and enjoy a logical growth, the brook which is the source of our Federal revenues may finally dry up. It behooves us to give due heed to this admonition of economy from the President.

Thus far our country has made wonderful strides of recovery under this administration. Assured of such confidence and certainty, the people will press forward in all their labors to even greater heights. The former need for large appropriations for emergency purposes does not exist. And it is very evident that substantial reductions can be made in the administrative expenses of various governmental agencies in this field. They are entirely too great. We have even heard accusations on this floor of absolute racketeering. Surely such evils of this character as may exist can be corrected.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to two amendments I propose to offer. In my judgment, their adoption will reduce materially the amount necessary to see that proper relief is afforded. The first one is as follows, and the suggestion contained in it was referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS] in his remarks:

On page 3, line 18, after the word "determine", insert the following: "Provided, That no agricultural laborer and no unskilled laborer who refuses or has refused an offer of private employment paying as much or more in compensation for such work as such person has received or could receive under the relief herein provided, and who is capable of performing such work, shall be eligible for relief hereunder for the period such private employment or any similar subsequent offer of such employment would be available: And provided further, That any person who performs such private employment shall at the expiration thereof be entitled to an immediate resumption of his previously existing employment status on the work relief authorized by this act."

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Not for the present. I wish first to complete some statements I have in mind.

Mr. DINGELL. I would like to ask one question.

Mr. LANHAM. I should like to proceed. If I have time remaining when I have finished my statement I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, in many sections of this country it is absolutely impossible when the time comes for the working or harvesting of crops for the farmers to get laborers to go into their fields, because so many who otherwise would be so employed can get practically as much from the Government sitting around and doing nothing on relief. The same applies with reference to employment of domestic servants.

This amendment I shall propose does not apply to skilled labor because, if it did, it might give employers an opportunity to employ skilled laborers at less than the prevailing rates of pay their fellow workers in similar fields were receiving. This proposal refers only to agricultural laborers and unskilled laborers. It provides that when they are offered work which pays as much as or more than they are getting on relief, they must accept it if they are able to perform the work or else be dropped from governmental relief for the time such employment would be available. It provides, further, for the resumption of their relief status when such employment is ended. This is an item of very proper economy that we may wisely accept.

I propose to offer another amendment that will save millions of dollars for the taxpayers. It is as follows: "On page

5, line 4, after the word 'aliens', strike out the following: 'illegally within the limits of the continental United States', and on page 5, line 7, after the word 'that', strike out the word 'such.'"

In other words, this amendment, if adopted, would make none of this relief money available to aliens in this country. [Applause.]

How many aliens are there in this country receiving such bounty? I do not know, and you do not know, and it is difficult to find out from any agency of the Government, but I am advised that about a year ago the statement was made and undisputed that 650,000 aliens were receiving such relief.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Let me proceed, and if I have time I shall be glad to yield. I want to finish this statement.

Maybe some of you can think of reasons why we ought to give money which we take from hard-working American taxpayers to those who are not citizens of this country, but I must confess I cannot. I know the argument that is usually made. It is said, "Well, yes; but some of these people have children who were born in this country. These children are citizens, and we must not discriminate against them." Ah, my friends, any man who has lived in this country long enough to rear a family and who is not sufficiently in sympathy with it and its institutions to become a citizen has no right to expect us to burden further the taxpayers of America to put money in his pocket. [Applause.]

When this amendment is submitted I should like to hear some gentleman who is going to oppose it tell us how many millions of dollars foreign countries are appropriating to take care of needy Americans abroad. Why, there has not even been an offer to reduce by such payments the large debts they owe us.

The rumor has persisted—I cannot vouch for its accuracy, but I think the Committee on Appropriations or some other appropriate committee should investigate it—that even in the Washington offices of some of the relief agencies men have been employed and are now employed in rather responsible and lucrative positions who, were aliens when they were so employed and some of whom are aliens today. I think that in getting out of depression and distress it is high time that we give the available work to our own American citizens.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. For just a brief question.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does not the gentleman know as a matter of fact that most of these aliens are not citizens, not because they do not want to become citizens, but because of the restrictions which our naturalization laws put upon them?

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, I think that is a little farfetched. I do not know of any alien legally in this country who does not have rather abundant opportunity, if he so desires, to become a naturalized citizen. I am sorry I cannot yield further, because I wish to discuss one or two other matters.

Mr. Chairman, the quotation I am about to make was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD anew 2 or 3 years ago by the gentleman from North Carolina, our good friend, Major BULWINKLE. Except for a little difference in the phraseology of the times, what better description have you heard or read of our recent depression at its lowest ebb than is found in the following words?

> In casting our eyes around us, the most prominent circumstance which fixes our attention and challenges our deepest regret is the general distress which pervades the whole country. It is forced upon us by numerous facts of the most incontestable character. It is indicated by the diminished exports of native produce; by the depressed and reduced state of our foreign navigation; by our diminished commerce; by successive unthreshed crops of grain, perishing in our barns and barnyards for the want of a market; by the alarming diminution of the circulation medium; by the numerous bankruptcies, not limited to the trading classes but extending to all orders of society; by a universal complaint of the want of employment, and a consequent reduction of the wages of labor; by the ravenous pursuit after public situations, not for the sake of their honors and the performance of their public duties, but as a means of private subsistence: by the reluctant resort to the perilous use of paper money; by the intervention of legislation in the delicate relation between debtor and creditor; and, above all, by the low and depressed state of the value of almost every description of the whole mass of the property of the Nation, which has, on an average, sunk not less than about 50 percent within a few years. This distress pervades every part of the Union, every class of society; all feel it, though it may be felt at different places in different degrees.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, this description, which fits so accurately our recent depression, was uttered in the House of Representatives almost 115 years ago by Henry Clay. We have passed through approximately 150 years of our national existence, and we have had many crises and panics besides the one to which Mr. Clay referred. The significant fact is that we have gone through them all successfully without even resorting to numerous similar measures of emergency. Can we contend that it is now necessary, after 150 years of such history, to carry on indefinitely this matter of handing out the taxpayers' money to aliens from other lands and to many who are averse to work even in the periods of our greatest prosperity? That there is some need of relief cannot be denied, however we may debate the proper source of supply to meet it, but it behooves us to avoid by every possible safeguard any permanent weakening of the stamina and self-reliance of the American people. Let us pause and ask ourselves this question: Is it necessary now, with business rapidly recovering and asking only that certainty and confidence which will assure its continued growth and prosperity, to appropriate for this so-called purpose of relief as much of the money derived from the taxpayers of the Nation as was required to meet the total expenses of our Government a quarter of a century ago? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss amounts today. I am, rather, going to discuss the question of administration and the method of administering relief.

I have introduced a bill in the nature of a substitute for the resolution you are considering today. You will find it printed in the Appendix of the RECORD, if you care to examine it in detail, or, should you wish to send for a copy of the bill, it is H. R. 7000. It is my purpose to offer this bill under the 5-minute rule, after the reading of the first section. At that time the question of the amount to go in this bill will have been decided by the committee, so my substitute will carry the amount upon which the committee has decided.

The philosophy behind my suggested proposal is the same philosophy we all know and understand so well in regard to Federal aid for roads. The philosophy is that Federal aid should be granted to States, but each State is required to responsibly administer its own job. This is based on the theory that the manner of doing the best job may differ in each State. Behind the bill is also the philosophy that we must eventually begin to get rid of this huge bureaucracy we are building up here in Washington. If we do not start to liquidate Mr. Hopkins and his organization, they will be on our necks forever.

I have no personal disagreement with Mr. Hopkins. Under the conditions he may have done as well as anyone else could have done, but the moment you start building up a huge bureaucracy centered in Washington to administer relief it is going to become very difficult to get rid of it and eventually liquidate it. For example, I believe that money given to the States and administered by the States for relief will go much further than money given to a central bureaucracy here in Washington.

It has been stated in our Committee on Appropriations that the overhead of Mr. Hopkins for bookkeeping alone is over $100,000,000. I believe the overhead Mr. Hopkins is carrying today is well over $250,000,000. My proposal looks to providing a larger percentage of the relief dollar to those who are on relief and not to those who administer relief.

Therefore, I believe that whatever amount is agreed upon today by the House that amount will go further if given to the States. My proposal does not attempt to cut down the amount of relief that this Congress may appropriate, but it does recognize the fact that if the States themselves administer relief, home responsibility will police the relief rolls, and a greater percentage of the relief dollar will reach those in actual want.

My proposal sets up a Federal bipartisan board of three to assist the President in making the allocations to the States along certain well-recognized principles, such as need, size, population, and so forth. The money is then turned over to the States and they are required to set up bipartisan boards in each State to administer these relief funds.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BEITER. Do the States have to match the funds contributed by the Federal Government under the gentleman's proposal?

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that. My proposal is based upon the fact that each State must put up 25 cents for every 75 cents the Federal Government puts up.

Mr. BEITER. It is my understanding that when this bill reaches the Senate they propose a somewhat similar amendment, but they are going to require the States to put up 50 cents for every 50 cents contributed by the Federal Government.

Mr. BACON. I think, perhaps, eventually the States should put up 50 cents for each 50 cents that the Federal Government puts up, but I have been more liberal in my proposal. My proposal is that the States must put up 25 cents for every 75 cents put up by the Federal Government, and in this way more money will be available for those on relief than under the proposal you have before you today, where no State contribution is required whatever.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LAMBETH. Is there anything in the hearings to show that the present distributions to the States have any relation to their own ability to contribute?

Mr. BACON. Nothing whatsoever.

Mr. LAMBETH. Do not those contributions range from 7 to 28 percent by the different States?

Mr. BACON. There is no question about that.

Mr. LAMBETH. And have no relation to their financial resources or tax load at the present time?

Mr. BACON. That is correct.

Mr. LAMBETH. I find from the hearings that North Carolina is contributing 19 percent against a national average of 13 percent, although we have one of the heaviest bonded debts of any State of the United States and one of the highest rates of per-capita taxation. Such discriminations are indefensible. The time has come for Congress to lay down more definite policies as to allocations among the States and contributions by the sponsors, regardless of the amount of the appropriations.

Mr. BACON. I urge this proposal in the full sincerity of idea and belief that its plan will win the approbation and support of all classes, with one exception—the little and selfish politician, and his crowd, who see in the present system a golden opportunity to build up political power.

While presented as a substitute for the proposal before us, I urge its consideration especially upon those who feel, like I do, that the time has come to liquidate the Federal Government's complete control of the relief system. Shall the present bureaucracy continue until the last man is off relief? Shall all the present duplicated effort, waste, exploitation, and politics in relief carry on until the Federal Government itself winds up the business?

The transition of State control and administration of relief to Federal regulation was gradual and was compelled because of the conditions of the times. Federal control was undertaken in its entirety on the claim that the States were unable to meet the problem; that many of them were practically bankrupt.

But now conditions have changed. If the claim of returned prosperity can be sustained why should there be delay in liquidating Federal control of the entire relief machinery? And why should the States not contribute a definite percentage of the relief expenditures?

When are we going to make the start of turning back relief to where it belongs? I earnestly submit that in all good conscience, now is the time. Surely the several States know their respective relief problems by this time; surely they must have profited by their knowledge of Federal administration, as to both the good it has brought and the harm it has done.

I do not purpose simply throwing back the relief problem to the States and with a shrug of the shoulder to tell them, "Here, take it back; the Federal Government has no further interest in helping you to sustain your responsibility!" Not by any means.

My proposal, please remember, accepts the President's estimate that $1,500,000,000 will be needed for relief during the next year. But to it is coupled the requirement that each State bear 25 percent of the relief cost. So there will be no heartless dumping of the relief problem on the States; instead, the Federal Government will continue to furnish the backlog for relief expenditures through the huge sum of a billion and a half dollars.

I do not know whether the Federal contribution of $1,500,000,000 for relief during the next year is too much, or even too little. And not knowing, I cannot conscientiously criticize the amount. No basis for an intelligent opinion on what is really required has been submitted to us, nor have any facts been presented by the administration as to what resources the various States could be expected to make available in the way of State and local cooperation. None of us know, although we have tried to get the information. We do not know in realistic terms what our unemployment situation is because of the administration's refusal to have an unemployment census conducted. The administration alone claims full knowledge of the problem, and I fail to see how we can do anything other than to go along with the President's guess as to what is necessary. Simply to cut the relief item in a captious or arbitrary way to show a saving would be undertaking a dangerous gamble in the provision of adequate relief that I am unwilling to risk.

The philosophy of this bill, as I have mentioned, is to reinvigorate local consciousness of the local relief problem; to provide local direction through the establishment of safeguards against waste which would naturally be set up through the free flow of neighborhood opinion; and to depend on local policing and local responsibility to do a better job than is being done today.

There is nothing in this proposal that urges direct relief as against work relief; there is nothing in it that would persuade or dictate any preference of administration as to the methods of affording relief. That would be left to the States, and they would set up the precise sort of relief machinery that best met their needs, and they would have ample funds because the backlog of Federal aid would be there in the full measure that the President himself believes is necessary.

Under my proposal politics in relief would be dealt a fatal blow. It is politics that has damned and will continue to damn the present relief administration unless corrective steps are taken. The administration has done nothing to meet the Nation-wide acceptance that politics play a large part in relief administration. It has insisted that it be represented, both here in Washington and in the field, by no one except its own appointees. And in the majority of cases we know that they have been all political appointees, faithful to the natural sense of gratitude.

The Gallup poll, as you know, showed conclusively that the people as a whole believe that politics are tightly linked to the administration of the relief dollar. And if that poll is representative of country-wide opinion it is obvious that public confidence in the relief system is weakened accordingly.

The set-up of the bipartisan Federal board under my proposal, with bipartisan State boards and subordinate boards of like character, could be expected greatly to restore public confidence and reinstill the responsible interest that the people everywhere should feel in the problem. Now they are helpless and are bogged down by a sense of futility that any appeal they might make to effect better conditions can get nowhere; that Washington will do as it pleases, anyway; and that there is no use in their worrying about the problem any longer.

Decentralization of the relief machinery among the various States may not cast out all politics, but the exceptions will become so noticeable as to focus public attention. The provision for political minority representation on every board would meet the custom in the set-up of all manners of other commissions and boards and agencies. There is only one theory for minority representation in the blunt sense, and that is that minority representation on any commission or agency is demanded in the public interest. Why should the relief administration, where the greatest charge of politics lodges, be without the benefit of minority representation and policing?

Under a bipartisan set-up it is obvious that politics could not continue to move as boldly as in the past. Minority representation would have its outlet to the public, and so administration of relief would be brought out into the open.

There is no partisan interest to be served by my plan. None is intended. Republicans cannot profit, for it is obvious that under a Federal board and under the various State boards that would be set up the parties now in power would have majority representation. There would be no gain for any type of partisan; the only gainers would be the people themselves, those on relief and those who are helping to sustain them.

I leave this plea with you, that you consider this proposal on its merits, and that you hold no reservation of any kind that it is prompted by any political or partisan considerations.

Its whole philosophy rests on the idea of so regearing the relief machinery that politics can be effectively removed where its clogs are present; State responsibility for money aid and administration definitely established, looking to the ultimate end of liquidating Federal control of relief—all to the primary objective of making the taxpayers' dollar give the most in real relief, with no pap to any politician or group, no waste suffering any person on relief, and nothing left undone to bring relief administration under the best management possible.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, yesterday in this House in direct contrast to the urge for economy we had a demonstration of loyalty that was the admiration of all those who recognize the true sense of the word, and it was particularly fitting that this loyalty was extended in behalf of none other than the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, our beloved friend and patriarch of the House, ROBERT DOUGHTON.

Today as this emergency relief appropriation bill comes before the House I am wondering to just what degree the membership of this body will regard the loyalty that should be theirs to their constituency back home. I am wondering whether the great word "economy" is to find its first fitting place when it operates against the poor of this country. [Applause.] I am wondering if we are taking into consideration the effect our action may have upon the labor market of this Nation. I am wondering just what concern this body has regarding the veteran who is 40 or over and finds himself unemployed. I am wondering just what we think about the wives and children of the most helpless class in this Nation—those on the W. P. A., those whom we would strike today under the waving banner of economy. [Applause.]

I want the membership of this House to remember the days when most of us came here, when these same unfortunates had been driven down into the mire of despair by those who preceded us in the conduct of the Government of this country. Are we to walk out on them now? I leave that question with you. Will you walk out on your leaders today? Will you walk out on the members of the Appropriations Committee, who have considered this matter? The appropriation of $1,500,000,000 recommended by the committee amendment is the sum desired for relief of the most underprivileged, unorganized class in this Nation. Think it over seriously before you vote, and remember that you are accountable to all the people of this Nation, even to "the least of them." [Applause.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this House is intent on making an appropriation. The only difference is that one group wants $3,000,000,000, another group a billion and a half dollars, another group a billion dollars, and another group $600,000,000. It reminds me of the boy that described his lost dog to the police and told them that he had a black spot on him about as big as a dollar, a dollar and a half, or two dollars.

The April 3 issue of the Saturday Evening Post carried an article that stated:

> Each W. P. A. dollar is divided into 61 cents for the reliefer and 39 cents for overhead.

This may or may not be correct. I am disposed to suspect statements in the Post of being inoculated with a disease that we Democrats have in recent years made very prevalent—political propaganda. But whether the statement be right or wrong, certain it is that the spread between the cost per man to the taxpayer and what the man receives is far too great. The cost to the taxpayer per man per year, according to the testimony of Mr. Hopkins in the hearings, is $804 plus 3.6 percent for overhead, plus $9.30 per man per month for material. Mr. Hopkins considers as overhead only the Washington office in his percentage basis. These items add up a total of $944.40 per man per year, and Mr. Hopkins, in a letter to me dated May 11, says the man actually gets $660 per year. This is a spread of $284.40 between the man on relief and the taxpayer. Leave out the material cost and you still have a spread of $172.80, or 20 percent per man-unit, for dispensing the money. It costs the taxpayer $172.80 to have $660 transferred from the blank check Congress has given Mr. Hopkins to the man on relief.

This bill is not in reality a bill for the benefit of the needy. This is a bill to relieve the taxpayer of his money for the benefit of the people who are not needy—for the benefit of those who receive the $172.80 spread. They are the profiteers of relief. And we do not confine the benefit of either the $660 or of this 20-percent spread to citizens. While tax-paying citizens suffer from either high taxes or the pride that keeps them off relief, we carry on our relief rolls 120,000 aliens. We carry aliens in our most important nonrelief positions under Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins has employed from this relief money, that we tell the people we are using for the needy and destitute, Gertrude Berta Greig, at a salary of $2,300 per year, as a research assistant in the Works Progress Administration. The name means nothing to you, but the fact that she was a citizen of Britain when employed should mean something. The Works Progress Administration employed her on December 15, 1933, at a salary of $1,800 per year, and on July 16, 1935, raised her pay to $2,300. She never filed her petition for citizenship until May 28, 1936, two years and a half after she had gone on Mr. Hopkins' pay roll as an official of his administration. She was born in England in 1911. Mr. Hopkins could not find a qualified girl in all the 120,000,000 of our citizens of the United States, so was forced to employ this 22-year-old British subject to do her part in making up the 20-percent spread. Mr. Hopkins has another 28-year-old research assistant employed at a salary of $3,000 per year in January 1935. He was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, and although he entered this country at Detroit in 1925, he never thought enough of it to file his declaration of intention to become a citizen until May 10, 1935, 5 months after he had started drawing his nonrelief salary from the Works Progress Administration. With all of the unemployed graduates, teachers, and accountants who are citizens of the United States, Mr. Hopkins was forced to use this citizen of Denmark, Mr. Karl Edward Jensen, to receive $3,000 per year of the Administration's spread. This is where part of your relief money goes.

And we have Berta Asch, at a salary of $3,200 a year, who was employed on June 6, 1935, as an associate research economist with the Resettlement Administration. She was born in Hamburg, Germany in 1902 and entered the United States at St. Albans, Vt., October 15, 1935. You will note that she was on the pay roll of the Resettlement Administration 4 months and 9 days before she officially entered the United States, and she filed her declaration October 16, 1935, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. She must have come from Vermont to Washington by special airplane to make it here in time to get into the court on the 16th. And that is where some of your relief money goes.

It goes to create a swivel chair job for Berta Asch, a citizen of Hamburg, Germany. There are plenty of other cases. I have several typewritten pages here of the names and histories. If you care to investigate, you can get them all. You have a right to know who gets the money you are giving Mr. Hopkins in this billion and a half blank check.

On May 7 the national debt reached an all-time high. It is so immense that it would require the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to work at top speed for 10½ years to print enough $1 bills to pay it. The national debt today is $271 for every man, woman, and child, and in that count is 10,000,000 unemployed. It is $1,355 for every family of five. On May 7 it was $13,000,000 more than the President estimated at the beginning of this session that it would be on the 30th of June. We are borrowing $50,000,000 a week and will continue to do so to the end of the fiscal year.

This week I had women in my office from the State of New York. They said they were members of the women's brigade of the Workers' Alliance. They wanted more and better relief. They wanted me to vote for $3,000,000,000 for relief. I asked them where we would get the three billion, and they said, "Tax the rich." I wonder just who the rich are. They said, "Those who have money." Everyone who works and earns his money. Therefore, they mean tax everyone except those on relief. Penalize a man for not going on relief. How many will stay off relief under such a system? If we are to be rewarded for going on relief by being tax exempt, who will be left to be taxed? This is the attitude of the women's brigade of the Workers' Alliance. They are on relief. They are on Mr. Hopkins' pay roll, and yet they have sufficient funds to travel from New York to Washington and maintain themselves here while they lobby Congressmen to tax the people who work and obtain from them $3,000,000,000 for the benefit of those whom they would make free from taxes. These ladies threatened to defeat me in the next election. They have told some of you other gentlemen the same thing. Opposition of those who are on the public pay roll is a fearsome thing to face in an election. But it will be more fearsome when you face the ones who work and must be taxed. I wonder if it will not be more terrible when you place on the people a Federal sales tax to make up this money. When you place a tax on fuel oil. When you lower the exemption on Federal income tax and increase the rate on those in the lower brackets. You are not going to do it until next year, so you let next year take care of itself. But next year is coming, and you must face it then. The days when you can delay it grow fewer all the time.

You say recovery is here. If recovery is here, why spend this money for relief? If recovery is here, you do not need this relief money. If recovery is not here, then the $9,000,000,000 you have already spent is money thrown away and wasted, and it is time for us to try another system. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that insofar as relief is concerned we are in the position of a man who has a vicious dog by the tail—he cannot continue to hold it because his strength is giving out, and he cannot let it loose because it will bite him.

Prior to August 1, 1935, relief was administered for 26 months by local control. The Government granted this money to the States and the States distributed it by and with the advice of local authorities in the communities. Under that system conducted by Mr. Ickes the average cost for the 26 months in my district of seven counties was $57,021.67 per month. Under that system the prevailing rate of wage was paid. In these same seven counties in Indiana under Mr. Hopkins the W. P. A. system is paying only the security wage, and yet there is 20 percent administrative spread, directed by alien economists, and the average cost per month for 9 months was $148,573.76, or almost three times the average monthly cost of the other system, and yet less beneficial results to recovery generally.

I have called the attention of the House on other occasions to the fact that relief should only be a temporary expedient, to aid men to return to work in private employment. It should never be a permanent institution. To give men something makes them slaves to the giver, under obligation to him who is the dispenser of favors. To work for what they receive at a prevailing wage makes a race of strong, noble, and independent men. If our relief system is not providing work in private industry, it is a failure. Relief work at a security wage cannot benefit private industry. It can only tax industry to provide a dole under the name of work relief.

The President on Wednesday sent a message to the House vetoing a bill, and in that message he stated Congress by the bill was guilty of "an unconstitutional invasion of the province of the Executive." I agree with the President in his position on that particular bill. But by virtue of the same Constitution the right, nay more, the duty, of Congress is to fix the amount of money to be appropriated and say how it shall be spent. It is the duty of Congress to earmark every dollar it spends. It is derelict in that duty when it writes a blank check of one and a half billion dollars to Mr. Hopkins, the Chief Executive, or any other person. To write such a blank check on the funds of the Government is "a constitutional invasion of the province" not only of the Congress but of the whole American citizenship.

Under this bill as drawn we do not earmark a single dollar for the benefit of continuing the building of schoolhouses and other permanent municipal improvements. We leave it all to be spent at the whim and caprice of Mr. Hopkins on the advice of his alien economists. At the least possible figure 20 percent of all our money we appropriate under this bill does not go for the benefit of the needy or people on relief. Proper administration would give 20 percent more of this money to take care of needy people. If the intent is to place the needy on relief rolls, then if Congress, under this bill, would fix a method of administration instead of leaving it up to Mr. Hopkins 20 percent more people could be placed on relief than are on it now for the same amount of money. I shall vote for all amendments to earmark these funds.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have stated that before and I want to again state it. I hope the gentleman will incorporate in his remarks that 61 cents of the dollar goes into the reliefer's pocket. He is the one we are trying to look after here today. General Johnson says 60 cents. Mr. Hopkins says 67 cents, but we know how that is figured. However, let us remember, if we can, from 60 to 67 cents only reaches the reliefer's pocket. He is the man we want to look after today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, unless this resolution is radically and properly amended, I shall be constrained to vote against it. No American who has magnanimity in his mind, sympathy in his soul, or pity in his heart wants to see his fellow man suffer, let alone starve. I have never thought that any particular individual or any particular political party or any particular group anywhere had a monopoly on all the humanitarianism there is in this world. The longer I live and the more I study men, the more I am convinced that beneath our little differences of opinion we are, after all, very human and very much the same.

Mr. Chairman, I have only the deepest sympathy for the poor unfortunate people who have been honestly forced to go upon the relief rolls in our country; but the sad and the tragic part of the whole messy story of relief is that so little of the money which we have appropriated goes to the people for whom it was intended. I have always believed, Mr. Chairman, and after our experience of the past 4 years I am more convinced than ever before that the careless, indiscriminate giving to people is an ignoble philanthropy that is conducive only to the perpetuation of poverty and indolence. There is a serious question in my mind whether or not this whole business of relief is fundamentally wrong. I have not lived as long as some men in this Chamber, and, consequently, do not know nearly as much; but I have lived long enough and I have fairly generously donated to the causes of charity and helped those who have been nearest and dearest to me to know that oft-times charity is more of a detriment than it is a help; a greater load than it is a lift. I charge, and I charge deliberately, that during the past 4 years we have dangerously near reached the point where we are encouraging and fostering a generation of beggars and mendicants.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. No; I refuse to yield. I do not have time.

The saddest experience I have had in the past 3 years I dare say has been the same disappointing, disillusioning experience of every Member of this House. I have known men and women back home who, a few years ago, were independent, prosperous farmers and businessmen, filled with pride, possessing a spirit of self-respect and self-reliance, depending upon no one, but they seem today to be suffering with the "gim-mes.", It is "gim-me this and gim-me that." There is very little difference between Republicans and Democrats when it comes to that sad affliction. Those men and women who once earned their own living, lived their own lives, held their heads high, today before they will paint a barn or build a chicken house, sit down and write me a letter to see if Congress cannot give them a grant.

As a student in Germany and England following the World War I saw the dole system, like a cancer, slowly but surely eat out the heart and soul of those great peoples. We refused to profit from their sad experience. I want to say that the relief business today in our own country has so degenerated until we are fostering that spirit of apathy, indifference, indolence, and irresponsibility until we are threatening to destroy the morale and wipe out the character of a great and free people. [Applause.]

Many amendments should be made to this measure. Certainly it should be reduced from $1,500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. If I had my way, I would reduce it to a smaller amount. Certainly the amendment of Mr. LANHAM should be adopted, to deny further relief to those aliens in our country who have no right to be here. Certainly the amendment of Mr. BACON should be adopted, which will turn the administration of relief to the local authorities; that will result in great saving in administrative costs and do away with some of the discrimination, favoritism, fraud, and waste that we so sadly have experienced.

Certainly the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] should be adopted, which will earmark at least $150,000,000 for the construction of Federal highways and secondary roads [applause], where all the people will enjoy its blessings, without discrimination or favor. Certainly the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] should be adopted, in order that this Government may carry on to completion certain projects that are now standing, just started, or half done. [Applause.] Even if all these amendments are adopted, you will have only a fair bill, and I doubt whether I can support it then. Why? Why; because, Mr. Chairman, the only way we ever can stop this inordinate spending is to compel the local communities to match the Federal Government dollar for dollar, and then the people who administer relief in those communities will realize it is their own money. Unfortunately, in this country during the past 4 years there has grown up a feeling that the Government of the United States is here in Washington, D. C., when it is not at all. It is out at Oshkosh, Oscaloosa, Kokomo, and Ossawattamie, and every crossroad and hamlet of the United States. When, oh, when, Members of this House, will we pound into the heads of our people the fact that the Government is not here but out there; that they themselves are it; and that no government ever can give to its citizens anything that it does not take from them?

It is no use to deal in a lot of political demagoguery and sloshy sentimentality in behalf of the poor old man when you saddle another $1,500,000,000 upon the backs of the taxpayers of this Nation, who are now stumbling under an almost unbearable burden. When you do that you are the worst enemy to the poor people of this country. [Applause.]

I come from the Ozarks, in southwest Missouri. I have the honor to represent a good, hardy people who have sprung from a pioneer race that came out of the hills of Kentucky and Tennessee.

We may not know much, but thank God we have got enough common horse sense to know that Santa Clause does not come down the chimney the night before Christmas. [Applause.] And we also know that all the Easter eggs are not laid by bunny rabbits. We also know that those who have been the recipients of this bountiful outpouring of the people's money will in the end be called upon to foot the bill which this benevolent, patronizing paternalism has shouldered upon them in their own ignorance.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that this Congress has no authority or power in my judgment to delegate its legislative functions to the executive branch of the Government. From 1789 to 1933 the American Congress gave to the 30 Presidents during that period only $1,687,112,500 to spend in their discretion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Just a little over $1,500,000,000 was delegated by the Congress to 30 Presidents in 143 years of our history to spend as they saw fit. And then, only in time of war or dire emergency. But since the 4th of March 1933 Congress has turned over to one man $15,428,498,815 which he in his infinite, infallible, omnipotent, and impeccable wisdom can spend at any time, in any manner, and on any project that he may deem fit. [Applause.] That is more power than any good man should want and certainly is more power than any bad man should possess. Give the President this power and you surrender your liberty.

I certainly hope that the Members of the House will follow the leadership of the splendid and gallant leader, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] who is a most loyal and faithful friend of the President, and who is a most eloquent spokesman for his party in this House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK.]

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, in my work as a Member of this Congress I owe an obligation only to the people of my district, my State, and my Nation, and to my own conscience. I think that is the obligation of every one of us.

This is not a political issue to be debated as a political issue. Rather it is a matter for all of us to determine for ourselves in the light of our own views and on a nonpartisan basis.

It is not a pleasant thing to talk about economy, particularly when the measure at hand has to do with relief. I dare say that it is not popular, and it likely is not politically expedient, but as far as I am concerned, I think that it is high time that we put political expediency into the background and began to try to get to the real foundation of what is going on.

I have no quarrel with the people who have accepted relief. I think they were entitled to it and I think the Government owed them relief. I think when the pages of history are written those people will not be criticized, but rather will it be said of them that they are to be commended for having endured these years so bravely. My greatest regret is that too much money has been wasted; too much has been diverted from the use for which it was intended. But, Mr. Chairman, this country owes the unemployed something more than relief, something more than bare subsistence on the Federal pay roll; it owes them the reestablishment of a system under which they can again have a real job in legitimate industry and legititimate agriculture. Every effort of the Government should be turned in that direction. [Applause.]

It has been suggested that we do not really know what amount is necessary adequately to take care of relief. As far as I am concerned, I am ready and willing to vote for such amount as shall be necessary in that regard, but I am inclined to believe that the chairman of the subcommittee is as well informed and knows as much about that problem as anyone in this whole country. [Applause.]

I suggest the further thought that if $1,500,000,000 was necessary to take care of the relief problem when expended in the manner heretofore followed in this country that we can effect enough economies to make $1,000,000,000 do the same good and get more money to the people who really need it. Overgenerosity in appropriating for relief breeds waste, graft, racketeering, and diversion. An appropriation in a reasonable and sane amount will adequately care for those who need help, and beyond that we should not go.

Further than that, why cannot the States supplement the Federal appropriation if that should be necessary? That would go a long way to eliminate waste and overhead by getting a measure of the responsibility closer to the people. It cannot be said that 48 States are insolvent and that the United States is not. The 48 States are the United States.

Why, just this morning I received a newspaper from my home State of Indiana containing an article referring to a shake-up in the W. P. A. This article stated as follows:

> Dismissal Saturday of a publicity staff of 27 in the State administration will save $40,000 a year, Mr. Jennings said.

Why in Heaven's name did we need $40,000 for 27 publicity experts in the State of Indiana during the past year to carry on the work of W. P. A. in that State? Why was that money diverted from the persons really entitled to it?

Mr. LAMBETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. LAMBETH. May I state what the Resettlement Administration spent for printing? That organization spent $808,991 for printing in the last fiscal year.

Mr. HALLECK. That is a further indication of wastefulness. May I point out another thing. The people on W. P. A. are beginning to get wise to what is going on. I hold in my hand a newspaper copy of a telegram sent to the State administrator in Indiana, reading as follows:

> The organized W. P. A. workers in Indiana demand immediate economizing in the administrative force of the W. P. A. In view of the fact that less money is available for W. P. A. we believe it only fair any slashes in the W. P. A. force should come from the administrative personnel.

In other words, if we get the chiselers, the racketeers, and the unnecessary overheard out of the administration of relief, we will find out, in my opinion, that $1,000,000,000 will do the job. And whence came that figure of one and a half billion dollars? If Mr. Hopkins was as far from a correct figure as he was when he said this country would eternally have an unemployed army of at least 7,000,000, I say we cannot give too much credence to his figures.

Mr. Chairman, a lot has been said here by those who favor increasing the appropriation that we must spend more money on relief because of increasing prices that the people on relief have to pay. That prompts me to make this statement: Taxes are paid by the sweat of every man who labors, because they are a burden on production and can be paid only by production. Why, as a Republican I believe that, and I think that Mr. Roosevelt spoke the truth in that statement made in 1932.

What is happening? The increased expenditures of the Federal Government are reflected in increased taxes. What is the effect of those taxes? The burden of those taxes goes into the price of everything that the poorest person in the country has to buy. It hits the poor man harder than it hits the rich, and that is the reason I am against excessive governmental expenditures. [Applause.]

We talk about taking care of the underprivileged one-third. By this act you directly benefit certain people who must be helped, I recognize that, but at the same time with this expenditure, insofar as it may be excessive, and by any unnecessary expenditures we unnecessarily increase the cost of living of all the others of that lower one-third who can hardly keep body and soul together as it is.

The question may be asked, Why economize? We must economize to the end that we must not in this country segregate over here one group of our workers just as able, just as deserving as any of our workers, keeping them as wards of the Government at subsistence wages, and over here have the great body of American workers earning wages that only private industry, business, and agriculture in this country can pay.

Who was it said, "Excessive governmental spending is a brake on any return to normal business activity"?

What is "normal business activity"? It is the railroads transporting, the farmers producing, and the laboring men working in factories. That is normal business activity and it is the thing we should all subscribe to. Who was it said, "I regard reduction in Federal spending as the greatest contribution that government can make to business"? Mr. Roosevelt made those statements in 1932. They were and are statements of fact and not opinion. Before Mr. Hopkins says the machine age has destroyed the opportunity for employment for millions, why does he not go into some of the poor homes in this land? He will find there a consumer demand crying to be filled that will keep every factory running night and day before that demand can be filled. It is silly and ridiculous to urge and say that the initiative of the American people cannot put our folks to work at machines, producing more and not less, to the end that the standard of living of our people as a whole shall be raised, not lowered. [Applause.]

The only real and permanent cure for unemployment will be found in more jobs, not in more relief. Relief is necessary until jobs are available, but relief should be so administered as to hasten the return of real jobs.

If you believe in spending to promote recovery, if you believe in priming the pump, then you should not vote for one and a half billion dollars, but for four or five billion dollars. On the other hand, if you believe, as was stated in 1932, that the way to put people back to work is to cut out excessive spending, then you ought to vote to keep the figure in this bill and in all other appropriation bills at the lowest possible figure. What for? Why, to the end that the unemployed of this country may not be faced with that status as a permanent status, but, rather, that they may again have jobs and not doles and may be able to take their place in the legitimate business and industry of this country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a certain brief telegram and a brief resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call your attention to an incident connected with a very small segment of our industrial organization, and yet which casts a searing light upon the great problems involved in this legislation.

A few days ago I received the following telegram from Chester, a village in my district in Morris County, N. J., reading as follows:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: We are employed at the Bell Fur Co. at Chester, a nonunion organization. Today the union issued notice to discontinue manufacture and disposal of goods on hand by about Wednesday, May 5. We represent 50 individuals, satisfied with our work and with our salary. Can you help us by making it possible for this firm to continue doing business?

Mr. Chairman, now I want to tell the amazing story. A few years ago in the city of New York two Jewish gentlemen, brothers, by the name of Dretel, were engaged in the manufacture of fur garments.

I know one of these brothers. He is the kind of a man who in any community will stand for everything that is constructive and good. As related to me by this gentleman, because of labor trouble in New York, where the garment workers were the most sweated and degraded by their employers of any workers in the land, Mr. Dretel, some 8 years ago, came into New Jersey and started a little fur manufacturing plant, and it prospered. After a time he started another one. Then another small factory was opened by a Mr. Haug. Two years ago Mr. Dretel went to Chester, in Morris County, and took over an old factory which he put into excellent condition, and in which for 2 years he has employed 50 of the boys and girls from the farms and villages in the surrounding district. The boys averaged in wages, so I am told, $25 a week, and the girls, after learning the work, from $18 to $20. It was a happy industrial family. They loved Mr. Dretel and he loved them. They were getting along fine.

On the 30th day of April there appeared three men, alleged to come from the Fur Workers' Union of New York. One of them, Mr. Dretel states, was unable to speak good English. He spoke in Yiddish. They were Russians in origin and represented a group of Russian Communists dominant in the New York union. These men served notice on Mr. Dretel, in my State, that if he did not close his factory within 5 days and throw 50 of my boys and girls into the street where doubtless some of them would be forced to go on relief, disaster would overtake the wife and children of Mr. Dretel's brother in New York City. No suggestion was made that the Chester factory be unionized. The command was that it be closed. This, Mr. Chairman, was in America, the land of the free and the home of the brave, in New Jersey, on the very soil made sacred by the blood of patriots 150 years ago, who wrenched this land from the hand of the tyrant and set up the greatest experiment in free government in the history of the world.

I am for relief wherever relief is necessary. I stand for extending help to any man who needs it. I have given a long and active life to the service of my fellowman. I have kept nothing for myself. I came into the world with nothing and I will probably go out with less, so I need not now explain that I am for helping anybody who needs help.

Mr. RANKIN. Did he close that factory? That is what I am worried about.

Mr. EATON. Has not the gentleman heard what I have said?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman said they told him to close it. Finish the story.

Mr. EATON. I will finish my story.

A few days ago I went up to the factory. Mr. Dretel was standing there like the man in the poem, "lonely upon a peak in Darien." The factory was empty, the machinery shipped back to New York. Fifty of my boys and girls were out, through no fault of their own or wish of their employer, looking for a job, and probably some of them will have to go on relief—these fine, self-respecting, self-supporting young Americans.

I say, first of all, in the solving of our problem there are two or three fundamental principles revealed by this case. I do not believe that our primary need is a billion and a half of dollars. What we need is some old-fashioned, self-respecting, common-sense Americanism applied to this problem, if we are to solve it.

In the first place, I want to see American labor and American employers quit the war basis upon which they have been placed in the past 4 years and get together to help solve, by the union of their brains, character, industry, and investment of their lives, labor, and money, the problem of giving employment to these unemployed people throughout the Nation instead of giving them a degrading dole.

In the second place, I rejoice to see an awakening Americanism in the hearts and minds of men and women on both sides of this aisle and through the country. The day is here when we must forget partisanship, forget that we are politicians, forget that we are Democrats or Republicans or New Dealers, or God knows what, and stand up as Americans to save for posterity and for the world God's best gift to man, next to His divine kingdom, our country.

Mr. RANKIN. Is there no way on earth under the laws of New Jersey or New York to punish these criminals, these racketeers, who have perpetrated this crime against your people?

Mr. EATON. I thank my keen lawyer friend for that question. I was coming to it. When the boys came down to see me, five clean-cut, manly young fellows, I sent them to the Wagner Labor Relations Board. The Labor Relations Board sent the boys to Mrs. Herrick, its regional representative in New York, and she told them she had no jurisdiction.

I then went to the authorities of the Department of Labor, who turned the case over to their conciliator, a fine fellow named Moffatt, in New Jersey. In a few days Moffatt threw up his hands and quit.

I then went to the Attorney General's office and they circulated me around like a shuttle until I found a couple of attractive young fellows down in a hole somewhere who told me that under the Interstate Commerce Act or law or something, nothing could be done. So it is evident that this great New Deal administration cannot or will not save boys and girls of American birth in New Jersey from being thrown on the streets by the command of a mess of aliens from New York. It is worse than that, for the three New York Russian dictators closed all four fur-working factories referred to above and threw 100 employees out of a job.

Mr. RANKIN. What is the matter with the State of New Jersey? Why does it not wake up and enforce the law? The State of New Jersey could enforce the law if it wanted to.

Mr. EATON. The gentleman is from the State of Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. You are always trying to impose an anti-lynching bill on us. It seems to me you need something in New Jersey.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I yield.

Mr. CURLEY. Did the gentleman think of presenting this situation, where three or four men came over and closed the factory and the employees were driven out of their means of livelihood, to the Dewey Investigating Committee in New York? For the benefit of the gentleman from Mississippi, this question also is addressed to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Nothing in New York is going on for my benefit.

Mr. EATON. When I get through, probably, I shall ask the distinguished administration lawyers here, perhaps the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] to tell me whether New Jersey can settle this or whether it is an interstate national issue. However, this is the situation: The Fur Workers' Union in New York, Mr. Dretel informs me, has come under the control and influence of a group of Russian Communists. This I suspect is the secret of a large proportion of the labor troubles of this country at the present moment. The time is here when the American workingman has got to rise up and sweep these alien lice out of his hair.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I believe the gentleman voted against the antilynching bill?

Mr. RANKIN. No; he did not. Nobody from New Jersey voted against it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Voted for the antilynching bill, I mean?

Mr. EATON. Just think of that. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. EATON. As a last resort on May 18 I introduced a joint resolution, copy of which I submit herewith, authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate this whole matter and report their findings to this House for appropriate action. I sincerely hope the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee will act at an early date so that the Congress may pass the resolution and get action.

Meanwhile I shall seek to enlist the authorities of New York and New Jersey in an effort to right this grievous wrong and demonstrate whether we are living in America or in Russia.

Joint resolution authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate alleged dispossession of the Bell Fur Co., of Chester, N. J., of its plant and equipment

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Trade Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the alleged dispossession of the Bell Fur Co., operating in and employing approximately 50 men and women in Chester, N. J., from its plant and equipment therein on May 5, 1937, at which time said plant was closed and its machinery and other equipment sold, said dispossession, it is alleged, having been effected under duress and threats of personal injury to the members of said Bell Fur Co. for noncompliance with the demand of certain individuals affiliated with the Furrier Workers' International Union, of New York.

The Federal Trade Commission shall ascertain all of the facts, circumstances, and causes of the alleged dispossession of said property of the said Bell Fur Co., and to reports its conclusions and recommendation, if any, to Congress at the earliest possible moment, and also to report what remedy may be applied, if any, under existing law, if the allegations, according to the evidence and in the opinion of the Commission, are sustained.

SEC. 2. That such sum as may be necessary to enable the Federal Trade Commission to conduct the investigation directed by this joint resolution is hereby authorized to be appropriated.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes of the time I have remaining to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], to be yielded by him as he may see fit, and the balance of my time I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE].

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, in this minute I just want to repeat a paragraph out of a political platform that figured in the last campaign. This paragraph demands the "withdrawal of Government from competition with private pay rolls."

Since when has the employment of people at $19 a month or $50 a month become unfair competition with private pay rolls? Are the businessmen of America ready to denounce W. P. A. wages as being so high that American business cannot meet them in competition? It seems to me that the inclusion of such a paragraph in a major political party platform is in itself the most terrific indictment of the economic system that could be uttered, and this provision was in the Republican platform. It was not in the Democratic platform upon which you Democratic Members on this side were elected.

When the American people elected you they were of the impression they were voting against the Republican platform, but, apparently, what they did was to elect Democrats who have come here determined to put into effect the provisions that were carried not in the Democratic but in the Republican platform in the last election.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like at the outset of my remarks to refer to a statement made by Mr. Bell before the committee, in which he says that $19,768,000,000 has been made available for recovery and relief during the present administration.

I would like to make only one point to this House. I am not one of those who fears to increase the national debt to bring the country out of a depression, as long as we increase the national wealth when we increase the national debt, by building and constructing things that will be on the credit side of the ledger, whereas if we raise the national debt and at the same time have nothing on the credit side of the ledger, we are headed toward a precipice.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am sorry, but I must refuse to yield now.

Mr. Hopkins has had the hardest job ever delegated to any man. In Oklahoma he did a good job. W. P. A. constructed worth-while projects that are on the credit side of the ledger, but as the money was cut off, W. P. A. was forced to adopt a new policy, and this was to decrease the amount the Federal Government was willing to put into materials. Mr. Hopkins instituted a new man-month cost the 1st of January. By this I mean that in the expenditure of $35 for the care of a man in Oklahoma—and this is our top figure—only $5 can be advanced by the W. P. A. for materials. Oklahoma has contributed in 1935 and 1936, 22 percent of the cost of projects. Under the new ruling the local contribution will have to be raised to the point where it is absolutely impossible to build worth-while projects under the ruling.

Under the present regulations limiting the contribution by the W. P. A. the local contribution will be raised to 60 percent or better for any worth-while project. Under these regulations no sponsor will build under W. P. A.; it would be cheaper for the sponsor to pay the whole cost of the project. Everyone knows that the W. P. A. regulations raise the cost of a project 10 to 30 percent. So why build them under the W. P. A.? This one billion and a half we are voting today is nothing but a disguised dole. In other words, if you cut the project down to where the only thing that can qualify is a ditch to put a sewer in or something that requires the proper amount of man-month labor, then, after you have exhausted the few projects that can meet these requirements, you might just as well take these men out and give them exercises and pay them their check for going through calisthenics as to be pretending to be paying them for something that is of no value whatsoever.

If you think I am wrong, I will read you a letter from an engineer in my own W. P. A. district:

In answer to your request for information regarding the cost of earth fills under the W. P. A., I submit the following information:

I have recently been employed by the W. P. A. supervising construction on farm ponds and lakes.

Before the $35 man-month cost went into effect I was moving dirt and placing it in the fills for 18 cents and less per cubic yard. After the $35 man-month went into effect the cost for moving dirt has increased to 80 cents per cubic yard and more.

This was due to the fact that we had to use hand labor for loading dirt into trucks and dumping on the fills.

Now, understand this: Your earmarking of the bill will do no good, because the regulations now in effect under W. P. A. prohibit any of these projects from being built under those regulations. [Applause.]

The W. P. A. has fulfilled its purpose when beneficial projects can no longer be built. What is the answer then? Cut this appropriation to one billion. Then this Congress can bring in a bill for worth-while public works. Irrigation works for the Great Plains. Make it possible for the people to combat the terrible problem of soil blowing that threatens the very existence of this Nation. Build flood-control projects authorized by Congress that will add to the wealth of the Nation—let us not increase the public debt without benefit. Continue the great Public Works Administration program.

Since the W. P. A., after a good past record, has now degenerated into a dole, let this billion dollars wind up the program. Then face the issue squarely and apportion funds for direct relief among the States according to their needs. I urge you to cut the appropriation to a billion dollars and make it the last. Then let us bring in a public-works program through the regular channels and let Congress have a hand at mapping a worth-while program. The half-billion dollars would cover such a program this year with some money to spare. It is within the power of Congress to cut this appropriation to one billion and then bring in a bill for the other half billion that would be spent for the construction of projects that would add to the public wealth and well being.

I, for one, had rather have no relief program at all than to have the proposed bill executed under present regulations that forestalls any construction works. If the House votes this full billion and one-half dollars and fails to earmark funds in a manner it can really be used for constructive works, my convictions will force me to vote against the measure. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM].

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, ever since I have come to this House I have voted consistently for economy. I have voted against financial measures of colleagues who are my friends without blinking an eye, but today I am not going to vote for a billion dollars for work relief in the name of economy and slam the door of opportunity in the face of many of the 2,000,000 unemployed men and women in this country.

I appeal to my friends from the agricultural districts who seem to think the unemployment problem is no longer with us. I am glad to say that I have never failed once on this floor to vote for the measures that I think are essential both for the country and the city. I voted for $500,000,000 to conserve the soil of this country and to pay this money to farmers who cooperated in our soil programs. You gentlemen from the rural districts who voted for soil benefits with me want to cut down to $1,000,000,000 the appropriation for the care and maintenance of 2,000,000 men and women in this country. This raises a question of the conservation of human resources. The mere contemplation of those figures shows that the billion-dollar figure is unsound and unjust.

Let us analyze these 2,000,000 people. There are 600,000 W. P. A. workers over 45 years of age who, by reason of the rules and regulations of the factories of this country, are no longer able to secure employment. They are the victims of the machine age. There are 350,000 women workers on W. P. A. who are breadwinners. That accounts for 1,000,000. If you reduce this appropriation to a billion dollars, you can care only for that 1,000,000 people. The other 1,000,000 will be turned off employment and it is not reasonable that this number can be absorbed into private employment overnight.

This matter of unemployment is no longer a vital matter to the agricultural districts so far as their own people are concerned. However, it is a matter that is vital to the 9 or 10 large industrial States of the country. In nine States—Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Michigan, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and California—there are 1,000,000 on the W. P. A. rolls, exactly one-half of the entire total of W. P. A. workers. I remind you, ladies and gentlemen, some of whom seem to think that these States come here as beggars, that those nine States in the fiscal year of 1936 contributed in internal-revenue collections $2,222,943,209.68, which was about two-thirds of the total amount collected in this country. [Applause.] Those taxes were collected to help their people in these days of emergency, and now some of you from the sparsely settled districts want to beat down this appropriation and throw back these men and women on the dole system. If there is no further need for W. P. A. in the agricultural districts, let it be dismantled in those particular sections.

The individual tax contributions to the Federal Government from the nine States named above where the great reservoirs of unemployment exist, as reported by the Bureau of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, exclusive of agricultural-adjustment taxes, were: Illinois, $274,385,733.01; Indiana, $70,480,405.89; Massachusetts, $110,022,188.16; New Jersey, $146,857,866.61; Michigan, $181,568,727.74; New York, $768,440,615.02; Ohio, $187,932,703.11; Pennsylvania, $297,120,877.60; California, $186,134,092.54; total, $2,222,943,209.68.

The total income tax and miscellaneous internal revenue collections for the same fiscal year in the whole country were $3,448,571,174.39.

I shall set out here the number of persons on W. P. A. rolls in the same States: Illinois, 152,800; Indiana, 67,300; Massachusetts, 94,500; New Jersey, 80,000; Michigan, 63,100; New York, 268,400; Ohio, 125,500; Pennsylvania, 214,600; California, 115,800; total, 1,182,000.

I challenge the statement that this is a dole or a charity system. It is not. It is offering to the idle men and women an opportunity to work. Let us not in this House discriminate against those industrial sections where men have been supplanted by improved machinery and new methods and by this utterly unfair rule against the age of workers. What we want to do is to move toward hour reduction in employment and also give the unemployed educational opportunities in industrial technique.

We should not forget, too, what a drastic reduction of a million in the work-relief program would mean to the purchasing power of the country. Taking wages away from a million men and women would hit the storekeeper, the wholesaler, and every other businessman in the industrial communities. Finally, it would strike the farmers through decreased demand for their products and consequent decrease in their crop prices.

Much has been said about unworthy persons on W. P. A. projects. Let us eliminate them as quick as we discover them. Let us keep overhead at a minimum. But let us not abruptly turn off the thousands of workers who are idle by no reason of their own conduct and who have not yet received a call from private industry. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM] has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, the President has asked for one and a half billion dollars for relief. My own view is that this sum, in fact, will be insufficient to meet national requirements and insure the millions of unfortunate American citizens who are out of work the opportunity to merely live through another year.

I am at a loss to understand either the reasoning or the philosophy of any member of the Democratic Party who was elected last November on the pledge that he would support the President who now takes the position that this item should be reduced.

I, too, believe in a balanced Budget, but a balanced Budget must be secondary when it is established beyond any doubt that to attempt it under existing tax schedules would result in unbalancing the lives of millions of our citizens and would even tend to create a threat to our form of government.

PAY FOR RELIEF BY TAXING PROFITS OF MONOPOLISTIC CORPORATIONS

The Federal expenditures in the past have been extensive and varied, and touched the lives of tens of millions of our people. They have not resulted in bringing to those unfortunate people the American standard of living, but they have kept them from actually starving and freezing and going without clothing.

It is stated that prosperity has returned. This statement is not more than 10 percent a fact, because prosperity exists for about only 10 percent of our people. Fifty percent of them are perhaps living in fairly comfortable circumstances, but such living is largely from day to day. If they lost their jobs tomorrow, in a short time they would be forced to go on relief unless they were fortunate enough to secure a new job. The remaining 40 percent are in a large measure denied the right of a decent living. The President has evidenced a determination that this condition shall not continue. If we want to balance the Budget, we can make the little handful of monopolistic corporations contribute in the form of taxes out of their enormous profits now being realized a sum sufficient to bring about that balance, and then we can greatly minimize our unemployment by having this same group shorten hours and increase pay envelopes. They will do neither of these of their own volition.

The powerful agency of government has that responsibility and we as Congressmen should not shirk from it.

WHY THIS ATTEMPT TO SHIFT RELIEF BURDEN BACK TO LOCAL UNITS OF GOVERNMENT?

Every dollar that we cut off this appropriation bill, will in the end, mean dollars added to city, county, and State taxes in every congressional district in the United States. It will, in the end, mean that we will relieve the greedy, unconscionable profit takers of this so-called prosperity from making a contribution to relieve human suffering in this country, and we will transfer that obligation to the backs of every home owner and farmer in America. I say this because the Federal Government taxes are raised almost exclusively from incomes, personal and corporate; from excise and import taxes, and not a cent can be taken by a direct levy upon either real or personal property. The cities, counties, and States raise nearly every dollar of their tax money by direct levy, on the farms, the homes, and personal possessions of the people.

SHARP RISE IN LOCAL RELIEF APPROPRIATION DESPITE FEDERAL AID

In my own State, as proof of the fact that the unemployment-relief burden is not a diminishing one, I want to give you a brief statement showing what has actually occurred. These figures are independent of any old-age pension relief granted by the State and they do not include contributions made by sponsors in work-relief projects.

The expenditures by the State of Washington for unemployment relief are practically double now what they were when the depression began. Since 1933 the legislature, through the sale of bonds and by direct appropriation, has raised $20,000,000, the major part of which will ultimately have to be collected by levies upon property, real and personal. The figures in reference to the eight counties that comprise my congressional district are more startling. They disclose an increase running as high as 200 percent in excess of what they were in 1930. They are as follows:

Counties	1930	1933	1936
Lincoln	$10,410.00	$20,705.00	$31,320.30
Spokane	298,024.00	220,293.00	422,156.00
Pend Oreille	14,436.00	15,660.00	20,790.00
Ferry	7,155.00	7,152.00	6,380.00
Stevens	33,334.81	26,732.45	34,372.23
Chelan	71,265.00	108,407.00	91,736.00
Okanogan	131,978.00	118,351.26	97,850.00
Douglas	21,413.95	14,888.22	21,058.00
Grand total	587,116.76	532,188.93	725,662.53

It will be noted that right now our direct local tax burden for relief is far greater than it was when the depression began, and this is in spite of the liberal assistance rendered by the Federal Government. Every dollar of this relief must be raised by a direct tax levied upon property within the various counties. If these dollars came in part through the Federal Government, they would ultimately be collected out of excessive profits in a large measure.

The question for us to answer here is, Do we want to add to our already overburdened taxpayers in order to permit the handful of rich and powerful corporations to escape the tax that they otherwise would have to pay? I am sure that if this issue were left to a vote of the American people, the answer would be overwhelmingly against adding new burdens to the individual property owner in the various congressional districts of this Nation in order to permit a few hundred powerful corporations to continue to increase their already unreasonably high profits. It is our duty to vote for that which clearly appears to be to the best interests of our constituents. I am supporting the President in his request for a billion and a half dollars, and I am bitterly opposed to reduction of that amount. I am even willing to support an increased amount.

ALLOCATE SUFFICIENT AMOUNT TO COMPLETE APPROVED CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

There is one other feature that must not be overlooked. By all means, there should be a sufficient sum appropriated and earmarked out of this appropriation to take care of every approved non-Federal project. To fail to do this is to break faith with the thousands of communities and the various States that have assumed financial obligations, and in many instances already undertaken badly needed public-improvement projects. In a majority of the cases these projects have to do with the construction of school buildings, and this deals so vitally with the welfare of the children of this country. In some instances the municipalities have actually voted, issued, and sold their bonds and are paying interest on them. We would break faith with these people if we denied them the right to carry out these needful and useful public improvements.

THE REAL REMEDY

Perhaps, as has been said, this is not a partisan political issue. It is, however, undeniably an issue between those who believe in the philosophy of the New Deal doctrine, as promulgated and advocated by Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the philosophy of those who oppose the New Deal doctrine. The roll calls taken in the consideration of this measure will indicate with almost unerring certainty in the congressional elections of 1938 where you will find the Members of this House. These roll calls will clearly indicate the line of demarcation between the true progressive and the genuine conservative. It may be that even here you will be able to read the beginnings of a new political alinement in this country. As a real reform program I would go much further than merely appropriating large sums of money. I would favor a national old-age pension program entirely displacing the State pensions and contributions by the States, and giving it as a matter of right to every American citizen who has reached a certain age, who either cannot find employment or who is willing to step out of the employment field, a sufficient pension to permit this group to live out the remainder of their lives in ease and comfort and in keeping with the existing American standard of living. What is most fundamental of all is that this Government should assume the responsibility that the framers of the Constitution imposed upon it when they said:

> Congress shall have the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

Give us national control of money and credit and in a short time it will be unnecessary to vote huge sums for emergency relief because we will cease to have emergencies.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to free themselves from this economy hysteria and view the situation as it actually exists. I hope that they will vote to support our great leader in this fight he is making for the millions of our helpless and unfortunate fellow citizens. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, we are engaged today in a serious undertaking. Much will depend upon the conclusions which we reach. Human distress has a universal appeal, and its relief is an ambition of all men. No individual nor political party can claim an exclusive right of ministry and none would dare refuse to support meritorious endeavors for the relief of the distressed. The question therefore arises, What merit is to be found in the present proposal which will justify a continuity of the same methods heretofore carried on by the present administration in its relief program? Opposition to the pending measure cannot be construed as a disregard of distress but support thereof can be construed as an endorsement of the policies heretofore pursued by Federal relief agencies.

The duty rests upon the present administration to present a justification for the appropriation which it now requests, and of necessity this justification requires an accounting of its stewardship of the trusts heretofore committed to it by the Congress for relief purposes. This accounting must include a recital of past performances, an examination of statements made by those in authority, and a review of general governmental policies. Let us therefore look at the record as the administration attempts its justification.

There is little need to spend much time on the sums that already have been placed at the disposal of the Federal relief agencies. Billions upon billions of dollars have been added to the public debt to provide funds for these colossal spending agencies in their futile efforts to solve this problem. Even the imagination of the American people has been taxed as it attempts to reach the dizzy heights of this mounting indebtedness. Suffice it to say that the administration can surely not excuse its failures on a lack of available funds. What it demanded has been provided. A lavish hand has dipped into the Public Treasury and taken unsparingly for its more abundant life. However, had the results justified the means, had the problem been solved, had there been evidences of success, few would complain of the enormous expenditures. Unfortunately, the administration is compelled to acknowledge its failure.

The record, however, consists of more than a résumé of financial transactions. I know that I voice the sentiments of many of you when I say that we wish that there might be obliterated from the record the disgraceful picture of the depths to which political seducers can stoop. Smeared upon page after page are the ugly smudges of the prostitution of the distressed and the needy for political purposes. Page after page reveals the revolting record of lust for political power, greed for political gain; and many of these pages reek with corruption and disgrace. Small wonder that you honorable men hang your heads in shame as you read the record of the vultures of your party, in their wild orgy of political dissipation, preying upon the poor and the unfortunate victims of the depression. All of this record is, and should be, vividly before you, but lest the convenience of a faulty memory mislead you, I recall an episode or two to help you in reaching a conscientious conclusion.

Do you recall that bold entrepreneur, whose loyalty to the New Deal, and whose anxiety for its financial well-being prompted him to demand of an emergency relief worker her contribution to a political war chest? A part of it might well be quoted here for our guidance:

I am very much surprised that you have not responded to our previous letter requesting your contribution in the amount of $27 to Indiana County Democratic campaign committee, as I was sure that you appreciated your position to such an extent that you would make this contribution willingly and promptly. I must, however, now advise you that unless your contribution in the above amount is received promptly, it will be necessary to place your name on the list of those who will not be given consideration for any other appointment after the termination of the emergency relief work, which as you know, will terminate in the near future.

Do you recall the assiduous attention of supervisors and foremen on road building projects to increase the circulation of political tabloids and rotogravures by compelling the lowest paid unskilled laborers to become subscription agents for well-entrenched political publishers, and threatening these relief workers with dismissal if they failed to accept their allotted quota?

Do you recall the brazen and brutal frankness of administrators who boasted that admissibility to relief rolls depended upon the political registration of the applicant, the approval of the political boss of the district, and the refusal to enroll those in distress who might refuse to accede to political commands?

Do you recall the insistence with which one administrator required loyalty to party from those on relief and couched his dire threat of reprisal in no uncertain terms?

I'll tell you right now that any W. P. A. worker who is not in sympathy with the W. P. A. program and the Roosevelt administration will be eliminated from the W. P. A. rolls in this district as quickly as I can act.

But need we go further? No good purpose will be served by the presentation of further evidence that under the guise of relief for the needy gigantic sums have been spent for the purpose of building and operating well-fed political machines which provide jobs for political parasites who live at the expense of industrious workingmen. Certainly there can be no excuse for a program which is based on an exchange of bread for ballots, which encourages political manipulation for political aggrandizement, which suggests improvising and improving the technique of chiseling and which depends upon an indoctrination and infusion of a philosophy of political barter as the basis for receiving needed relief.

Gentlemen, you can wrap up a skunk in a perfumed robe and it will still be a skunk, and you can wrap up a political relief racket in a robe of demagogic humanitarianism and it will still be a political relief racket.

As we consider the relief program, we cannot fail to take note of an attitude which has manifested itself in many sections of the country. I refer to the refusal of relief workers to accept employment in private industries. It has been suggested that this is due to some degree to the desire of political bosses to keep their armies intact, but whatever the cause, it has had a demoralizing effect upon the morale of our people and retards to a great extent the resumption of normal industrial relations. Surely we cannot approve a policy which advocates the advisability of retaining the security of a relief status rather than encouraging the adventure of individual achievement. We are reminded of the words of Southey when he warned:

Charity is bad which takes from independence its proper pride and from mendicity its proper shame.

Unfortunately the conduct of many of the relief projects tended to an encouragement of this attitude. All of us are familiar with the approval which has been given to shovel-leaning, also flag-waving activities. It is but natural that there would be a reluctance to surrender such sinecures. These are the natural attendant conditions to the operation of a system administered as the relief program has been administered. Probably very few men would work if they were not compelled to, but I believe it is our duty to help people generally learn that they have to work. There has been entirely too much of a de-luxe form of work relief, and a persistent temptation held out of the possibility of lucrative loafing jobs to induce others to hang on to political berths. This is the tragedy of this whole business. The cost of the relief program has been not the billions demanded by the President. The real cost is the sweat and labor of industrious, self-respecting American workmen who are required to pay in taxes the wages of those who shirk responsibilities and prefer idleness to honest work. We should also recognize that an attendant cost of this relief administration has been the sapping of the energy and thrift of the American workmen. It has tended to destroy morale and break down the fiber of American manhood.

The country is eager to know when we can discontinue the present relief program. Unemployment and relief are definitely related. That which effects the one bears upon the other. All of us were encouraged by the assurance of the President in 1934, when he said:

I stand or fall by my refusal to accept as a necessary condition of our future a permanent army of the unemployed.

This courageous declaration inspired the country with a new hope for the future. Again in 1935 further encouragement was given when the President emphatically declared "The Federal Government must and shall quit this business of relief." With these assurances, we were hopeful that a change of policy might be introduced and that the gigantic Federal relief agency might be superseded by a program which would enable a maximum of benefit to go to those in need rather than a continuing policy which allows approximately 61 percent of the funds to go for other purposes than wages for persons on relief. We hoped that there would be a cessation of the expensive flood of printed propaganda, the picture parades, radio advertising, and the other attendant costs of trying to sell the more abundant life of relief to the American people. We are still hopeful, but disturbed, as we read in the press the statement made by Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress Administrator, when he said:

You've got to give people unemployment relief, because you can't eliminate unemployment under our system.

Which of these statements are we to accept? Has the President's avowed purpose to "quit this business of relief" been so completely set aside that an official spokesman like Mr. Hopkins can now insist upon a continuing relief program for the unemployed? Are we to accept the indictment which the Works Progress Administrator makes against "our system"? Are we to infer that he has a system which he is eager to substitute for "our system"? I submit that the duty rests upon the administration before it presents this relief measure to inform us whether we are to depend upon the courageous assurance of the President or the pessimistic outlook of the Administrator, Harry Hopkins. Is this money to be used as a maintenance fund for those who have been unable to secure employment because of the administration's general policies, but who honestly want work, or is this appropriation to be used for those contemplated by Mr. Hopkins as the permanent army of the unemployed? We owe a duty to those who honestly want work and who are willing to do a day's work for wages earned; but I recognize no duty to those who are willing to live on the benefactions of others, especially if those benefactions to any extent whatever are provided by the toil and labor of industrious working men and women.

Why, I ask, should a man or woman who works day in and day out be forced to contribute from their earnings for the support, under a pretense of work, of those who are too lazy to work themselves? Every dollar should be appropriated which is necessary to aid the unfortunate, but not one dollar of public funds should be provided to encourage and maintain the indolent and the political parasites.

As we endeavor to reach a conclusion on this issue, we are forced to express our disappointment at the failure of the Works Progress Administration to give to the country a statement showing the administrative costs of this relief work, including the names and the salaries of administrative officers in each district, as well as other pertinent information with respect to the entire program of operation. If the country at large is not to be trusted with this information, should not the Congress at least be taken into its confidence when it is called upon to appropriate more money? In fairness to those who are entitled to relief, I submit, we should have the facts. Is it not reasonable to assume that a fairer wage could be paid to deserving wage earners if excessive administrative costs could be reduced, and why, I submit, does the Administration refuse to let the searching light of noonday fall upon the record if it is not for the purpose of concealing excessive and unwarranted administrative costs? We request today what has already been requested, a complete statement of the facts and figures?

The relief problem, as has been said, and the unemployment problem are related. That which affects the one bears upon the other. It can, therefore, be said that the general governmental policies affecting the acceleration of business activity definitely affects our relief problem. The more men employed by industry should mean a diminution in the relief load.

How many men have been reemployed as a result of the reciprocal-trade agreements as they have been negotiated by the present administration? How many men have been reemployed as a result of the flood of importations of manufactured goods and food products from abroad? How many men have been reemployed as a result of the failure of the immigration authorities to carry out justifiable deportations? How many men have been reemployed as a result of the continuing threat of exorbitant and confiscatory taxation? How many men have been reemployed as a result of the punitive measures directed against honest enterprise and industrious initiative? How many men have been reemployed as a result of threatened destruction of private business by the enactment of death sentences? How many men, I ask, have been reemployed by the uncertain, inconsistent, and vacillating policies of the administration affecting the business activities of the country? Were a definite, clear-cut, positive attitude taken upon which employer and employee could depend, I submit, recovery, that is, real and substantial recovery, would result, and the unemployment problem would be solved to a very large degree and the relief load materially and almost completely lifted.

I believe the relief administration should be returned to the States. I believe the Federal Government should contribute a part of the fund and the several States contribute a part. I believe a fair share under present conditions for the Federal Government to contribute for relief purposes would be 60 percent and the balance provided by the States. I believe local communities as a direct agency and the State government as a supervisory agency could administer the relief fund more efficiently, more honestly, and more frugally. I believe much of the waste, extravagance, and profligacy could thus be eliminated. I believe the relief rolls would be purged of the chiselers, the vultures, and the parasites. I believe we would have relief funds for relief purposes and millions of dollars saved for the American taxpayer.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Mr. Chairman, I should like, if I may, in this 10 minutes to clear out a few of the cobwebs and a little of the underbrush.

Let me say there are no personal differences between my distinguished and beloved friend from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], acting chairman of this committee, and myself. I hold for him not only a professional and political esteem but a personal affection. I know him to be one of the finest, most patriotic, and most loyal Members we have in this body.

There is here an honest difference of opinion among some of the Democrats not as to any fundamental matter of policy but as to the simple question of the amount that should be appropriated. Now, where did this suggestion of cutting relief down to a billion dollars come from? My good and beloved friend undertakes to whip up a little enthusiasm over here for a billion and a half by stressing that perhaps to vote to cut this appropriation would be Democrats collaborating with a Republican proposition.

The President sent to this body on April 20 a message on economy and expenditures. I hold that message in my hand. It contains four or five pages. It says:

In view of the reduction in revenue it became apparent that every effort possible should be made to offset this loss, as far as possible, by a reduction in expenditures.

He says again:

I propose to use every means at my command to eliminate this deficit during the coming fiscal year.

He says again:

I regard it as extremely important that we should achieve a balance of actual income and outgo during the fiscal year 1938, and I appeal to you to join with me in a determined effort to bring about that result.

He says further:

I recognize many opportunities to improve social and economic conditions through Federal action. I am convinced that the success of our whole program and the permanent security of our people demand that we shall adjust all expenditures within the limit of my Budget estimate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, where do we stand on that? After that message of four or five pages imploring Congress to reduce expenditures and balance the Budget, in four little lines at the end he says:

I recommend $1,500,000,000 be appropriated.

Listen to this:

I recommend $1,500,000,000 be provided for work relief for the fiscal year 1938.

This bill as it stands, with the committee amendment, provides $1,723,000,000, because we reappropriate $223,000,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Did not Mr. Bell, the Director of the Budget, testify that out of that $223,000,000, $100,000,000 was always kept over at the end of the year for working capital and that the remainder was already allotted? So that, as a matter of fact, we are here appropriating only $1,500,000,000. I refer the gentleman to page 80 of the hearings.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I remember that quite well.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. So the pending bill provides for an appropriation of $1,500,000,000, and not $223,000,000, as the gentleman has indicated.

Mr. WOODRUM. We are appropriating $1,500,000,000, and in addition to that there is available for expenditure in 1938 $223,000,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But the gentleman cannot ignore the plain testimony adduced in the hearings. Mr. Bell, the Budget Director, testified unequivocally, as the gentleman will find by turning to page 80, that by the 1st day of July all of the $223,000,000 would have been committed except the $100,000,000 which it is necessary to keep for working capital. This working capital is kept by W. P. A. from year to year, and at the end of the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made will have to be kept for the following year, so beyond question the total amount actually provided by this bill is $1,500,000,000. I again refer the gentleman to Director Bell's testimony at page 80 of the hearings.

Mr. WOODRUM. W. P. A. has $100,000,000 which is unobligated and unexpended.

Now, Mr. Chairman, coming out of that conference at the White House immediately following the delivery of that message to this body, the President's most intimate friend and his spokesman on matters of appropriation in the other body of this Capitol, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, said:

> It is my purpose not only to see that work-relief appropriations be limited to $1,000,000,000, but that the law require large contributions from sponsors of projects.

That is where the first suggestion came from. I have no pride of authorship in it, nor does the subcommittee.

What else happened? There spoke up, again in the United States Senate, in the other body of this Congress, the distinguished majority leader, who many of us hope will grace a higher position before very long. [Applause.] He said:

> In my opinion, $1,000,000,000 is the ultimate amount that should be appropriated.

[Applause.]

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, it does not fall with very good grace from our friends to come here now and say that this is a Republican effort to reduce costs and expenditures. These gentlemen in the other end of the Capitol today tell you that $1,000,000,000 is the limit to which that body is going.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Very briefly. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then when the gentleman concludes I will get time under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. WOODRUM. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if any of these Senators who attended that conference—and I happened to be present at it—said anything that would indicate that the President has endorsed that or that he stood for anything less than $1,500,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course not; of course not. The President did not stand for paying the bonus, either. Do you remember that? [Laughter.] The President did not stand for it; not only did not stand for it, but would not sign the bill; and when the bill came back to this body—well, I will not embarrass my good friends here today who are talking about standing by the President on matters by calling the roll again of the distinguished Members of this body who exercised their legislative prerogative [applause] and—I glory in your courage to do it—honestly differed with the President on a matter of that kind. I do not criticize you for it, although I stood with him then. I do not criticize you for differing with him on voting to override his veto; but it does not fall with very good grace to come here now and try to talk about standing by him.

Mr. Chairman, the greatest thing this body can do today for Franklin D. Roosevelt is to take some of these funds so that they will not be there to be dissipated in this relief bill. [Applause.]

Now, let me say this to you: Mr. Hopkins, in answer to a direct question—

> Do you think the Federal Government must remain forever in the relief business?

said:

> Yes, sir.
>
> Mr. BACON. That is directed through an organized bureau here in Washington?
> Mr. HOPKINS. In one way or another; yes, sir; just as we have it today in old-age pensions. I think this is a permanent function of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is the milk in the coconut. I do not agree with that. I have voted for every one of these expenditures, every one of these appropriations, and to give the President wide authority in the emergency; but I did it as you did, my Democratic friends, and I justified it to my constituents as you did, because it was a great emergency and somebody had to spend the money. I promised them, and you promised them, and he promised them that just as soon as there was recovery in this country the Federal Government would get out of the business of relief as fast as it could get out of it. The argument that is used here today that somebody is going to suffer will be used every year and every day from now to the crack of doom; but listen to me, my good friends, it does not follow at all that if you cut this appropriation anybody need suffer. Our friends in the metropolitan centers—New York, Chicago, Philadelphia—have a real problem, and perhaps must have Federal help, but there are many areas in this country, many rural sections, many smaller cities, and I have no doubt there are some States in this Nation that do not have to have one copper of Federal assistance. One billion dollars put into the hands of the President as we are putting it here with wide discretionary power will give him ample funds to relieve the needy and the distressed if the money goes for that purpose.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am sorry, I have not time. Listen, my friends, here is what this bill will do if you cut it down to $1,000,000,000; it will require local communities and States and the Federal Government to use more discriminating judgment in the way the $1,000,000,000 goes. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to continue to provide relief, and work relief on useful public projects, in the United States and its Territories and possessions (including projects heretofore approved for the Works Progress Administration which projects shall not be subject to the limitations hereinafter specified in this section), there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1938, and to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President, $1,000,000,000, together with such unexpended balances as the President may determine, of appropriations made by (a) the second paragraph of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, as supplemented by the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, and (b) section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, including the unexpended balances of appropriations referred to therein: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the following classes of public projects, Federal and non-Federal, and the amounts to be used for each class shall not, except as hereinafter provided, exceed the respective amounts stated, namely: (a) Highways, roads, and streets, $276,700,000; (b) public buildings, parks and other recreational facilities, including buildings therein, public utilities, including sewer systems, water supply and purification, airports and other transportation facilities, flood control and other conservation, and miscellaneous work projects, $420,000,000; (c) assistance for educational, professional, and clerical persons and women's projects, $253,300,000; and (d) National Youth Administration, $50,000,000: Provided further, That the amount specified for any of the foregoing classes may be increased proportionately in accordance with the amount of such unexpended balances as the President transfers for the purposes of this section from the appropriations made by (a) the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 and (b) the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, as supplemented: Provided further, That the amount specified for any of the foregoing classes may be increased by not to exceed 15 percent thereof by transfer of an amount or amounts from any other class or classes in order to effectuate the purposes of the foregoing appropriation: Provided, That no Federal construction project shall be undertaken or prosecuted under this appropriation unless and until there shall have been allocated and irrevocably set aside Federal funds sufficient for its completion; and no non-Federal project shall be undertaken or prosecuted under this appropriation unless and until adequate provision has been made or is assured for financing such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds. This appropriation shall be available also for such loans, relief, and rural rehabilitation for needy persons as the President may determine.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 11, strike out "$1,000,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment may be the important issue in this bill. In order to expedite consideration of this matter, the Chair would suggest that amendments to this amount be offered now and that any substitute or amendment to any substitute be offered at this time, so that all amendments to the total amount of, say, one billion or one and one-half billion dollars or any other amount may be before the Committee, whereupon the debate on the various amounts will then proceed.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU to the committee amendment: Strike out "$1,500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000,000,000."

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS as a substitute to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 1, strike out "$1,500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,200,000,000."

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute offered by Mr. VOORHIS.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McREYNOLDS as an amendment to the substitute offered by Mr. VOORHIS: Strike out "$2,200,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200,000,000."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I ask the Chair to qualify the issue at this time and state for information of Members of the House whether or not the perfecting amendment to the committee amendment will be voted upon first or whether we will first vote on the substitute and the amendment to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The first vote will be on the gentleman's proposal to amend by inserting the sum of $3,000,000,000. The next vote will come on the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to fix the amount at $1,200,000,000. The next vote will come on the substitute offered by the gentleman from California to fix the amount at $2,200,000,000. The last vote will come on the committee amendment involving $1,500,000,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be limited to 1 hour.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, may I see if we cannot get some understanding as to time? There have been 4 hours' general debate on the resolution, and certainly there is no purpose to prevent the gentlemen from having reasonable opportunity to express themselves. There are other amendments that will come after those now pending. Bearing in mind the time of day and the necessity of finishing today, and all other facts, I wonder if an hour and a half would be sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on these amendments be limited to 1½ hours.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I inquire from the gentleman whether or not there will be any disposition to limit debate under the 5-minute rule after we dispose of this part of the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have no disposition to limit anything except in the interest of expedition of business. I think we have demonstrated already we want gentlemen to express themselves.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object. Yesterday we limited debate to 40 minutes, but members of the committee consumed the greater part of that time. Is it going to be the disposition of the committee today to do the same thing?

Mr. WOODRUM. All I want is 5 minutes. The time is within control of the Chair under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are many Members on the floor who are supporting the appropriation of $3,000,000,000. They have not had an opportunity to speak in general debate. The time consumed in general debate was largely among those who favored the $1,000,000,000 or the one and a half billion dollars. It was understood the other day there would be liberal debate and opportunity given all Members to express themselves. I sincerely hope the gentleman will modify his request and make it 2 hours on this particular amendment, with the understanding that the time may be equally divided on all sides so that Members may have the opportunity to speak.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I will split the difference and modify my request and make it an hour and forty-five minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, do I understand the gentleman's request is for an hour and a half or an hour and forty-five minutes on all of these amendments?

Mr. WOODRUM. On the several amendments relative to amount.

Mr. SABATH. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to divide that up and allow say 30 or 40 minutes on each of the amendments?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is within the discretion of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto, all substitutes, and all amendments to the substitutes close in 1 hour and 45 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, not being a member of the committee and not having been able to get time in general debate, I should like to have 5 minutes to discuss this matter. I want to know whether such time will be allowed me in the hour and forty-five minutes?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, recognition is in control of the Chair.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I am in the same situation as the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky. We have been trying to get time to speak on what is perhaps one of the most important bills ever presented to this House, but we have been unable to do so. There is no reason why this measure should be rushed through the House today. I think it is a matter which should be thoroughly discussed by every Member on the floor of the House who wishes to speak. I think an hour and forty-five minutes is outrageously too short a time, and I will object to any limitation of time under 3 hours, which is necessary for the full discussion of the amendments which are now before the House.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make any further requests at the present time and withdraw my unanimous-consent request.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I understand correctly that the McReynolds amendment will be considered before the Voorhis amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The McReynolds amendment is an amendment to the Voorhis substitute amendment and will be voted on before the Voorhis amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I intend to offer an amendment to the effect that the unexpended balances mentioned in the bill shall be allocated to the Public Works Administration. Is it in order to introduce the amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. No, not now. The amendment may be considered later.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the Chairman state for the benefit of the membership of the House what is the amount we are voting on or discussing now?

The CHAIRMAN. The first vote will come on the $3,000,000,000 proposal, although all the proposals will be discussed together in the debate.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to increase the amount from $1,500,000,000 to $4,000,000,000, which is needed. Will I have an opportunity to offer such an amendment and speak on it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot offer it, because all the amendments permissible under the rule have already been offered.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know whether or not the time is going to be limited in the debate on all the proposed amendments. Inasmuch as I am not a member of the committee and have endeavored to get some time to discuss this very important measure, I do not want to be shut off.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no limitation yet placed on debate except the limitation under the rule, which provides 5 minutes in support of an amendment and 5 minutes in opposition. This would limit the debate to 40 minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the rule which would make it impossible for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] to offer another amendment to this paragraph, and I should appreciate it if the chairman would advise me whether these are the only amendments which can be offered to this paragraph and whether, once they are disposed, no other amendments may be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. At this time there are pending all amendments which may be offered, because any further amendment at this time would be an amendment in the third degree. After these amendments are disposed of further amendments may be offered. However, the Chair, in order to expedite the proceeding, suggests that all amendments regarding the amount be offered at one time.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Will I have an opportunity to present my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. After the pending amendments are disposed of.

Mr. DUNN. I thank the chairman.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRADLEY. Did I correctly understand the Chair to state that debate would be limited to 40 minutes on each amendment, and, there being three amendments, there would be 2 hours of debate?

The CHAIRMAN. In the present situation there are four amendments pending. Under the rules 5 minutes in support of each amendment and 5 minutes in opposition thereto are allowed, making a total of 40 minutes, which the Chair may suggest is less than the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] for 5 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I believe we are now about to discharge one of the most serious responsibilities any of us has been called upon to discharge since we have been Members of the House. We are called upon here to decide how much money should be appropriated for relief for the next fiscal year. I do not know how many million people are unemployed in this country. I do know everyone seems to agree there are somewhere between 8,000,000 and 11,000,000 people without jobs, somewhere between 8,000,000 and 11,000,000 people who are capable of working but are unable to find employment. I submit that if you will study the conditions in your own particular locality, you must agree with me that out of these unemployed people, certainly, there are more than half who are willing to work, who want to work, who have families to support, but who have no other opportunity of earning a livelihood than on a W. P. A. program. You know these people in your community. You know a large percentage of the unemployed have no means of support except what they receive in the form of wages from W. P. A.

These people have just as much right to live as have you and I. There is no one of us here who is made of a different kind of clay than they. Perhaps some of us have had more advantages. Perhaps some of us may have a little better equipment to fit into this complex system of ours. Perhaps some of us may have a little bit more ability, if you want to put it upon that basis, or a keener intellect. However, no one of us has a greater right to live or a greater right to have an opportunity to earn a living than any other citizen of this great Republic. [Applause.] There is no one of us, nor any group of us, who has been destined by divine Providence to have the exclusive opportunity to make a living. We must not cast our vote in such a way that will deprive any other fellow citizen of the same right to work and live.

I do not say the Government of the United States owes our people a living. I do say organized society, the Government of the United States of America, has the responsibility of making it possible for every man and woman ready and willing to work and in need of employment to find an opportunity to earn a living for his family and himself. [Applause.] No one will deny there are at least 3,000,000 people in this country who are entitled to an opportunity to work and who need jobs. If there is graft in W. P. A., wipe it out. I appeal to you today to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to provide jobs for at least 3,000,000 people, because there is an even greater number of deserving people who need such employment. To do this job and do it right, we must appropriate at least $3,000,000,000 in this bill.

I want to appeal to you to support the amendment I have offered appropriating $3,000,000,000 rather than $1,000,000,000 or $1,500,000,000, in order to provide jobs for 3,000,000 of our citizens who, without this appropriation, must suffer; who, without this opportunity to work, must be placed in a position where they will be unable to provide for their little children; who, without this opportunity afforded them by the Federal Government to work for a living, must go upon direct relief.

The manner in which direct relief has been administered in this country, whereby entire families are required to live on direct relief at an average throughout the United States of about $17 a month, including shelter and all the other necessary things, is inhuman, and I appeal to you to support the amendment providing for $3,000,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. Chairman, I know what it is to be hungry and not be able to obtain sufficient food. I know what it is to be cold and not be able to obtain sufficient clothing. I do not know whether many Members of this House have had these experiences or not. I hope you may have not. If you have, you will agree with me that no man who has gone through these experiences can entertain any other view than that there ought not to be a single dollar in the treasury of any municipality, in the treasury of any county, of any State, or of the National Government, or in the pocket of any private citizen which should be restricted from use if its use becomes necessary in order to alleviate human suffering. [Applause.]

There can be no difference between civilized people as to the justice of a proposition of this character. Our differences arise upon the question of how we ought to approach the solution of this problem. At the present time the question presented to us is whether or not by the continuance of these inordinately large appropriations for W. P. A. purposes we intend to fasten permanently upon the structure of this Government the W. P. A. organization, as a sort of octopus upon the body politic, or whether the problem can best be solved in other ways.

Whatever you or I may think about Mr. Hopkins—and I shall not express concerning him my personal opinion, because it is foreign to the merits of this discussion—we must agree with him when he says that it will be necessary unless we change our existing policy to make the W. P. A. organization a permanent part of our Government. Why? Because we have always had, and we always will have, in all probability, many millions of our citizens who are unemployed. If it is the Federal Government's job to take care of them with Federal funds alone, the W. P. A. must be made permanent; and if this is our duty, $1,500,000,000, or $3,000,000,000 for that matter, is not enough. I have never thought that it was a safe or wise policy to undertake to furnish all classes of people who are unemployed with jobs at the expense of the Federal Government. I have thought that the solution of the problem lay through another avenue and that a proper measure of responsibility should be placed upon States and counties and municipalities and people who live where human suffering exists. In the first place, the Federal Government cannot do it. It requires no Solomon to know that we cannot long continue to spend two or three billions annually above receipts.

In the next place, it is not the Federal Government's responsibility to do more than assist where local means are insufficient. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM] mentioned nine of our wealthiest States which, he says, cannot carry their relief burdens. If the wealthiest States cannot do it, why should they seek to place part of their responsibilities on States that have less resources than they?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I cannot yield at this time, as I have only 5 minutes.

Now, in order to cover another part of the issue, because I cannot discuss these matters to the extent I would desire to do, I want to make some brief reference to the position of my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. Mr. CANNON's position is not indicated alone by the amendment which he has offered in committee and will urge here to increase the amount from one billion to a billion and a half dollars. His position is indicated by that amendment, together with the resolution he has offered in the House to authorize the President to impound 15 percent of all the appropriations which may be made by the Congress and to restore these impoundments in whole or in part at his discretion. In other words, the position of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], as illustrated by his amendment and by his resolution, is that, instead of reducing this billion and a half by 15 percent, as an exercise of the prerogative of Congress and in the discharge of the constitutional responsibilities of Members of the Congress, we shall appropriate the full one and a half billion dollars and then shall pass another resolution cutting off 15 percent of that, or $225,000,000, and authorizing its restoration in the discretion of the President. That is a mere shirking of responsibility. That is merely passing the buck to the President. That is only a confession that we cannot perform the duties we were sent here to perform, and must therefore delegate to the President the duty of performing them. I am in favor of Congress performing its own duties. I believe that, in view of restored prosperity—restored at least to an average of the past 75 years—we should either balance the Budget or confess that we cannot do it. Continuing to spend money we have not got and adding billions annually to the national debt fools nobody, not even ourselves. Unless we do our duty and place the Government on a sound financial basis, we may rest assured that the American people will send somebody here who will do it.

Mr. McREYNOLDS and Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, under the rules of the House there can only be 30 minutes of additional debate on all of these amendments. I should like to see gentlemen have a reasonable opportunity to express themselves, and I renew my request at this time, after we have had 10 minutes of debate, that debate on the pending amendment be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman, I am sure, intends to include the committee amendment and all amendments thereto, or any amendment going to the amount?

Mr. WOODRUM. To the amount; yes. This would give more than double the time for debate that would be allowed under the rules, and I hope the Committee will permit this to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto and on any substitute for the committee amendment and all amendments to the substitute close in 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendments close in 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] a moment ago stated that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto would necessarily be limited to 30 minutes under the rules of the House. I ask the Chair this question: In the event that some of these amendments, the amendment to the amendment or the amendment to the substitute should be voted down, would it not then be in order to offer an amendment to the amendment and another amendment to the substitute, and thereby extend the time, and in that event the time would run on indefinitely, unless by a motion or by unanimous consent, would it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct, insofar as there would be only 10 minutes' debate on any additional amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. But any number of amendments could be offered so that the debate would not be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the Committee thought the action dilatory.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, under the rules of Committee we are not allowed to fix the control of time in the Committee, but in order that we may proceed in an orderly way, because without it we will have great confusion, I ask the gentleman from Virginia if he does not think it would be advisable for him to have a tacit understanding that this hour and 30 minutes shall be controlled by certain gentlemen he may designate to represent the various interests?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I should be willing to do that, except that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole knows so well the position of the different Members that I am quite sure that he will be fair in dividing the time. I believe that would be very much better than the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is entirely satisfactory to me, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. What is the position now with respect to any pro-forma amendment that may be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. Pro-forma amendments are not in order at this time. They would be amendments in the third degree. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS].

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to say more than a few words. I have given you in brief this morning my reasons for favoring an appropriation of a billion dollars. I have offered this amendment as a compromise, $1,200,000,000, with the $223,000,000 carried as a reappropriation in the bill, which will make $1,423,000,000, if the amendment should prevail.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have not the time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman ought to yield on that point, because that is very important. The gentleman is entirely misinformed.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, I speak from the information that the chairman of the subcommittee gave me a moment ago and what he told me previously. I believe that $1,000,000,000 is enough, but I think that a billion dollars and $200,000,000, with this reappropriation of $223,000,000, certainly cannot be too little. I ask the Members of this House to vote for that amendment.

Let me tell the Members something. If we keep voting money out of the Treasury, the question will soon be, What are you going to use for money? Two billions and a half deficit this year. We have to call a halt, and the President is asking us to do so, and we can do it right here. You people have to report to your own people. You have had letters; I have had letters. Your own people are asking you to cut down the expenses of this Government, and it is up to us as Members of this House to do so. I hope that when this amendment comes up for a vote it will be adopted. It is certainly liberal, and I am sure there can be no question about getting by with that amount. That is all I desire to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize now somebody in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] for $1,200,000,000, preferably a member of the committee; if not, then a member of the minority; and if not, then a member of the majority.

Mr. SACKS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania opposed to the McReynolds amendment?

Mr. SACKS. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, we have before us what I consider one of the most important pieces of legislation that has come before us this session. We have to consider the rights of a large group of individuals in this country who are unable, because of economic conditions, to find employment to take care of themselves, and who are unable at this time to properly keep themselves and their families from starvation. In this country we are faced with a large unemployment situation. There are millions of people on relief and in W. P. A., and they deserve our consideration as well as the economic royalists and bankers and the large industries, and we, as representatives of all the people, must give them the same opportunity that we give to others. What do we find? We find that the W. P. A. officials themselves tell us that if we vote $1,500,000,000, 1 out of every 3 persons must be laid off, and thus go back to their States or to their local communities for help.

Can we do that reasonably at this time? I feel it is the duty of this Congress at this time to vote sufficient money to keep these people on W. P. A., to help the local communities, which are already overburdened. Their real-estate tax is now too high. How can we put these people back on the States and local communities? Furthermore, we cannot put them back on private industry, because private industry has also told us they cannot pay the present taxes. They cannot and will not give private employment. How can they help take care of these people? It is the duty of the Government at this time to give them sufficient funds. I say that at least $2,200,000,000 ought to be given to those on W. P. A.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, the time has come to balance the Budget.

In his message to Congress on April 20 the President stated that the receipts from taxes would be $600,000,000 less than he had estimated in January, and that it appeared the deficit for the present fiscal year ending June 30 would be $2,557,000,000. This deficit is 50 percent of total receipts.

This same message by the President contained the following statement:

> I regard it as extremely important that we should achieve a balance of actual income and outgo for the fiscal year 1938, and I appeal to you to join me in a determined effort to bring about that result. I am convinced that the success of our whole program and the permanent security of our people demand that we adjust all expenditures within the limits of our Budget estimate. It is a matter of concern to you and to me that so many special groups exert the strongest pressure to bring about increases in Government expenditures. If we are to avoid a continuation of the deficits we must resist these importunities.

After this warning and this appeal the President then recommends an appropriation of $1,500,000,000 for relief for the fiscal year 1938, and indicates that this will cause a deficit of $418,000,000, and that the deficit will be more than that figure unless Congress extends all existing taxes which expire this year, including 3-cent postage. He then adds that—

> The Treasury will be prepared by November to present suggestions for such new or additional taxes as may be necessary to meet deficiencies.

It therefore appears that the President makes two recommendations: First, that the Budget should be balanced in order to insure the success of our whole program and the permanent security of our people; and, secondly, that the Budget should be unbalanced by a present estimate of $400,000,000, and he puts the Treasury to work on new tax proposals to take care of the deficiency.

To one devoted to the principle of efficiency and economy in government, and at the same time to one who admires and accepts the leadership of our President, this message necessarily causes a conflict of emotions. But I know that the President has been subjected to the very thing which he cautioned against—that is, the "strongest pressure by special groups" from the mayors of a few of our largest cities. They want the Federal Government to continue to carry their local burdens; they are now conducting a campaign of propaganda in support of an enormous relief appropriation.

For this reason I believe that the real desire of the President is to balance the Budget and to keep it balanced, and to avoid the dangers of inflation, so as to insure success for his great program of economic recovery and social progress and guard the permanent security of our people. While the President has yielded to the pressure of these special groups, it is only because he has not been fully and correctly informed of conditions in other parts of the country.

Therefore, I do not feel that I desert his leadership when I accept his first appeal or recommendation to "achieve a balance of actual income and outgo" and urge the Congress to make a substantial reduction in the relief appropriation. I make this appeal for the following reasons:

I believe it is of vital importance that Government expenditures should be kept within Government income. This is imperative for the future safety of this Nation and the security of the people. Conditions existing 4 years ago justified public expenditure regardless of the condition of the Treasury, but the emergency is over and the quickest way to put the idle to work is to stop supporting them with public funds. It is time to put our house in order, to cut expenses, to abolish unnecessary agencies and bureaus, and to set up plans for the orderly retirement of the public debt, which is now in excess of $35,000,000,000. It requires nearly $1,000,000,000 a year to pay the interest alone.

The tax burden is heavy enough at present. I want it reduced rather than increased; and if we can avoid deficiencies, it will not be necessary for us to have further suggestions for taxation from the Treasury Department.

If relief is reduced to the real cases of need, only for those in actual distress and who find it impossible to provide for themselves and their families after making an honest effort to secure employment, a large appropriation will not be required.

The report of the W. P. A. Administrator shows that he now has on relief rolls thousands and thousands of aliens. I for one will never agree that there is any duty on this Government or that we have the right to tax loyal American citizens to support and maintain these people who have come here from foreign lands and do not think enough of our Government to respect its laws and swear allegiance to its flag. If we strike the names of these aliens from the relief rolls, we can reduce the appropriation by the amount heretofore paid them, and if we reduce the present bill by that amount, it will serve as notice to Mr. Hopkins that he should not continue to carry them on relief. Let them return to their homelands. We have all we can do to look after our own people. Their governments give no help to our people who are in distress over there.

It is also well known by every Member of this House that there has been and continues to be an enormous amount of waste in the administration of relief. It has been said here today that the overhead is between 35 and 40 percent and that the people in distress are actually receiving only about 60 percent of the amount appropriated. While I would not accept those figures as correct, I do know there has been some waste in the expenditure of the $7,000,000,000 which you have heretofore appropriated for relief, and that this money has been given to some people who were not entitled to it. One way to correct this evil is to provide less funds and thereby make it necessary to give closer attention and use better judgment in extending relief.

During the last few days I have received from 10 to 50 reports from every county in my district, nearly 500 letters in all, and, with only three exceptions, every single person has advised that there is a serious shortage of labor, that relief has served its purpose and should be either entirely dispensed with or substantially reduced. From these reports the following conditions appear to exist:

Farmers, sawmills, and industrial plants are unable to secure necessary labor. Domestic servants cannot be secured at many places.

Some of those on relief will not accept private employment when it is offered to them.

Many in private employment have quit their jobs in order to get on relief, because the pay is as good or better and the work much easier.

When those on relief are discharged to supply the needs of private employment, they refuse such employment and move to some other place, usually the larger cities, where they can get back on relief. The reason there is so much unemployment in the larger cities today is because thousands have gone there in order to secure relief, while the communities they left have a shortage of labor; only when relief is denied them will they return to their old homes and go to work.

On the one hand, the Government is spending millions—yes; billions—to put the unemployed on the farms and at the same time is offering billions in relief to invite them to the big cities. It is a vicious circle that can be broken only by using the square rule of common sense and sound business principles.

The National Youth Administration is doing great work for our young people and should be continued. A reasonable amount should be provided for the Resettlement Administration, as it has in many cases provided substantial relief for our farmers in the South. I think the completion of the pending approved P. W. A. and W. P. A. projects should be authorized, as the communities have already obligated themselves heavily for that purpose. There are a few other worthy undertakings which may be justified. And those in actual need, who are unable to secure private employment, after showing that they have made an honest and exhaustive effort to work, should be given assistance by employment on such undertakings. But that should be the end, that is where Federal appropriations should stop. Unemployment is no longer a national problem; many sections have no need for relief and others have a serious labor shortage; these big cities should handle and provide for their own local troubles and we should no longer carry their burden. We should bring this relief business to a close at the very earliest possible moment. Under no circumstances can we continue to spend more than our income. The President has appealed to us, only a few days ago, to "achieve a balance of actual income and outgo", and I welcome this opportunity to join him in a determined effort to accomplish that end.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] in support of his amendment for $2,200,000,000.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, my own deepest conviction is that it would be possible for this Congress to make available for a works program which would be efficient, which would be limited to constructive, necessary projects, $2,500,000,000, if we would revise taxes to that end and cut on expenditures which are far less necessary than this one. I have introduced a constructive piece of legislation in order that Congress itself might determine the policy of the works program, insist upon efficiency and worthwhile projects, and give the Nation dollar for dollar of value for each dollar spent. But that is not the amendment I am offering now. I am offering an amendment right now to give the Members of this House a chance to vote not to force any more persons off of his work job on to the relief and charity rolls. I am giving you a chance to keep things where they are now, to keep W. P. A. employment up to its level of this past year.

To you people from the farming States, I am offering an amendment which will make available enough for the Resettlement Administration to enable the farmers in the Dust Bowl to be given a little help after October 1, if such help is still required. Many families have been living on $18 a month of Resettlement funds in that section. All of that help will end even if we appropriate $1,500,000,000 on October 1, aside from the rehabilitation loans to somewhat more prosperous farm families.

The Philadelphia Record of April 26 of this year published an editorial in which the following passage is to be noted:

> During the last 5 years there has ben a rise of $56,000,000,000 in the value of listed stocks and bonds and about $40,000,000,000 more in unlisted stocks and bonds. The 5-year incubation period is now ended. Liquidation has begun as the lucky owners turn their gains into cash on which they enjoy a 60-percent income-tax exemption. If that exemption were wiped out on estimated profits of $30,000,000,000 of securities held over 5 years, Uncle Sam would have at least $700,000,000 more revenue, the difference between the proposed billion and one-half W. P. A. program and $2,200,000,000, which would stimulate all business.

It was contended by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] yesterday that for every man employed on a P. W. A. job three and two-tenths other persons would be employed indirectly. Even an humble W. P. A. worker who gets $55 a month, if he is employed, indirectly causes employment of other people. He spends every dime he gets, you may be sure. Likewise, if you disemploy him, he causes disemployment of other people. There has been a certain amount of merriment in the House today, to our shame, but in 600,000 homes scattered throughout the country there is consternation. In those homes people are wondering whether or not this Congress is going to compel the breadwinner of that family to step off a job doing constructive work for America and accept relief that he does not want. I have literally hundreds of letters from the good folk of my district begging me to help get them off the relief rolls and onto the W. P. A., where they can work.

People have said that we have to cut down relief; that this is a relief appropriation. It is not a relief appropriation. It is an appropriation for work to preserve the morale and spirit of the people. If this job of running this works program is not done right, it is the fault of Congress for not having legislated properly to make it right.

The American Federation of Labor estimated February 1, 1936, there were 11,577,000 unemployed. W. P. A. employment on that same day was 3,036,000. One out of four of the unemployed was employed on W. P. A.

This March 1937 the American Federation of Labor estimated unemployment at 9,429,000, and the W. P. A. has 2,115,000 employed. In other words, we have cut W. P. A. employment 33⅓ percent while unemployment was declining only 20 percent. Can anyone doubt the fate of people who will be cast off W. P. A. if we do not appropriate at least $2,200,000,000? One and one-half billion means 700,000 workers must lose their jobs in the next 2 or 3 months. One billion means 1,200,000 workers must lose theirs. Congress ought not to do this thing.

I am for improving on public-works program not ending it. It ought to be expanded, not cut down. And so I am against cutting a single person off the W. P. A. for these reasons:

First. Such action does not accord with the facts regarding present need for employment of the American people.

Second. It will strike at our recovery at its very weakest and most vulnerable point—consumer buying power. It will hurt every class of society.

Third. It is unnecessary, even for purposes of balancing the Budget, if we would revise taxes. Additional revenue can be raised without hurting a soul.

Fourth. Not one nation in the world has been able to run away from its unemployment problem, as we are trying to do now.

Fifth. We stand in desperate need of certain public works, which the unemployed can unquestionably carry through if given the chance. Examples: Flood control, soil conservation, drought prevention, low-cost housing, recreation centers in big cities, slum clearance.

Sixth. To cut off the unemployed means to threaten every wage earner in America with a cut in pay from added competition for his job.

Seventh. Such action is a direct repudiation of Democratic campaign promises of work for the unemployed.

Eighth. It is inhuman, unjust, un-American, and un-Christian.

We ought to take the good features of P. W. A. and the necessary features of W. P. A. and combine them together in one department doing necessary and essential public works and employing unemployed people without any reference to relief at all.

If there is not enough skilled labor, it can be trained.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we only have a few minutes to discuss this very important problem. As a member of the subcommittee who heard the testimony and reported this bill, I have asked for a few moments to briefly express my views regarding the matter.

We must look at this question solely from the amount of money here involved. It is not a partisan question. The question, in my judgment, is what about this emergency? This appropriation, if granted, is made on the theory that there still exists in America an emergency. That is the history of this legislation through the past several years and the cause which has heretofore prompted these relief appropriations by Congress.

Now, a word with regard to the emergency. When I heard my delightful and distinguished friend from Missouri this morning get up here and talk about conditions existing today in America and shed crocodile tears, as he did, I began to think that the last vestige of prosperity that we had heard so much about for the past year or so had passed and gone.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. No; I have not time; I am sorry.

Mr. Chairman, either we have a return of prosperity or we have not. That is just the situation. We see in the daily press that conditions are improving. If they are improving, is there still an emergency in America? My belief is that conditions have improved. This being true, as I think everyone will admit, it is up to us, as Members of Congress, to stand here and vote without fear or favor for the best interest of America. [Applause.] We should vote our convictions. If, as was charged by the gentleman from Missouri during his speech, that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and myself, members of the subcommittee, have joined with our Republican colleagues on that committee in voting out a billion-dollar bill, I am guilty, but I appeal to you to review conditions in America. This alone is what prompted my action. They have improved. Down in my country, in South Carolina, and in other Southern States, appeals are being made by farmers and agricultural interests for help, yet there are many men and women on the relief rolls who, except for relief, would be available. Because of relief they cannot get them. This situation exists in many sections of the country. My friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS] brought out another fact that is equally forceful—that in many homes of America domestic servants cannot be found, for a majority of them prefer to be on the relief rolls rather than go out and do an honest day's work. This is the situation, and I cannot consistently vote to continue such a program.

Mr. Chairman, it is not pleasant to have to oppose the amount of funds requested. I know there are a lot of worthy people who are unfortunate and who need work, and want to work, and need to be helped by this program. I am willing to help and to aid this class of our citizens, but we must face this issue frankly and fearlessly.

A word, Mr. Chairman, about the Budget question We hear cries on every side and from every part of the country to balance the Budget. Here is a chance to help balance the Budget. We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars for one thing and another, and quite often for projects which are unnecessary. I know that a careful examination and survey of unemployment conditions in America would reveal the fact that many thousands of these people could be taken off the relief rolls to work in private industry and agriculture. [Applause.] Why not, therefore, now that you have a chance, vote to save a substantial sum of money? Help balance the Budget and without seriously affecting the relief program.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I rise in support of the Boileau amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has been exhausted on the Boileau amendment. Ten minutes remain on the committee amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago there were quite a number of Members who were prepared to vote for an amount which was in excess of $1,500,000,000.

The strategy of those who are unwilling to provide an adequate amount, however, has been so successful that today a great many of us think if we get $1,500,000,000 that we have won a victory. The psychology of their strategy has been very successful, but do not deceive yourselves; $1,500,000,000 is not a victory for those who wish to take care of the people in this country who are deprived of the opportunity of earning a living in industry, because it is not sufficient.

I have heard a great many Members today speak on economy and advocate a reduction in this amount. I am somewhat amazed when I consider that these same individuals yesterday and the day before stood on the floor of this House and voted to increase expenditures in appropriation bills for their own districts. They are economists today but were spendthrifts yesterday.

Mr. Hopkins yesterday admitted to a delegation, of which I was one, who called upon him that if only $1,500,000,000 were allotted to relief for the coming year he would be compelled to take 525,000 people off the W. P. A. rolls immediately.

Mr. Chairman, they tell you that the President favors this. I submit, and I take the word of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] for it, that the President, in agreeing to this figure, made a concession to those whom he felt would not go along with his better ideas with respect to what was necessary. If you vote for an amount which will increase the total carried by the bill, you will come nearer to carrying out the wishes of the President than those who attempt to decrease the amount.

I appeal to you not to disregard the wishes of those people who have the right to expect that the Democratic Party meant what it said in the campaign last November when it received the mandate of the people of this country. I am not surprised that Republicans in this House should get up and speak callously of the poor and the people who are suffering misery throughout the Nation, but when men of my own party speak of them as racketeers I think it is time for some of us Democrats to think of our obligations to the unemployed and to cast our votes in accordance with the dictates of our consciences. For myself, and perhaps there are some who will think I am presumptuous, I am a new Member of this House and I have been quite willing to follow in a passive manner the leadership of my own party, but when certain older members of my party indicate, to my mind, a desire to become reactionary I would no sooner follow them than I would the Republicans on the other side of the aisle. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Members who received the mandate of the people to vote not only for $1,500,000,000 but to increase this amount. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state that at this time 5 minutes remain in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the House should vote at least one and one-half billion dollars for the purposes of this relief bill. After the W. P. A. program went into effect, 93,000 people were put to work in New Jersey. There was a peak in February 1936 of 98,000. The number has now been reduced to 75,000 people in the State engaged on the W. P. A. program. Taking an average of 3 to a family, 225,000 persons are dependent upon works-progress projects there. In the summer of 1935 there were 145,000 cases on relief. The number was reduced in December 1935 to 111,000. At the present time there are about 65,000 cases on relief.

If we pass this bill for one and a half billion dollars, we are not going to take care of the present W. P. A. workers who need work in the State of New Jersey; 3,400 projects have been completed there. There are 1,800 now active. The President has recommended, in all, 8,800 projects. Under the Works Progress Administration about $128,000,000 has been expended in New Jersey. All of the money was not spent for projects, a part being used for work by the Navy. During the fiscal year of 1936, W. P. A. used the relatively low sum of $46,000,000, owing to delay in starting projects. For the fiscal year 1937 approximately $75,000,000 will have been expended. The spending of this money helped our unemployed and gave them renewed courage and hope. It moreover helped our business and the small business man, and we have small businesses in New Jersey. We have, besides, many small municipalities which benefited, for the work involved in this program has been and is needed. The work performed by W. P. A. workers saves the local taxpayers money. We are building municipal buildings, we are improving our roads, painting and repairing our schools, and doing other necessary things that would cost the taxpayers of the community plenty of money, and indirectly they are being benefited by works progress. One billion five hundred million dollars is not enough to keep the people now employed, and even with that appropriation 25 percent will have to be let out of work.

It we should vote $2,200,000,000, it would just about keep the present number now engaged on W. P. A. projects in New Jersey. Out of that amount New Jersey would have $70,000,000, which is needed to keep the present number of employees. Out of $1,500,000,000, New Jersey will get only $54,000,000, which will not keep up the present program, but will require a reduction in personnel of about 25 percent. I am hopeful that private industry will absorb the reduction, and thousands of W. P. A. workers have in the past given up their jobs to enter private employment.

In New Jersey the number of W. P. A. workers has been reduced from the peak of 98,000 to 75,000, showing that there is a recovery which is responsible for the reduction. There is ground for believing that those who will be dispensed with will find private employment and that during the coming year there will be a further tapering off so as to lessen the need for W. P. A. work.

The appropriation should not be cut down to a billion dollars, because if it is you will throw 35,000 to 40,000 people out of work in New Jersey alone, which will mean 100,000 to 120,000 more destitute people, and in many sections our people up there will be in the same position they were back in the old days when this was first started and the same situation will exist all over the country. That was deplorable.

Before the advent of the Works Progress Administration people came to me every day and every night pleading for help and for work. They pleaded to all of you in your districts. The whole country appealed to the President. That is why we have W. P. A. It has been a great thing for New Jersey. It has been a great thing for all the North. It has helped those down South and out West. It primed the financial pump of the country. There is still need for it, and if it is to continue to fulfill its need $1,500,000,000 must be raised.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Members to vote for an appropriation of $1,500,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] to increase the amount to $3,000,000,000.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 46, noes 180.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Will that interfere with the demand for tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. VOORHIS. Do I understand correctly the next vote will come on the McReynolds amendment to the substitute amendment offered by myself?

The CHAIRMAN. Unless some other amendment shall be offered in case the Boileau amendment is defeated.

Mr. VOORHIS. In case the McReynolds amendment to the substitute is agreed to, would there be a vote on the substitute itself offered by myself?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; as amended.

Mr. VOORHIS. As amended by the McReynolds amendment. I want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment after the teller vote in order to protect my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has an amendment pending at this time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the committee amendment. Will that amendment come up before these other amendments and substitutes are disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. It may.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I renew my demand for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. WOODRUM and Mr. BOILEAU to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 51, noes 196.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment on the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer a motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOOK moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman intend to vote against the bill?

Mr. HOOK. It all depends on what condition the bill is in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. Will the Chair inform this House as to how in the world under any parliamentary rule I can get a chance to talk on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The offering of amendments is in order at this time. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Strike out "$1,500,000,000" from the committee amendment and insert "$2,000,000,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, today by clever maneuvering those who desire relief are forced to fight for the committee amendment of $1,500,000,000. This is the result of a drive by the United States Chamber of Commerce, the American Manufacturers' Association, the American Liberty League, and the National Economy League. The offices of Members have been flooded in the last 2 weeks by documentary evidence that the Budget is running away with the welfare of the country. However, I would like to point out in these few short minutes that the same gentlemen who today are espousing an appropriation of $1,200,000,000 or $1,000,000,000 for relief are the same gentlemen who were in favor of cutting the veterans' appropriations 4 years ago, and they are the same gentlemen who put the President on such a hot spot that 41 times in 40 days he had to change the tenets of that bill in order to save the Democratic Party from destruction in the next congressional election.

These are matters of history. They do not have to be reiterated and proven at each time of discussion. However, the Republican Party today, who are really sponsoring this program—and I speak now about the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who has a new C. C. C. program of "cut, chisel, and chop" everything that comes into this House—are forcing the Democrats to follow them blindly and supinely. After all, you are not chargeable to anybody else than the people in your districts. Nevertheless, the people in your districts voted for the candidate of the Democratic Party in preference to that of the Republican Party last year, because they found this program of the United States Chamber of Commerce and this program of the American Manufacturers' Association had been given a test by Hoover from 1929 to 1933, and it was practically a mad dance of death for this country. You gave the country an intelligent spending program, and Roosevelt is going down in history, perhaps, as the American Hercules of the depression. The country is not yet ready for another economy program. They had enough of economy under Coolidge and Hoover. The country wants intelligent spending. I hope you will carry out the original purposes of the Democratic Party.

My amendment calls for $2,900,000,000. I do not expect that you will pass it today. However, this amendment will put 2,800,000 men to work on the W. P. A., will keep the deal between the Federal Government and the States, and will prevent State and municipal bankruptcy.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOFFMAN moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman intend to vote against the bill?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I sure do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman qualifies and is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Three will be enough.

These liberal spenders, including the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON], who want to put men back to work, have considerable to say about the chamber of commerce and the Manufacturers' Association. There is this at least to be said about the chamber of commerce and the Manufacturers' Association, and the economic royalists to whom he referred: Regardless of what their intentions may be, regardless of the profits which they may have taken from the laboring men, they at least have given the laboring man work; they have actually provided jobs. How many jobs have you gentlemen ever given them?

Mr. KELLER. Plenty.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Plenty? Yes, plenty. With whose money?

Mr. KELLER. Mine and yours.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; you put a tax on the surplus of the men who are giving jobs, of the men who are operating the factories, who are in industry, and who need that surplus to insure employment in times of depression; you attempt to take that surplus from them.

Mr. KELLER. Sure.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Sure; so they cannot give any more jobs.

Mr. KELLER. So they can give more.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes. You tax their surplus so they can give more work?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is logical?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is in accord with all your arguments—no more logical.

Mr. KELLER. Why not?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why not? Yes. [Laughter.] How old is Ann? When you get through with taxing their surplus, if there is anything else that you can think of to stop the wheels of industry——

Mr. KELLER. We can.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not doubt it. You are the sweetest bunch of wreckers it has ever been my pleasure to meet or read about. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I recall reading as a child in a book, entitled "Around and About Old England", of those fellows who used to put lights out on the rockbound coasts, who used to build bonfires on the cliffs of old England, to lure in ships under the mistaken belief that harbors were at hand, so that those ships might be wrecked and later the wreckage might be gathered up. Those gentlemen were amateurs.

Mr. KELLER. They were?

Mr. HOFFMAN. They were. The gentleman is right again. [Laughter.] Next week you will come along with a bill fixing minimum wages.

Mr. KELLER. Higher.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And maximum hours.

Mr. KELLER. Higher wages.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Higher wages, sure. [Laughter and applause.] The wages higher and the hours shorter.

Mr. KELLER. Sure.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And again you are going to make something out of nothing.

Mr. KELLER. Something out of everything.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes? Something out of nothing.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the rules of the House be enforced and that the gentleman from Michigan be allowed to proceed under the rules of the House in an orderly manner.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I do not care. It is just an illustration. The gentlemen are like a bunch of schoolboys playing around with some toy. They have the United States Treasury now, and they want to see how long they can make the thing spin with nothing in it. You are the same group that lent support to the movement that closed down the factories up in Michigan which were giving employment.

Mr. KELLER. And opened them up again at higher wages.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Higher wages? Go up and ask the men who worked in them. It will take them 15 years to get back what they lost in your C. I. O. strikes.

Now, why not use a little common sense for a while and do a little something for those who are actually providing the jobs which are giving men work by ceasing to hamper and to hinder them by calling strikes which get the worker nothing, which close the factories, which stop production, which take away jobs.

Here we are debating the question of whether we shall give $1,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 to provide work for men who are out of work. Yet this administration, by taxing the surplus which those who give employment wish to set aside so that the business may continue to operate through times of depression as well as through periods of prosperity, destroys the power to give continuous employment. It prevents expansion of business. It prevents an increase in the number of jobs. You cannot destroy industry without destroying the freedom of labor.

This administration has given and now is giving tacit encouragement and active aid to that small group which has closed many a factory, deprived hundreds of thousands of workers of employment, cost this country millions upon millions of dollars, and by intimidation is forcing workers to join the C. I. O., pay an initiation fee of $2, monthly dues of $1 or more, and forcing the employer to deduct from the worker's pay envelope these monthly dues.

The oft-repeated argument here on the floor is that these appropriations are necessary to provide jobs. At the same time the administration is apparently doing everything within its power to destroy those who, in private industry, would give and are giving the employment which is necessary if men are to be taken off relief.

For what purpose and to what end is this course followed? The purpose may be concealed. The end, if the course be persisted in and if it be successful, will be the destruction of private industry, and when the burden of caring for those so forced out of employment becomes too great, the Government here, as in Italy, will take over the operation of private business.

If that be the desire of those who pose as friends of labor, the present administration should have their loyal support.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, the fate of this bill hangs upon the defeat of this amendment to strike out the enacting clause. It must be defeated. The speech of the gentleman offering it, to which we have just listened, is typical of the opposition that comes from the Republican side of the aisle. [Applause.] It makes no difference to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] and to his friends on that side of the aisle whether the amount appropriated is one billion, a billion and a quarter, a billion and a half, or two billions; they are against this relief bill. To make the motion the gentleman from Michigan stated he was against the bill. They are against this relief bill; they are against the Democratic administration and the President's program. Today they are attempting sabotage.

I grant you there are other gentlemen in this House who oppose the $1,500,000,000 to carry out the administration relief program for different reasons, but I want the friends of the administration to let the witnesses, who have testified and who will testify, pass in review, and in weighing their statements, find out how many of them have voted against all the relief bills that have been presented.

I have a very fond affection for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. We came here in the same Congress. He has 2 years' longer service because my folks left me at home during the Smith landslide, and you see what happened to the country. [Laughter.] I have attempted to analyze his position, and I sympathize with him because I know he is an ardent friend of the administration; but he is just out on a limb. When the economy wave came, you know, my good friend from Virginia went with the economy wave, and he went just a little further than probably he would like to be.

I recall one time on another economy wave he was a valiant soldier, a valiant friend of the administration. On March 10, 1933, he held his banner high, and with his pleasing personality, his eloquence that is unsurpassed in this body, men listened to him, and today many of them are at home. I had to hold tight that day in order to withstand the power of persuasion of my friend from Virginia. The thing that made me come through and vote against that so-called economy bill on March 10, 1933, was the knowledge that I had repeatedly pledged myself to my people to be against that sort of legislation. Today I am pledged to my people to support the administration's program for relief. I am pledged on 100 platforms to support the humanitarian leader we have in relief measures. [Applause.]

I would like to see the amount appropriated the irreducible minimum. I know very little about just how many dollars it takes to do the job. I dare say there is not a man in this House who can say how many dollars it will take during the next 12 months to do this job. The President of the United States is in better position to know than any Member of this Congress. The opponents of this measure have made no effort "to specify wherein" the cuts would be made. Without details or knowledge relative thereto I cannot vote blindly for a 33⅓-percent cut.

I ask you to defeat this amendment to strike out the enacting clause and to support the President in his request to secure $1,500,000,000 for his relief program for 1938. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion to strike out the enacting clause was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to amend the amount to $2,000,000,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON], the author of the amendment, stated in his speech that his amount was $2,900,000,000. The Clerk and the Chairman stated $2,000,000,000. I hope that will be clarified.

The CHAIRMAN. The amount in the amendment is $2,900,000,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'MALLEY to the committee amendment: Strike out "$1,500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,750,000,000."

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, about the only way I could get any time on this measure was to offer an amendment.

I do not expect it to get enough votes in view of the present temper of the House, but I do want to reiterate today my own personal stand upon this relief question. History repeats itself. Four years ago the same gentlemen who are passing out this economy talk came to the floor of this House and persuaded this House that they ought to balance the Budget because there was a depression, and to balance the Budget the House should practice economy on the men who had served their country and the underpaid workers in established Government departments. Now these same economy flag wavers come here today and want us to balance the Budget because of their claim of prosperity. Who do they want to practice economy on now? Of course, on the unemployed and the underprivileged people of this country, members of the same group of people against whom the economy knife was sharpened in '33.

Every complaint about relief that I have heard in the last 2 days has been a complaint about the administration of such relief. This Congress can correct its administration if it is bad. This Congress can amend this bill to prevent aliens being placed upon the W. P. A. pay roll. This Congress can drive out of the W. P. A. those selfish and politically minded executives who only within the last month raised the salaries of clerks in the administrative force, while thousands on actual projects are getting less than $50 a month. This Congress can correct all these things by amending this bill and restricting or earmarking every dollar in it, and this is our duty. But it is not our duty to pare relief appropriations to satisfy the demands of those who think more of their income-tax figure than of the hungry children of their less fortunate fellow Americans.

In some places and particulars W. P. A. administration stinks so bad it would make a self-respecting skunk hide its head in shame. But no reasonable man burns down the barn to get rid of the rodents. We should eliminate the evils without starving the needy in order to get at those evils. As long as there are million-dollar incomes in this country, as long as thousands of families in my city are trying to get by on less than $500 a year to live on, I do not propose to cast my vote on the side of a few squawking millionaires who are worried about their taxes. I intend to vote as I did in 1933, upon the side of the underprivileged, on the side of Americans who want work and have not been able to get it even in this boasted prosperity that requires us to penalize the poor to balance a Budget. Industry has still the duty to reemploy our people. Either business gives them work or Government must, and adequate relief appropriations will get my vote as long as a single American willing and able to work is denied work by our economic system.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, we are met on one hand with the evident necessity of reducing Federal expenditures and on the other by the demand that Congress appropriate new money for the extension of W. P. A. projects.

The Department is requesting a billion and a half. There is pressure from many quarters to enact a $3,000,000,000 appropriation. Perhaps the Department might be satisfied with a mere billion.

We are informed on one side that we must balance the Budget. Equally insistent is the cry that we must take care of the needy. If we fail to balance the Budget, we are informed that the country will find itself in a period of wild inflation.

If we balance the Budget without levying new Federal taxes, we must cast out thousands of deserving people whose sole livelihood is now obtained for all employables.

The question is fairly put before Congress and the 48 States, What are we going to do about W. P. A.?

As a Representative from Ohio, I am concerned primarily with Ohio's problem.

Ohio in the fiscal year of 1936 paid into the Federal Treasury $189,524,560.24. It received in grants $146,912,450.36. At the same time it became a responsible party with 47 other States, to a deficit of over four and one-half billion dollars, and Ohio's proportionate share of the 1936 deficit will be approximately $200,000,000.

If the United States Government had been operating on a "cash and carry" basis, as is the government of the State of Ohio, it would have meant paying into the National Treasury, not $189,000,000, but $389,000,000 in return for our $146,000,000 relief grant; and, instead of receiving 80 cents in relief for each dollar we paid in, we are actually receiving 37 cents in relief for each dollar that we pay, or assume to pay.

The question for the States to decide and the paramount issue of Ohio citizens is, How much longer do we care to use the Federal Government as our banker, knowing that we will receive approximately 37 cents in relief funds back from each dollar we place on deposit, and knowing that 63 cents of each dollar is our contribution for the maintenance of our Federal Government and the many bureaus that have grown up within it.

Ohio rightly must contribute its share to the upkeep of the Federal Government, but $243,000,000 in 1 year is far too much.

If we hope to balance our Federal Budget, there is no chance at the present time to reduce any Federal taxes. If we carry W. P. A. as a Federal agency, we must enact new Federal taxes.

The Federal deficit, which increased four and one-half billion dollars in 1936, cannot be greatly increased in 1937 and 1938 without total ruin.

I object to new Federal taxes on the citizens of Ohio to carry on a Federal relief program which the State of Ohio itself can handle at half the cost.

The taxpayers of Ohio would have been better off in 1936 if there had been direct State grants and no Federal W. P. A. They could have taken care of their needy just as well and saved millions of dollars.

They will be better off through 1937 and 1938 if Congress disbands the entire W. P. A. administration and turns the direction of work projects back to the State, where it belongs.

In Washington alone is a W. P. A. administrative office with 1,803 people on the pay roll, forming a vast bureaucratic organization which dictates to Ohio how Ohio shall spend the portion it gets back from the dollar it pays in.

There has been built up in Washington and in Columbus, Ohio, our State capital, and all the other principal cities organizations that are dangerous politically, that have been used and abused on many occasions.

A director in Toledo, responsible to a State director in Columbus, who is in turn responsible to the Administrator in Washington, none of whom are responsible or answerable to Ohio people, tells Toledo who shall and who shall not work; who is deserving and who is not deserving; what projects are best for Toledo and what are not. Deputy administrators in Washington pass on the advisability and necessity of projects in my district when they have never set foot in the district or in the State.

Such a condition would be unsatisfactory if we were able to assume that all down the line from Washington are men of integrity and ability—men who are not influenced by politics.

Toledo has had many fine improvements as part of its share of W. P. A. spending. We have also seen some very ridiculous examples of W. P. A. spending. We have seen hundreds of men throwing shovels full of dirt out of the channel of a stream in a fanciful effort to beautify and cleanse that stream, when any engineer could have told the W. P. A. director that the first spring freshet would entirely wash out all evidence of their work. Examples of this are too numerous to mention.

We have lived for years in a dream in which we imagined that the money poured out by the Federal Government somehow never would have to be replaced. We have regarded Federal grants like gifts from a benign Santa Claus and have shut our eyes to the fact that we have had to feed and clothe and buy reindeer for this Santa Claus, as well as support his numerous official family.

It is time we wake up, disband this overgrown and entirely unnecessary organization in Washington, and as States begin to do our own shopping with our own money, thereby buying the things we most need.

By doing so our Ohio taxpayers' dollar will again buy a dollar's worth of value. By doing so we in Ohio will be able to control the operation of our own public works.

We will be able to have men whose direct responsibility to the people of Ohio assures us that they are thinking about the interests solely of Ohio. We will be assured that useful public works will be found and that there will be fewer repetitions of our leaf-raking projects.

So far I have spoken only for Ohio. There are States, I know, that have drawn from the Federal Treasury two and three times the amount they have placed in it. Arizona paid in less than $2,000,000 and drew out more than twelve and one-half millions. Arkansas paid a little more than eight and one-half million for almost twenty-four million.

In one or two of these States where there has been some great public need it is probable that it will continue to be necessary for the Federal Government to lend assistance over and beyond proportionate share. But the direction of work projects within a State should be a function of that State and its municipal, township, and county officials.

These men, close to the people they represent, are in a better position to know where help is really needed. They are in a better position to know how much assistance the individuals for whom they are responsible need. They should be better able to eliminate chiselers from their lists. They can adjust and correct payments to conform to local conditions. I believe they could correct a condition which now exists in which we find certain individuals on the W. P. A. pay roll who will not accept employment in private industry. And I believe they will be able to give a fairer deal to the great number of honest, hard-working people who, through no fault of their own, are dependent upon public works for a livelihood.

The Washington director of the W. P. A. himself has told me that there are unnecessary offices and unnecessary administrative personnel throughout the W. P. A. and that they should be eliminated. He has admitted to me that there is politics in the organization which he is powerless to eliminate.

Ohio cannot afford the W. P. A. under its present set-up, and few, if any, of the other States can. I ask that this Congress, by turning W. P. A. control over to the States, institute the principle of good business management into our relief-work programs.

As far as it is possible without the levying of new Federal taxes, I favor direct grants by the Federal Government to the States to aid in carrying on their work-relief projects. These projects should be controlled and directed by the individual States as the most efficient and economical method.

And, further, I want every dollar of money raised for relief by new taxes in Ohio to be spent on relief in Ohio. I do not want Ohio to be forced to raise one dollar in new taxes for every 37 cents it gets to spend on relief.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have not so far spoken on this bill, because I have felt that the membership of the House should have just as much opportunity to speak as possible. It seems to me it is time that we met this relief problem face to face, and not as a matter of passion or prejudice. From my own standpoint, I do not believe that the Treasury of the United States can stand it to provide for relief upon the basis that is set up here in the bill. I believe that the money should be used for relief where it will go further. I believe that the administration of it should be turned back to the localities where the best people can be made to look after it, and will look after it; and if they need Federal help, that we should give them some.

Mr. TRANSUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I do not yield. If we had half a billion dollars distributed in that way, it would take care of more than a billion dollars will, distributed in the way suggested in the bill. I hold in my hand a letter from the president of the Mayors' Club of Massachusetts, representing 39 cities, expressing just that thought. Why can we not approach this problem from the standpoint of solving it and letting our people go back to work, instead of trying to continue this sort of employment and preventing those who are on unemployment relief from working in private employment? There are in every one of our districts situations where farmers cannot get help, where people who want to paint houses and have carpenter work done upon them cannot get the help because of the situation that is created.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Has the gentleman ever inquired as to the wages that these people are willing to pay for work?

Mr. TABER. They will be employed at reasonable wages. There are many in my own district of my own knowledge who will pay fair wages. Fakers come out and try to intimate that those who seek people to work for them will pay only 20 cents an hour, but I know that there are hundreds and hundreds of people who are ready to employ people at decent wages if they have a chance, fair wages, the going wages in their communities.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I cannot yield further. I believe that the very most that we should grant in this bill in the interest of the continuance of the stability of our Government is the amount named in the bill to start with. I believe any amendment that increases it is going to be of damage to the workingmen, of damage to the men on relief. If we go on with it a little further and the structure breaks, we are going to leave them a lot worse off than we will if we approach this problem from an honest standpoint and cease to temporize with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] to fix the amount at $1,750,000,000.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURDICK to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 1, strike out "$1,500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000,000,000."

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I first want to say that I am thankful to Almighty Providence that I did not have to ask any political organization for a chance to speak on this occasion. Whenever a measure of great importance comes before the people of this Congress those who wish to represent the people do not have a chance to speak at all unless they sneak in under the ropes and get that chance. [Applause.] I live among the poor people at home and I live among the poor people down here, and I know there are more out of employment today than there were 3 years ago. You have not settled this question at all. We are not asking for relief, we are asking for a chance to let our people work. At this moment there are 11,000,000 people out of jobs. The Government agencies say there are 7,000,000. Mr. Hopkins says 7,000,000, and they will always be out of a job. Now, let us be fair. He is telling the truth. We have an unemployment problem on our hands. There will be more out of jobs next year than there are this year unless we change our monetary system. It is the duty of this Government to give them work.

I had to offer some amendment in order to speak at all. Fortunately I happened to strike upon the right figure. If there are 7,000,000 permanently out of work, $666 per person would require $4,650,000,000 which should be appropriated. Did any of you ever try to eat and live on a budget? When you are hungry did you ever try a budget? When you went to sleep did you ever try to sleep on a budget? When you wanted clothing did you ever try to cover yourself with a budget? [Laughter.] We do not care about budgets now. We are more concerned with giving 7,000,000 people a chance to eat and a chance to live in houses and be properly clothed.

I know I am not going to get any support for this amendment. I knew it before I started; but I am going to leave something with you this afternoon that you will remember. Within the next 6 months you will find millions of people in this country looking for something to eat. The great West is drying up again. You are foreclosing on them out there. You are driving 10,000 people into unemployment in my State alone. You should get ready to furnish them work. We do not ask you for any relief. We want a chance to work in this country. If during the 150 years of this Government a system grew up which leaves 7,000,000 out of a job, it is up to you to change the system. [Applause.]

I do not expect any votes, but I am glad to have an opportunity to tell you what I think and what the people think with whom I live in North Dakota and in Maryland. Right now, in the spring of the year, they are feeding them. They are feeding them here and in North Dakota; but you do not know it. I know it. I help to do it. Will you stand here today and refuse to appropriate the money to give people a chance to work? Go ahead and do it, and then assume the consequences that must inevitably follow. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might state there are at least seven amendments pending, and they will not all be reached within the time allotted unless there is some suggestion that debate be reduced to about 2 minutes.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CURLEY. All day yesterday and all day today I have endeavored to be recognized by the Committee and by the Chair to speak on this proposition, and I have failed to be considered at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is doing the best he can. There are about 40 requests. The gentleman could have offered an amendment.

Mr. CURLEY. I did not want to go against a man who is offering an amendment for $4,000,000,000, because I am not against that. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. I sent an amendment to the desk for $4,000,000,000, and I have been informed that it is not at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk cannot find it.

Mr. DUNN. I had the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] write it out for me.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Montana rise?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I would like to be heard upon. I have an amendment asking for $2,100,000,000, and I would like to be heard upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be debated if there is sufficient time. In any event, the amendment will be voted upon.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I ask unanimous consent that all amendments be heard under the 5-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has already been fixed. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] is recognized.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Three hundred and twenty-seven Members are present; a quorum. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] is recognized.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, we have heard much during the last few hours about the unterrified Democrats. I pride myself as being one of those unterrified Democrats. I am not terrified by Republican solidarity nor the sporadic dissension from the administration that is administering the affairs of this country. Neither one terrifies me. I am a regular Democrat. [Applause.] Being a regular Democrat, as I understand it, the majority of the Democrats on the subcommittee, if I am correct, were with the main committee. The majority of the Democrats on the main committee are for the President's program of $1,500,000,000. You have had read to you a message from His Excellency asking for economy. They forgot to tell you that along with that comes a slash from $4,000,000,000 down to $1,500,000,000. That is pretty sharp economy. Why do they not give him credit for that?

Much has been said here about the cost of administration. You have one item in there that does not apply to overhead. You forget that the overseers and the timekeepers in most places over the country are people that have to work and are practically upon the same equality as those doing the work, but you want to charge all of that to overhead. That does not apply there. The head of one of these women's projects may be some widow with children. You want to charge that item to overhead. It should not be; it should be the same as the employee. That is some more of the money that reaches direct into the pockets of the relief people.

I have heard a great deal here about Executive usurpation of and encroachment upon legislative authority and the prerogatives of the Congress, but do you know that the country is asking of these older Members who have been here 15, 20, and 30 years: "What became of your prerogatives under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover when this debacle came upon the country?" [Applause.] Do you know that they are asking in the barber shop and the hotel lobbies, "What is your program?" And you are not naming any here in this Congress except some modification of the program.

Yes; you propose to slash this committee amendment one-third. Is this not a pretty sharp dig from $1,500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000? You have not heard any proposition on any of the appropriation bills to cut them by one-third of the total amount.

I am unterrified about my prerogatives being taken away from me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the Chair advise the Committee as to the time remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes remain.

Mr. McCORMACK. A further parliamentary inquiry, as to the number of amendments that are pending?

The CHAIRMAN. Six amendments are at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, in order to try to give those who have offered amendments an opportunity to speak in behalf of their amendments, I ask unanimous consent that all speakers be limited to 2 minutes within the time agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state that it already has been tentatively agreed that the Chair would recognize in the 5 minutes next to the last the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and for the last 5 minutes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. If all speakers are limited to 2 minutes, they, too, would be limited.

Mr. McCORMACK. Having in mind what the Chair has stated about the recognition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and the distinguished floor leader for 5 minutes each, and the fact that there are six amendments pending, I ask unanimous consent that each Member offering an amendment be permitted 2 minutes to speak in support of his amendment, and that thereafter an additional 10 minutes be granted, half of which is to be allotted to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and half to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman suggest that there be only 2 minutes in support of an amendment without any time in opposition?

Mr. McCORMACK. And I might say 2 minutes in opposition to each amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That, of course, would carry it way over the allotted time. The Chair may state that many of the amendments are pro-forma amendments.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that outside of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] that all other Members recognized by the Chair be limited to 2 minutes.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], fixing the amount at $4,000,000,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 1, strike out "$1,500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800,000,000."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, my young friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] offered an amendment for $1,750,000,000 in order to get the floor. I want to be perfectly frank—I raised his ante $50,000,000 for the same purpose.

Mr. Chairman, I am not deeply concerned about the fight to reduce this bill $500,000,000. Ever since the inception of this proposition, to my mind it has had the earmarks of a sham battle for the purpose of backfiring an effort to increase the amount above $1,500,000,000. Gentlemen have vociferated on the floor today that the President has kept his hands strictly off of this controversy and that he has not made any suggestion or attempted to influence any Members, any leader, or any committee chairman as to the amount carried in this bill; but I want to hazard the guess that if it becomes necessary the President will show his hand, and he will show it in favor of maintaining the $1,500,000,000 in the bill. So that is why I say I am not in the slightest concerned about the effort to make a reduction under $1,500,000,000. What I am concerned with about the bill is what $1,500,000,000 will accomplish.

I have stated on numerous occasions on this floor in the past 4 years that the return of prosperity in this country would not solve unemployment; that the people of this country eventually would have to face the fact that large-scale, permanent unemployment in industry is a fixed condition in this country. Conditions existing in employment in this country today, notwithstanding the great recovery which has been made by industry and business generally, only serves to confirm me in that opinion. The income of the people last year in this country was more than $60,000,000,000, an increase of more than $22,000,000,000 over the figures in 1932. Industry, stocks, bonds, profits have all gone up to normal, and even above normal, yet we still have 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 unemployed. We are asked, "Where are you going to get the money to finance $1,500,000,000 or $2,000,000,000?" I want to say to my friends that one-half of the increase in the national income in 1936 over that of 1932 would refinance every dollar for relief that has been expended by the Roosevelt administration in the last 4 years.

Mr. Chairman, the Congress passed an economy act in 1933 at the expense of the veterans and the Government employees of this country. Now it proposes to pass another economy act at the expense of the jobless workers and cropless farmers of the country. The situation presents some interesting problems in political mathematics which I submit to the mathematicians of the House.

Problem no. 1: A Member of Congress votes for a bill to cut work relief 25 percent and throw more than a half million needy workers out of a job, but does not vote for any cut in his own salary.

I do not want anyone to rely on my word as to the extent of the cut. At the peak of the works-relief program, about the close of 1935, work-relief projects carried a load slightly in excess of 3,000,000 workers. Now we are not cutting 25 percent off that load. It has already been reduced to 2,255,000, a reduction of one-third, and the proposal now is to cut 25 percent from this figure.

In the hearings before the subcommittee, at page 215, Administrator Hopkins testified as follows:

But 2,255,000 persons are being employed, and that is the figure that we must consider when we talk about the number of relief people now employed by the Government. An appropriation of $1,500,000,000, assuming that $1,387,000,000 were made available for a works program, would provide employment for a year for 1,730,000 persons, or an average cut of the present situation of over 500,000 persons.

Again—

Mr. HOPKINS. The W. P. A. will spend $1,850,000 this year. Other Federal agencies on projects similar to ours—I refer now to the War Department, the Navy, and other departments that have projects just like ours, with 90 to 95 percent relief labor—will spend $175,000,000. That is $2,025,000 that will be used for the work relief program this year (ending June 30, 1937). And that is the figure you must bear in mind in comparison with $1,500,000,000.

Neither figure includes rural rehabilitation. In other words, the $1,500,000,000 is a reduction of more than 25 percent for the next fiscal year from our expenditures of this fiscal year.

So these are the figures in men and money to show a reduction of 25 percent in both for the year beginning July 1, 1937.

Problem no. 2: A Member of Congress votes to cut 400,000 destitute farm families 100 percent after October 1 next, but does not vote for any cut in his own salary.

Now let us see what is the authority for this cut. I find on page 36 of the hearings the testimony of W. W. Alexander, Resettlement Administrator, who has jurisdiction of relief for needy farmers:

Mr. ALEXANDER. During the fiscal year 1936 the President allocated to the Resettlement Administration the sum of $253,100,000 for carrying on the rehabilitation program, for the completion of subsistence homesteads and Federal Emergency Relief Administration communities, and for additional farmstead projects, and for the submarginal land-retirement program.

During the fiscal year 1937 (ending June 30, 1937) a total of $171,900,000 has been made available for these same purposes.

From the bill now under consideration it has been suggested that the sum of $75,000,000 be allocated for the Rural Rehabilitation program, and in addition to this amount whatever funds the President may determine shall be necessary to administer the program of the Resettlement Administration.

It is felt that $75,000,000 can be so administered as to give supplementary aid to the farmers who have already received loans under this program, and to provide grants for those farmers who are now receiving this form of relief until their crops mature this fall. This sum, however, will not be sufficient to care for any grant needs after October 1, 1937. If there is a need for grants after that time, his additional allocation will be necessary.

I note specially the language in this last paragraph that there will be funds "to provide grants for those farmers who are now receiving this form of relief until their crops mature this fall."

And the further language, "this sum, however, will not be sufficient to care for any grant needs after October 1, 1937."

Now, let us turn to the picture in the Great Plains drought area at this time, where the greater part of this relief is required. A chart in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, which I have had the opportunity to examine personally, show that drought conditions in the Great Plains drought area are worse at this time than they were in the major drought years of 1934 and 1936. This means that there are no crop prospects for this fall and that the need for subsistence grants then will be as great as now, maybe greater.

Another paragraph from the Administrator's testimony is even less reassuring to the 400,000 farm families now on subsistence grants. The Administrator states:

The grant program is now costing approximately $5,000,000 per month. It is anticipated that gradual reduction can be made in the number of grant cases between now and harvest time in the fall, and if this anticipated reduction can be effected, it should be possible for the Resettlement Administration to meet the grant needs until that time.

That is, until October 1.

As I construe it, this means the reduction program will have to begin with the first of the new fiscal year—that is, July 1—and be completed by October 1. How can it be done? Nature has already canceled the probabilities under which a reduction can be made. If $5,000,000 a month is needed now for subsistence grants, it will be needed every month for the next fiscal year. There are 2,500 of these farm families in my district and the average grant per family is only $19 per month. This is all that stands between them and starvation.

I recognize that there should be an advance toward decreasing Government expenditures for relief, and there are considerations which, standing alone, would incline my judgment toward the figure named in the bill. These are, first, that if the appropriation proves insufficient, Congress reconvenes in January and can deal with the situation then presented; secondly, there is, of course, a great pick-up in industry, and there should be much seasonal employment during the greater part of the period between now and the reconvening of Congress. These are sound and persuasive considerations.

But "when sorrows come, they come not single spies, but in battalions." The Public Works Administration has nearly 1,200 approved school projects on its docket, in nearly 700 of which the sponsors have completely complied with P. W. A. requirements, to get the 45-55 grant and loan, and are now paying interest on the bonds they have voted and there is no money for the grants. There are many municipal projects on the P. W. A. docket in the same category. They are in my district and probably every other district in the country. I appeared before the Subcommittee on Appropriations on this matter and have spoken on it on the floor and will not go into it further here, except to say that I appear to be confronted with a choice of voting to earmark a part of this appropriation for public works or of throwing all these projects out the window. We are flooded with demands to have the Government go through with these projects.

There is also a flood-control program of projects scattered all over the country, authorized by the National Flood Control Act of 1936, and one such major project is in my district, for which the Budget has recommended an appropriation of only $30,000,000 on the entire program. This as I view it, is at least a temporary abandonment of the national flood-control program, with authorized projects in 39 States of the Union. This situation directly affects my district as well as the P. W. A. situation. Now I must vote for or against earmarking $25,000,000 for flood control. Scores of other Members are between the devil and the deep blue sea. And all for a few hundred million dollars, not to exceed $300,000,000 more than this bill carries. It appears that the richer we get the poorer we feel, which is not uncommon, and the saving is to be effected at the expense of those who have nothing. They are not in the lower income brackets; they are in the no-income bracket.

In my experience in Congress I do not recall a situation in which it has been more difficult for a Member of Congress to be consistent. I know that fifteen hundred million dollars will not be sufficient for work relief for the next fiscal year. I know also that unless provision is made in this bill for keeping faith with municipalities and school districts on their pending projects and for flood control and for the construction of ponds and small dams in the drought area, all of which will employ labor, these things must go into the discard. Three hundred million dollars more properly allotted would cover the whole situation. I had this in mind in offering an amendment to increase the amount in the bill from fifteen hundred million to eighteen hundred million.

Mr. Chairman, I saw immediately after the last election that a crusade for economy would confront this Congress. I named its objective, that of forestalling any increase of Federal taxes on wealth and of bringing about a reduction of such taxes.

Coupled with this was the claim that unemployment had been reduced to a minimum and was vanishing. I named the objective of this widely heralded claim, that of forestalling legislation of the character mentioned by the President in his great message of May 24 regarding hours, wages, and fair labor standards. I think I have not been mistaken.

And here is the paradox presented, that with national income increased more than 50 percent, it is claimed to be necessary to make a 50-percent reduction in the amount expended to afford the most meager livelihood for 2,000,000 workers who still cannot find private employment.

Without going into the question whether we must have a permanent work-relief program, it seems beyond dispute that we still need it. When two such diverse organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Federation of Labor agree that there are still eight or nine million workers unemployed by private industry, it should not require a census to determine whether we need a work-relief program. It is a significant fact that the need is greatest where the wealth of the country is greatest, that the great cities of the Nation have the greatest armies of unemployed. It is an indictment of our economic system. The relief burden in the city of New York is said to be about equal to that of 13 Southern States. It is admitted by persons in authority that if all the relief going into these States were transferred to the rest of the country it would be an inappreciable contribution to what they are now getting. This throws a side light on the action of the agricultural States in Congress in voting to cut relief to a billion dollars.

And perhaps it is only fair to state that this opposition from the agricultural sections has another basis than the small portion of relief which they require. Those of us who have been battling for more relief during these years find ourselves working against growing handicaps. It is claimed that farm labor cannot be gotten, that relief workers refuse farm employment and other forms of private employment, that domestic help cannot be gotten, that many workers no longer want private employment, that the overhead of work relief is excessive, that many get relief who do not need it, and many other things. True or false, the magnitude and force of these complaints grow and finally break forth on the floor of Congress, with Members who must go back and face their constituents demanding that it be greatly reduced now and ended as soon as possible. No Member could help noting these past few weeks that the man who got the applause on the floor preached economy. It is not fair to those of us who have borne the burden of this fight that it should not be known what we are up against. I saw this thing coming before it ever broke and now it is here and it is speaking with the voice of a majority. The Members who offered amendments for substantial increases or any increase were booed and shouted down.

I have never looked on work relief as a permanent remedy, but only as a palliative of the condition of the victims of our economic system. For years I have said that we must spread the load of society out over the machine or the whole thing would break down. I have repeated time and again that we must face the facts of large-scale, permanent unemployment in industry and of overproduction in agriculture. I feel as firmly fixed in this view today when we are being assured from high sources that unemployment is rapidly disappearing and that industry if given the free opportunity will soon absorb the unemployed, as I did in the darkest days of the depression.

My attention has just been called to statements made by the head of Brookings Institute, the well-known statistical agency, located in Washington. He is opposed to the President's proposed workweek limitations. He says the work requirements to restore living standards to the 1929 level are more than sufficient to absorb the present volume of unemployment. The economist stated that his computations were based on an assumed average 43-hour workweek.

Well, that is fine as far as it goes. The trouble with the formula as I see it is that it does not make clear where this 43 hours per week for all workers is coming from, but knowing something of the sources from which this propaganda comes, I assume this happy 1929 condition is to be attained by Government leaving industry alone. Let industry fix the hours, and all will be well. I wish it might be.

The trouble as I see it is that the more industry produces the less labor is required in proportion to the production and this process will continue. The machine will throw men out of jobs faster than jobs can be created for them. I remember when I was a young fellow reading speculation about the time to come when machinery would do all the work. Viewed from that far back, it looked like a happy ending. Every day would be Sunday by and by. There was one thing we did not foresee and that was that when everything was done by machinery what the workers would do. We are beginning to face that problem and eventually we will be seeing it so close up that it will shut out everything else. Then maybe we will get down to a solution of the greatest problem that must be solved by our civilization if it is to endure. New York City, the greatest city on the globe, the city into which drains the wealth of the world's richest nation, the city of the world's greatest fortunes, with more paupers than 13 Southern States.

I can remember when a soup line in New York City was national news. People talked about it, a soup line in New York City, a straggly line of down-and-outers waiting their turn at a soup kitchen. Out through the country we read of this phenomenon as we would read about a flood in China or a plague in India. Now we have worse than soup kitchens. In every city and town in the country, every village, out on the farms, relief of destitution has become the major activity of government, National, State, and local. It exceeds the sum of all other problems of government. And yet stocks and bonds and dividends go back to normal and above normal. As a distinguished Member of the other body said recently, "We have 36,000 families at the top of the economic ladder drawing income equal to that of 11,500,000 families at the foot of the ladder." And below that we have millions of families with no income.

And, with this situation facing us, we fuss over a matter of $500,000,000 more or less for relief.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Chairman, it seems that no matter what we do or how clean we try to be, cobwebs will gather and they gather even in the brilliant and astute mind of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia who yesterday afternoon, after a wearisome day and a tiresome week, said that he had no knowledge of the fact that the President of the United States wanted $1,500,000,000 for relief in accordance with the committee amendment set forth in this bill. He evidently had a good night's sleep and the cobwebs cleared from his brain, because this morning he found the message of the President, dated April 20, which he read upon this floor a few minutes ago, and in which the President stated he wanted $1,500,000,000. The gentleman said it appeared in four small lines at the end of the message. I think all portions of the message were in bold type and of importance.

The gentleman spoke of his fidelity and loyalty and the way he had upheld the President of the United States. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee this morning protested loudly that he had also followed the President in everything he did. But both gentlemen thought the President was wrong when he asked for $1,500,000,000.

I can picture next fall and winter, when the cold wintry winds blow, Mr. WOODRUM standing in Roanoke, Va., and Mr. MCREYNOLDS in Chattanooga, Tenn., when the breadline forms and they will fill the empty baskets and the empty pails with the concrete, sand, and cement that will be poured into this $5,000,000 road that they voted for yesterday. They voted $5,000,000 for a road, but they desire to economize. They want to cut the President's recommendation as to what we shall do to feed the people of the country.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] stated yesterday on the floor that no man in this body knew how many were unemployed. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] said upon the floor today that no man in this body knew how much money was necessary. I agree with both of those statements. But, there is a man who does know, a man who has studied it, the one man who has pledged himself to it and the one upon whose platform both Mr. WOODRUM and Mr. MCREYNOLDS ran last fall, which platform provided for taking care of the undernourished, the ill-fed, and the poor of this country. I refer to the President of the United States. The President says, "$1,500,000,000."

I ask the Members of this House, if they do not know—and some of them have put themselves on record as not knowing—to follow the judgment of the man who does know, who has led the country this far toward prosperity and better things, and let us stop quibbling over this amount, that amount, or the other amount that we all admit we know nothing about and follow what the man who does know recommends.

Mr. Chairman, for the reasons indicated, I oppose this amendment and any other amendment except the committee amendment providing for $1,500,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] in the amount of $1,800,000,000.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOOK: Page 2, line 1, strike out the figures from the committee amendment "$1,500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,629,000,000."

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, the things that have happened on the floor of this House today put me in mind of the wild scramble I witnessed in the stock exchange in New York when I visited there a short time ago. When a Member of this House of Representatives has to use every bit of knowledge of parliamentary procedure and the rules of the House to try to chisel a few minutes to speak in behalf of the unemployed and those in distress in this Nation, and still those who favor mere pittance to those poor unfortunates who are crying for help monopolize all the time, I must say that this is crazy procedure.

It seems that certain Members talk one way and vote another way. Why not be sincere in their actions, why not be consistent, why talk economy in one breath and vote and authorize an ogre of spending in another?

I have heard this word economy and economize so much of late, although not sincerely by some, that I dream of it at night. The night winds roar about it, and the storm on the floor of the House rumbles and roars economy, but by whom may I ask? Is it those who are really in favor of economy that do the most talking, or is the most talking done by those who practice it the least? Just what is economy in government? Webster says it is the management of the affairs of government or community with reference to its source of income, its expenditures, and the development of its natural resources to the satisfaction of man's needs. Certainly the development of children, the youth of this Nation, and the caring of unemployed fathers and mothers is real economy. Webster further says, it also means household management. Economize means to expend prudently.

I have heard Members speak on the floor of this House day after day and urge economy but when it comes to vote for anything which pertains to their State or district they would vote the Treasury away. Then after the authorization and appropriation is made, make sure that they spend it whether it is needed or not. Is that true economy?

I know why some of you Members here want to appropriate little or nothing for relief. It is because if adequate provision is made for the unemployed at fair and honest wages and not the starvation $44-per-month rate that is paid in my district, that you would not be able to keep people in a state bordering on medieval servitude.

Let us economize, but please, kind sirs, do not do it at the expense of those who labor for a living and earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow, that their little ones may not have to starve. Let us economize in the interest of mankind and in the interest of America by breaking down the monopolistic price-fixing, wage-fixing corporations of this Nation and forcing them to pay a living wage to their employees. Let us economize by bringing about better living conditions for the great mass of people and thereby save for this and future generations, our democratic form of government.

Do not, under the cry of economy, endanger the very foundation of our democracy. You who oppose adequate appropriations for the unemployed cry "racketeering and extravagance", and with the argument of false economy warn us that because, in your opinion, all the money here appropriated will not go to the needy unemployed but to political racketeers. I do not believe in dishonesty or racketeering in any form and so stated and made it clear in a speech that I made on the floor of this House on March 30, 1936. It is my claim that we should rid the W. P. A. and the relief program of any such racketeers and any such dishonesty as I mentioned in that speech but please do not burn the barn to get rid of a few of the rats. We have some very fine men in the Works Progress Administration, capable, able, and honest humanitarians who I know will clean up this dishonesty and racketeering if we only give them encouragement and help.

If you want real economy in this Government why not be honest and sincere and practice economy as it should be practiced. Let us look into some of the appropriations for some of these expositions and centennials where millions have been squandered for selfish purposes, not only by this but by past administrations. I just heard a fine gentleman from Texas, and I like the gentleman, so anything I say here is not personal, burst forth with a flow of oratory that would bring tears from a stone, very impressive, very persuasive, but in my opinion not as sincere as it may seem. Let me say to him that he should examine some of the things that happened in connection with his own State and find out why economy as well as charity should not begin at home. Texas is a great State, we all respect Texas and at the time they were preparing to celebrate a centennial we were requested by the gentleman and by others from Texas to appropriate $3,000,000 of Federal funds for such purpose. Feeling as I did as to the greatness of that State and the fineness of the genial gentlemen who represent it, and believing them when they said they actually needed that amount, I voted to authorize such sum to be appropriated for this centennial. May I now say that we should never have authorized over one-half of that amount, because only $1,500,000 was spent on the centennial, the other $1,500,000 was spent, not for what Congress intended, not for what Congress appropriated the money for, but for commemorating historic sites in Texas along the highways and in other places in Texas. Is that economy? Those words "racketeering and extravagance or what not" seem to take a different meaning at times. Why did not the gentleman from Texas, who is now preaching economy with regard to this relief and unemployment appropriation, see that the money not needed in the centennial in their State was returned to the United States Treasury where it belonged. Some of us might be impressed with your pleas if you began earnestly and honestly the program of economy. I could name you hundreds of other such instances. Oh, yes; "millions for pet projects but starvation for the unfortunate unemployed." Is that your slogan? It may be now, but it was not when you ran for office last fall. Your slogan then was, "Support President Roosevelt and his program."

One of the gentlemen who preceded me would ignore the human side of this program and sacrifice starving families on the altar of economy said, "Let us not be politicians, let us be men." May I say to him and others, "Let us not be demagogues, either." Why do some of you insist on refusing the laborer's family a right to their daily bread and without a blink of an eye appropriate millions—yes, billions—to be paid to the munition workers and dealers in death?

I have heard gentlemen speak here this afternoon who must have been schooled by the Liberty League, the international bankers, and John Hamilton, because I have heard the same weird cries come out of the wilderness before, and I became alarmed and checked into the statements that the projects built by the Works Progress Administration were not useful projects but were extravagant and useless. I found in each instance these charges to be "pure bunk." The Works Progress Administration has built useful projects in my district, and I do not want them handicapped by small, inadequate appropriation. I believe in a real works program wherein we will be able to pay men and women a fair wage for their work, so that they may be self-respecting citizens of this great democracy. The prevailing wage should be paid, but the prevailing wage should be determined in a fair and just manner and not be determined by the agency that is to spend this money. I believe in taking care of needy family men first, and then there should be a program set up where the needy unemployed of all classes should be taken into consideration. In my State, industry has refused to care for those men and women who are over 45 years of age, and according to the State director of the Works Progress Administration in Michigan, it is idle to say that there are work opportunities for all of the unemployed people in Michigan, for such is not the case, and until such time as work opportunities can be found they must remain a public responsibility.

At the peak of the W. P. A., in January and February of 1936, the W. P. A. quota for Michigan was 101,000. This has dropped since that time 44 percent, due to the tremendous industrial pick-up in the automotive industry of Michigan. Those persons now on the W. P. A. rolls in Michigan are largely comprised in industrial areas of persons over 45 years of age, which industry apparently does not want, and in the cut-over region of the Lower Peninsula and the entire Upper Peninsula they represent largely stranded population for which there is no local gainful occupation.

I trust you will realize when you cast your vote for the amount to be appropriated in this bill that the Democratic Party is the party that protects the common man and is striving with all its might and main to keep democratic principles alive, and that you will remember the slogan of last fall that no person will starve in this land of plenty. Your vote and your support for adequate relief and unemployment appropriation will be appreciated by President Roosevelt and the real American people who make up the bulwark of this democracy.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, we are near a momentous vote in this House. I am for the $1,500,000,000 because it is the minimum amount that the President says should be appropriated for carrying on this great program of recovery. [Applause.]

We have voted money without stint, I know; we have been liberal, I know; we have brought this country from its darkest hour since Valley Forge to complete recovery in many instances, in many sections, and among many classes. [Applause.] We will not do our duty by the American people at this time, nor to the generation that immediately succeeds the present generation, unless we carry on this program of recovery until it reaches every section of the country and every class of American citizens. [Applause.]

In all probability you will find on the vote that is coming in a moment that each and every one of the gentlemen who are saying that $1,000,000,000 is enough will rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee providing for $1,200,000,000.

I think I know. I trust I know, that the head of the Nation at this time, the leader of the responsible party in power, feels as deeply upon this measure upon which you are going to vote this afternoon as he does about any measure which has been presented to this Congress or that will be presented to this Congress. We must trust somebody. I do not know. I do not have the avenues of information which come to Mr. Hopkins, the Administrator of the Works Progress Administration. I do not have avenues of information possessed by all the people with whom the President talks and with whom he is in contact. I do not have the information upon this subject that the President possesses. I cannot know as much as they do about the situation in this country. I do know this: I stand by them and sustain them today in their estimate, and give them what they ask. If suffering comes in America during this year or in the winter months of this year or next year, the fault will not be upon my head or the blood upon my hands. [Applause.] Let me repeat that I think we can afford to trust the man who has brought this country from the lowest point of despair it has ever known in its history to recovery almost complete. Let us trust him and give him the amount he asks in order that this recovery may come to every class and every section of America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] in the sum of $2,629,000,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the debate today has demonstrated what I told you in opening the debate on yesterday. The great President of the United States—whom I love and whom I have supported, and whom I shall continue to support—has submitted his estimate to the Congress and has left it here for you to exercise your free and untrammeled independent legislative judgment upon it. Nobody has said anything to you about it from that day to this. I know the President well enough, and you know him well enough, to know that if this fight were going on here and this matter were close to his heart—well, you know what would happen, and I know what would happen.

Are you going to give Mr. Hopkins what he wants from now on? Are you going to do that? I am not willing to do that. Oh, I trust the President. Mr. Hopkins states this must be a permanent policy of the Federal Government. I talk to you here because this is your problem. You are committed to the American people on the promise that this matter of relief by the Federal Government would be a temporary emergency proposition and the Federal Government would withdraw from it as fast as it could without causing suffering. [Applause.] I charge you today to keep this promise that you and I made to the people of America. There need be no suffering if this $1,000,000,000 is given for relief and not given to expensive, elaborate overhead—printing, boondoggling, and other things which take up the money we expect to go for relief. Many States are contributing nothing for relief. Cut this amount down today.

I may say this about the parliamentary situation. Those of us who would like to see some curtailment should, of course, under the parliamentary situation, vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS], which is the nearest you can get to the $1,000,000,000 under the parliamentary situation. Then the vote comes finally in the Committee on the McReynolds amendment.

There will be direct votes as between the $1,200,000,000 and the $1,500,000,000 in the Committee. If the Committee then should act, as I hope it will, and adopt the amendment carrying $1,200,000,000, when this amount comes before the House, the direct vote would come in the House as between $1,200,000,000 and $1,000,000,000. This would, of course, mean that the bill would leave this body with a direct appropriation of $1,200,000,000, and, with $223,000,000 of reappropriated money, the total would be less than $100,000,000 under what the President himself has stated is necessary to carry on the program.

What would we be doing? We would be setting our economic house in order. We would have a little money in the Treasury for river and harbor projects, for public buildings, for great splendid public improvements, which would put people to work and would be lasting monuments to our program, and this would help the country in a solid, substantial, sensible, and logical manner.

There is no partisanship in this. You do not think JIMMY BYRNES, Senator ROBINSON, and other gentlemen in the Senate, and gentlemen you have heard here today are any less anxious to carry on and uphold the program than are these other gentlemen. Of course, we all want to do this. There is an honest difference of opinion as to the amount required. You know perfectly well that if there should not be enough appropriated here today these gentlemen know the way back to Capitol hill. They have beaten a path up here every year. Last year we gave them $1,425,000,000, and they came back for another $790,000,000.

If you comply with what my good friend the gentleman from Texas has just stated, give everything Mr. Hopkins wants, and do not put on the brakes, then God help the Treasury of the United States. Somebody has to put the brakes on. We do it in a small way, but actually we will be almost liberal in the amount we appropriate. If you make this cut of $300,000,000, you will still be appropriating actually what the President himself said he would like to have available for relief in 1938.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Under the agreement all time has expired.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes. I have been waiting for the last 2 hours to get an opportunity to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to call a spade a spade. I am used to doing that, because I play poker once in a while.

Mr. Chairman, there have been many amendments offered this afternoon to increase the appropriation from one billion and a half dollars to $4,000,000,000. I offered one to increase it to $4,100,000,000.

I am going to ask any Republican, Democrat, or any person representing the various parties in this House to answer this question, "How in the world can we provide the necessities of life for 30,000,000 people—who, according to the President of the United States are ill-clad and ill-fed—on $1,500,000,000?" I would like to have that question answered by some Congressman.

Men who have tried to increase this appropriation have been unjustly criticized. It has been stated that they are trying to deplete the United States Treasury. When 30,000,000 people are in need of food, shelter, and clothing and you refuse to vote for an appropriation which will provide those essentials, you are not doing your duty toward your fellow men. Last fall when the campaign was on no candidate, whether Republican or Democrat, said to the people, "If I am elected to Congress, I shall vote for a measure which will reduce the appropriations and deprive you of work." Oh, no, every one of us did our derndest to impress upon the minds of our constituents that if they would send us to Congress we would provide adequate pensions for the aged and jobs for the jobless. Are we living up to the promises we made?

Mr. Chairman, if a majority of us were actuated by humanitarian motives instead of selfish ones we would not hesitate to appropriate sufficient funds to take care of every person in the country who is in need. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation.

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] has an amendment at the desk. Does the gentleman desire that the amendment be voted upon?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be heard on the amendment for 4 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how many amendments there are at the desk?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the proponents of each amendment may have 2 minutes within which to present his views to the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Montana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana to the committee amendment: Strike out "$1,500,000,000" and insert "$2,200,000,000."

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, being a lawyer, of course, everybody knows I cannot say anything in 2 minutes. However, I want to say this to you in the short time I have: By the use of gasoline and machinery we have driven out of the fields and off the ranges practically all of our horses. Later they were abandoned, permitted to run loose upon the highways, byways, and in the fields. They were taken up here and there, shipped to meat canneries and ground into meat, and in some instances sold as beef in this and foreign countries.

Machinery has done the same thing to the workingman. It has taken his employment. It has sent him home and from there upon the streets and the highways looking for work, and unable to find it regardless of how badly he wishes it. We cannot do with him as we did with the horse. He cannot be killed or otherwise disposed of. He and his family must be fed. They must be clothed. They must be given employment, and it is up to us, the only tribunal that can speak and act for them. We are called upon this afternoon to meet that human obligation. Are we going to fail humanity? We must appropriate sufficient money to meet our needs. There is a lot of talk about balancing the Budget. The farmer's budget and the workingman's budget has not been balanced within my memory. I do not get excited about this condition.

I also wish to call your attention to the fact that every unemployed man in this country can be put to work at useful employment if we will only use our heads. They do not need to be upon relief. They can be given work at useful, permanent, and productive employment. You can ask your distinguished Representative here from the State of Iowa, Mr. WEARIN, about the ravages of the Missouri River between the States of Iowa and Nebraska. You can go further and ask your distinguished Representative from the State of Nebraska, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, to confirm what I have said. [Applause.]

The Missouri River alone has eaten the intestines out of the finest lands in eastern Nebraska and western Iowa, through which this river flows. We may employ thousands of men for the next 10 years in riprapping, building dikes and dams along this river to prevent its ravaging of our greatest resource, namely, our finest land. This is only one river. Our country is beribboned with them from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast, doing irreparable damage by cutting away good lands, flooding and submerging others, and sweeping good topsoil into the final waters to which they flow. This line of work of itself would employ hundreds of thousands of men for years at living wages. Do not ask them to go on relief in order to secure a job. No man wants to be a public charge. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BERNARD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BERNARD to the committee amendment: Strike out "$1,500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,200,000,000."

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Chairman, I have heard much today about recovery, and I must frankly admit there has been recovery, but for whom? For the leaders of industry. They have made fabulous profits, but for those who were and are today down in the mud and the mire of hunger and misery there has been no recovery. I know that in my own district many people are hungry; and if we do not do something to alleviate these conditions, the responsibility of the dire consequences will fall squarely on our shoulders.

I do not believe there is a single individual in this House who can conscientiously say that in his district there are not men, women, and children who lack the bare sustenance to keep body and soul together. The president of the American Medical Association recently made the statement that today in our country we have millions of young boys and girls who are in the formative stage of their lives, and because our dastardly economic system fails to provide them with adequate nourishment when they become adults they will lead lives of misery because their bodies will not have the necessary strength to resist the germs of disease.

You may vote against this amendment, but those from whose hungry mouths you have taken bread will remember it when they choose their "servants of the people" at the next election.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] spoke happily of recovery. He said:

God knows the country is recovering. * * * Every business index shows the country is recovering.

On the basis of recovery the gentleman recommends a cut in relief appropriations.

But whose recovery are we celebrating? Every business index gives the answer. It is the recovery of the big monopolies and the big investors. It is the recovery of the rich at the expense of the poor.

"Recovery" implies a return to the good health of 1929. We still have the bad habit of regarding 1929 as the golden age of plenty. But even in 1929 not everyone's finances were healthy.

In 1929, according to a report of the Brookings Institution, nearly 6,000,000 families, more than 21 percent of the total, had incomes of less than $1,000.

More than eleven and a half million families at the bottom of the income scale had an aggregate income of $10,000,000,000.

Only 36,000 families at the top of the income scale had the same aggregate income—$10,000,000,000.

One-tenth of 1 percent of the families at the top got as much as was received by 42 percent of the families at the bottom of the income scale.

That was in 1929. Today "recovery" has brought even greater concentration of wealth to even fewer families at the top. And it has brought more bitter poverty to an ever-increasing number of families at the bottom of the income scale.

Now, we want the families at the bottom to "balance the Budget."

It is recovery—but 10,000,000 are out of work.

It is recovery—but one-third of the Nation is ill-housed.

It is recovery—but not for those dropped from the relief rolls if we pass this hunger bill.

We cannot reread too often the brief conversation between Mr. Hopkins and the gentleman from Missouri which took place during the hearings on this bill:

Mr. CANNON. You are reducing the number on the rolls. Is that because of the employment of people in industry, or is that through an arbitrary curtailment of the rolls?

Mr. HOPKINS. I would say both. We have arbitrarily curtailed the rolls by stopping intake during some months this winter. * * * In cities like Washington and other cities which provide no help for any employable persons, it simply meant that those people were not helped.

Mr. WOODRUM. What did they do?

Mr. HOPKINS. They were hungry, they did not have money to pay their rent, and they lived very miserably.

It is recovery—but people are hungry.

You can call it recovery if you want. To me it looks like a chronic illness, for which continued treatment over many years to come offers the only hope of a cure.

The Boileau bill, $3,000,000,000 for 3,000,000 jobs, is the kind of treatment it takes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS] in the amount of $1,200,000,000.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCMILLAN) there were—ayes 145, noes 175.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MCREYNOLDS and Mr. VOORHIS to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 150, noes 181.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] in the amount of $2,200,000,000.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VOORHIS) there were—ayes 44, noes 184.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes upon the committee amendment in the sum of $1,500,000,000.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 210, noes 128.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out "$276,700,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$415,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, strike out "$420,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$630,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that those committee amendments which change the amounts, which are based on the amount of $1,500,000,000, be considered as agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider all of the amendments in this section on page 2, pertaining to the amounts, en bloc. Is there objection?

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I object. I have an amendment that comes in there prior to these.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, strike out "$420,000,000" and insert "$630,000,000."

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to, with the understanding that the point of order may not be made against subsequent amendments to be offered to change the amount of the allocation, and then we can consider them en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the remaining committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, strike out "$253,300,000" and insert "$380,000,000"; page 2, line 21, strike out "$50,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after line 18, insert the following: "The funds allocated hereunder to the Works Progress Administration shall be so apportioned and distributed over the 12 months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and shall be so administered during such fiscal year as to constitute the total amount that will be furnished during such fiscal year through such agency for relief purposes."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. PARSONS. I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order because it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The bill in question is not a general appropriation bill, and therefore clause 2 of rule XXI does not apply. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from California is recognized in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the committee is for the obvious reason of making the appropriation of $1,500,000,000 last the entire year. I am not entirely sure what the legislative procedure would be in case something happened to make it evident that a deficiency appropriation would be necessary before the end of the fiscal year. Several Members speaking on the floor this afternoon admitted that they did not know exactly how much money would be needed through the entire year. Obviously some of those who spoke at first for the $1,000,000,000 appropriation by their votes later changed and said it should be $1,250,000,000. If the original statement that $1,000,000,000 was ample and perhaps all that would be needed was correct, and then later there was a change of mind with the vote in favor of $1,250,000,000, even those who voted on the proposition do not know whether $1,000,000,000 or $1,250,000,000 is necessary. It may not be enough before the year is over, and if this amendment would preclude a deficiency appropriation later in the year, and something happens between now and the end of the fiscal year making it necessary to use more money than they now contemplate using each month, we would be in a bad fix. For example, if relief for flood or drought sufferers becomes necessary, it might be impossible for us to come here and get a deficiency appropriation later.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. There is nothing to prevent Congress in the next session passing a bill for $2,000,000,000 more, if it desired. We can always repeal an act of Congress.

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask the chairman of the subcommittee, in case this amendment is adopted, can a deficiency appropriation for the Works Progress Administration be passed in this or the next session of Congress?

Mr. WOODRUM. I will say that this is not a deficiency appropriation, to begin with. This is an original legislative enactment. It comes from the Committee on Appropriations, but this committee amendment is a declaration by the Congress that it expects the Administration to spread this fund out and use it during the year and not spend it all in the first 6 months. There is nothing to prevent Congress at any time from undoing tomorrow what it has done today, if it wishes to do so.

Mr. SCOTT. But in order to appropriate further money for the W. P. A. it would be necessary first to repeal this section, would it not?

Mr. WOODRUM. It would be necessary to do what it is doing now; just come in and pass a bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Just pass a bill for an appropriation, without paying any attention to the amendment that is now offered?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. This is merely a declaration of policy, and that is the only reason for it being put into this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. The reason for it, as far as I am concerned, and I offered it, is that the fund of $1,500,000,000, or whatever is appropriated by the Congress now is to do what Mr. Hopkins and the President said it would do—furnish relief for the fiscal year 1938.

Mr. SCOTT. It would cause the Works Progress Administration to go on a budget of monthly expenditures and not spend more than one-twelfth of this sum each month?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; it does not do that. It would cause it to go on a yearly budget.

Mr. SCOTT. But in order to carry it to the end of the fiscal year they would have to divide it into 12 parts. If this is not true, why was the amendment put in here?

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this committee amendment will make it impossible for the W. P. A. to even approach their problem. If an emergency occurs, they can do nothing whatever to help. It is my intention to ask for a separate vote on this amendment, and I hope the House will vote it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU to the committee amendment: Page 3, line 21, strike out of the committee amendment the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "first seven"; page 3, line 22, strike out the words "during such fiscal year" and insert in lieu thereof the word "period"; page 2, line 24, strike out the words "fiscal year" and insert the word "period."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this amendment carries out the philosophy of the Committee on Appropriations about spreading this money over, but, instead of requiring that it be spread over 12 months during the next fiscal year, it requires that this amount of money be spent over a period of 7 months; in other words, until February 1, 1938, so that $1,500,000,000 will be available in the event it is needed to take care of human suffering during the time that Congress will not be in session. So that beginning July 1, 1937, this money will be spread over a 7-month period, and the administration will not be permitted to spend it earlier than in 7 months, but in the event conditions become such or remain such that it is advisable to spend that money in 7 months instead of 12 months, the opportunity will be there, and the administration will have money with which to relieve human suffering.

Then when Congress comes back here next year, as many of you were told when you talked about this appropriation—you were told the Congress could appropriate this money next year when it comes back; so if there is need for additional money when Congress does come back here next January we will have practically a full month in which to appropriate an additional amount of money to carry over the administration of relief if it needs it for the 5-month period, but it will give the administration a chance to relieve human suffering properly during the 7-month period.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Would not the effect of the gentleman's amendment be to require the expenditure of all the money in the 7-month period?

Mr. BOILEAU. It does not require the expenditure of all the money within 7 months. Certainly there is nothing in the law that requires that departments or agencies of the Government spend all the money we give them. It does say that the funds allocated hereunder shall be so apportioned and distributed over the first 7 months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and shall be so administered as to constitute the total amount that will be furnished during such period through such agency for relief purposes. I assume that a large part of this money would be spent, but certainly unless you were to take the position that the department would be required to spend every cent that is appropriated, I submit, that they would not be obliged to spend it all.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Even if they did spend $1,500,000,000 in the first 7 months for the relief of human suffering, that would not be one cent too much.

Mr. BOILEAU. That would be on the basis of something like $2,500,000,000 for the period of the year; but bear in mind that they are not obliged and required to spend the money because it is appropriated. I do not think that the language is such as to require them to spend it. It just means that they will be able to spend it provided the emergency is there and provided there is need for spending the money. I do not think anybody would want to hold them to the point where they could not spend enough money to relieve human suffering if it were necessary to spend more money.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; briefly.

Mr. MAY. Suppose they did spend it all in the first 7 months; what would they do the other 5 months?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am assuming that your present administration will not waste one cent that is not required. I am submitting that they will not spend one dime more than is necessary for the relief of human suffering. If you have not enough confidence in your own administration, you Democrats, some of us on this side of the aisle do have confidence in the administration, and we are willing to lead the way. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. MAVERICK. I shall object to that request.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request, and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to state that there is an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to the committee amendment.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 46, noes 178.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Page 3, line 24, after the word "purposes", strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That in the event of any drought, flood, or other disaster occurring that such sums necessary to meet such emergency may be allocated and obligated and shall not be subject to the provisions of this paragraph."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is very, very simple, and it seems to me that it is a necessary amendment. Under the pending committee amendment, the $1,500,000,000 will have to be apportioned throughout the 12 months of the next fiscal year. Suppose some section of the country should be visited with a drought; suppose some section of the country should be visited with another flood; suppose some great catastrophe occurs in some section of the country which requires that that particular section of the country receive immediate and extra aid, and thousands of persons to be immediately put to work.

Thousands of persons are immediately put to work because of the intense suffering superimposed upon their present unemployment. This amendment will permit the authority to exist for the Work Progress Administrator or the President to allocate, in addition to the monthly allocation, five, ten, fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five million dollars necessary to meet the act of God which unfortunately might, during the next fiscal year, visit a particular section of our country.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentlemtn yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Will that be in addition to the appropriation of $1,500,000,000?

Mr. McCORMACK. No. It is within the $1,500,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The President can do everything that the gentleman has suggested by his amendment, in my opinion, without the language of his amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not so far as I understand it as the Works Progress Administration is concerned. If what my friend says is correct, I am glad, because failure to make such an allocation would result in great harm.

Mr. TABER. Yes; he can.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this is not an amendment hostile to the committee amendment. It is a perfecting amendment, and no matter how Members may feel toward the $1,500,000,000 or the $1,000,000,000—and I favor the $1,500,000,000 appropriation—it seems to me if we pass this bill in any form, this amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Many of us were unable to hear the amendment. Would the gentleman object to having it read again?

Mr. McCORMACK. No. That is a very good idea. The amendment, not being in any way hostile to the committee amendment, is one which might come in handy during the next fiscal year if a disaster visits any section of the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the McCormack amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the McCormack amendment.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the language of the committee amendment, which, in effect, says that this money has to be spent on a basis of 12 months. It seems to me, if we are going to appropriate money for the W. P. A. to be spent at the discretion of the President, that we should trust his discretion. We ought not to put unnecessary restrictions in the bill; and the reason is not only because of the contingencies mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts but on account of the fact there might be, wholly aside from some "disaster" or "act of God", an unexpected increase in unemployment.

CONGRESS SHOULD NOT HAMSTRING THE PRESIDENT AND ADMINISTRATION OF W. P. A.

If we are Democrats; and if we trust to the President of the United States, we ought to go ahead and strike out the committee amendment. We should not hamstring the administration of the W. P. A. and of the Executive.

We ought to at least adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts so that the President will have the right to use the proper amount of money in case of unusual circumstances and grave situations. The use of the words "disaster, flood, and drought" are not sufficient, because there might be an industrial break-down or other situation that might make it necessary to increase the W. P. A. We have appropriated $1,500,000,000. Now, let us trust the President.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SCOTT. In the gentleman's opinion this is more than a declaration of policy. It is a distinct limitation on the Works Progress Administration?

Mr. MAVERICK. In my opinion, it would probably be considered mandatory on the 12 months' basis.

Mr. SCOTT. And so much spent each month.

Mr. MAVERICK. Probably so; in any event, it is a hampering restriction. I think that if we are going to appropriate $1,500,000,000 to the W. P. A. without details as in other bills, we must depend on their spending it wisely. We have to trust the President and the W. P. A. in that regard.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Not only that, but we did not annex such a clause to any other appropriation, and we are taking it out of the hides of those who need it the most.

Mr. MAVERICK. This kind of qualification is not being put on any other kind of appropriation bill, so far as I know. This is the first time it has ever been done.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman's contention is quite right. It is a limitation, and may be so accepted by the administration if left in the bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. That was the purpose of offering the amendment by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and making it a part of the bill, and the committee amendment was adopted by a majority of only one or two votes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, this is a limitation, and the committee amendment should be defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be no misunderstanding about the effect of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The effect of the amendment which the gentleman has offered, though it may not be the effect which he intended it to have, would be to absolutely destroy the committee amendment. The President, under this bill as it stands with the committee amendment, has absolute authority to allocate any amount of this money for any purpose for which he may wish to allocate it at any time he wants to use it. If there should be a national disaster tomorrow or the day after the bill is signed, and the President wants to use a billion dollars, he may use that amount. If we adopt this amendment, in which it is stated he can use those funds but without allocation, and not subject to this paragraph, then we take down the limitation, and it has the effect of making an additional authorization which absolutely nullifies the effect of the committee amendment.

We have passed several times on the question of how much this committee wishes to recommend for the fiscal year 1938 for relief. This is a protective amendment. It protects the Congress and protects the President in the allocation of these funds and indicates that the Congress wishes this money spread over the fiscal year 1938 under such circumstances and in such amounts as the President in his discretion may wish.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment to the committee amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. McCORMACK)—ayes 65, noes 164.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. May we have the committee amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment which appears at the bottom of page 3.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. SCOTT)—ayes 189, noes 51.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRADLEY. If this amendment is adopted, does it not have the effect——

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not stating a parliamentary inquiry.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WOODRUM and Mr. CONNERY.

The Committee again divided; and there were—ayes 174, noes 48.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two amendments which I propose to offer on Monday to the resolution (H. J. Res. 361), and to include therein also a letter received today from the American Federation of Labor citing the number of skilled laborers who are unemployed throughout the country. This is a short table.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the Democratic Party wants to continue to fill up the RECORD, let it go in. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6551) to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to a conference.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the important matter in this conference is the question of the continuation of the C. C. C. camps. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts should give the House to understand that he will bring this matter back to the House on the question of any permanent extension of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. CONNERY. I think the gentleman from New York knows perfectly well that the conference committee on the part of the House will go into the conference and fight for everything the House has passed and not do anything without the House having an opportunity to pass on its action.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman's statement means, then, that the conference committee will not agree to a permanent extension without coming back and being instructed by the House?

Mr. CONNERY. I may say that we will not agree to anything upon which the House has passed by a vote until we ask for a further vote in the House.

Mr. SNELL. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. CONNERY, Mrs. NORTON, Mr. RAMSPECK, Mr. WELCH, and Mr. HARTLEY.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, over 20 years ago a bright little boy with a very kind disposition was romping around the fifth floor of the House Office Building. He was very active, rather shy, but extremely polite. Of course, I never dreamed then, when I was working as a secretary to a Representative in Congress, that some day that lad would become a world-wide hero by being the first man to fly an airplane across the Atlantic Ocean. Strange things happen in this world and it is now recorded in history that that very boy, Charles A. Lindbergh, accomplished what was considered by all at that time the impossible, for within 34 hours, to be exact, 33 hours and 30 minutes, he landed his single-motored monoplane, which he had christened the Spirit of St. Louis, on Le Bourget Field, in the suburbs of Paris, France. That was 10 years ago today.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was the son of a Representative in Congress who served with distinction in this body for 10 years. In thought he was in advance of his time. If you will go back now and read his utterances as well as his writings, you will agree with this statement. Whenever one advanced some idea to help the masses of the people at the expense of those who have accumulated vast health he was classed as a radical. In the day of Lindbergh senior the use of the word "Communist" was not in vogue, but if it had been, he would have been called a Communist, but not so now. Congressman Lindbergh favored back in his day a more equitable distribution of the profits of industry among those who by the sweat of their brow were responsible for those profits. I say he was ahead of his time, because until the appearance of Franklin D. Roosevelt in the White House, no man espoused that idea with any success. The father of Colonel Lindbergh, like the son, was of a retiring disposition. He did not seek self-aggrandizement. Look at his biography in the Congressional Directory. Unlike most of us he did not record a history of his private and public life, but was satisfied with the simple notation following his congressional district, Charles A. Lindbergh. Is it any wonder that his famous son has done everything within his power to evade throngs and publicity? Today we find him in exile in a foreign country, hiding out, so to speak, in order that he and his wife and child might have some peace from enthusiastic admirers, and likewise trying to forget a tragedy the frightfulness of which will be in their minds to the date of their departure to the Great Beyond.

Colonel Lindbergh, an obscure air-mail pilot, known to few people outside of a small circle in St. Louis and Chicago, between which cities he was carrying the mail, conceived the idea himself of flying across the Atlantic. He saved his money, sleeping in a shack, and day after day was satisfied with a dinner consisting of two pieces of bread and a hot dog. He piled up his dollars until he had over $2,000, and then he made known his desire to a few prominent St. Louisans. When he told them his savings would go into the fund necessary to finance the trip they became interested and preparations were on. The beginning of the end was May 20, 1927, at 7:52 eastern standard time, when he took off for France. The climax was his landing at his point of destination the next day, 33½ hours having elapsed. I venture the assertion that since that time his name has appeared in print as many times as any individual who ever lived.

Few paid any attention to the youth until he was actually over the ocean winging his way across, but millions all over the world were awaiting the news of his arrival, and when it did come there was rejoicing not only in the United States but throughout the civilized world.

But the best part was yet to come. He kept his head and never to this day has any act of his ever indicated but that he would have been just as happy if left to himself. He set an example to the youth of the world that fully justifies the many times repeated statement he is the ideal American youth.

At the time of his successful flight Congress was not in session. Prominent men in public life expressed their views on his achievement. Dozens of Members of Congress said he was entitled to and they would see that he received the Congressional Medal of Honor. When Congress met in December they seemed to have forgotten the flight of the "Lone Eagle" across the Atlantic, but I did not. On the opening day of Congress I introduced a bill authorizing the President to present to him the Congressional Medal of Honor. He was a resident of my city. I secured an early report from the Committee on Military Affairs. Shortly thereafter he visited Washington and he was invited by the then Speaker, Mr. Longworth, to visit the House of Representatives. On his arrival the House recessed while the Speaker introduced him to the Members, many of whom had served with his father, and others who then recalled the boy who played at times in the corridor of the House Office Building. During the recess I conferred with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], then chairman of the Rules Committee, who canvassed his committee and reported to the Speaker. The Members desired the bill I had introduced called up immediately. The Speaker recognized Mr. SNELL, who in a sentence said the House was ready to confer the highest honor it could bestow on Colonel Lindbergh. The bill passed, promptly was agreed to by the Senate, signed by the President, and I had the honor of being present when President Coolidge carried out the mandate of the Congress and presented him with the medal. He was the least concerned of those present. I do not mean to say he was not appreciative, but he had a way of concealing it.

I am not going to speak of his contributions to aviation since that date nor the many good examples he has set for the youths of this country to follow. Space would not permit. It is my intention to refer to one unpublished incident that I think will be of interest. In my congressional district a lady had a small photograph gallery. She knew most of the boys who flew the mails and had taken their pictures. She had invited some of them to her home for dinner, and on one occasion "Lindy" was present. He was known to his associates as "Slim." On this occasion she told me Colonel Lindbergh had hardly spoken a word all evening.

Shortly thereafter he returned in his National Guard uniform. He wanted his picture taken. He finally selected one of the proofs, and when the pictures were turned over to him he remarked:

> Some day that picture is liable to be of value. You had better save the plate.

At the moment she paid no attention to his remark, but later she wondered why this modest young man should have said that to her. Finally, she decided to have it copyrighted, and she did. When Colonel Lindbergh made his successful flight naturally pictures of him would bring any price. Just as fast as she could print them she sold them to a department store for resale. A few days after the flight there came to her notice a postal card with this picture reproduced, but the copyright insignia cut off. She called on me one afternoon at my office and complained bitterly, because it was a responsible printing house that had used the picture. She said she wanted to employ me as her lawyer, but I told her she needed no lawyer. I gave her a copy of the law, underscored that part that would have enabled her to send those responsible to the penitentiary if she so desired, and told her to act as her own lawyer. I advised her to call on the president of the firm and place a claim for damages with him, at the same time to let him read the law. She told the amount she felt she was entitled to, but I advised her to ask for a much larger sum, telling her she could always compromise if necessary. Two days after she returned. She followed my advice and had a check for the greater part of $5,000 that I insisted she should ask for. She wanted to pay me, but when I said "no", she gave me one of the pictures, which I have to this day.

Colonel Lindbergh turned over to the Missouri Historical Society the trophies he received from the four corners of the globe. They are housed in the Jefferson Memorial Building in Forest Park, in St. Louis, on exhibition free to the public. His plane he presented to the Smithsonian Institution and is seen by thousands every day as they enter the old National Museum.

While millions throughout the world recalled and celebrated his flight of 10 years ago, we read the following dispatch, by David P. Sentner, in the Washington Times:

> SEVEN OAKS, KENT, ENGLAND, May 20.—For a little family in a secluded, rose-covered cottage today was—well, just Thursday.
>
> For others, celebrating in New York and Paris and throughout a world which remembers the feat, it was the tenth anniversary of the trans-Atlantic flight of Charles A. Lindbergh.
>
> But Colonel Lindbergh, Mrs. Anne Lindbergh, and their son Jon gave not the slightest heed to the day.
>
> In bright sunshine Colonel Lindbergh romped on the lawn with Jon.
> Then, without any guests to mark the day, the family lunched informally. They planned their usual automobile drive about the lanes of the county this evening.
>
> He declined to talk by radio to a gathering of old friends and backers at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York, and declined also to participate in festivities at Le Bourget Field, his Paris landing place.
> The Lindberghs, since they came to England in the winter of 1935, have been living an almost monastic life. They seldom go to London, although it is only half an hour off by train.

Colonel Lindbergh became famous overnight, but we all know the price he had to pay. Some day soon we hope he will return to his native land.

NATIONAL PRESS CLUB CRUISE

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute for the purpose of making an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina.

There was no objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have the very happy privilege of announcing on behalf of the members of the National Press Club that an invitation is extended to every Member of Congress to participate tomorrow in the expedition to Quantico by boat. The boat leaves the Seventh Street wharves at 1 o'clock. Among other things, the congressional baseball club will, of course, challenge the press boys in their annual ball game at Quantico. I may say, incidentally, that, together with the rest of our team, I shall naturally expect the full support, expressed with a great deal of effort and enthusiasm, of every Member of Congress to cheer us on tomorrow. I anticipate, Mr. Speaker, a most pleasant trip, and I am sure the members of the press gallery will greatly appreciate your attendance. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman include in his request that all gentlemen who spoke today may have the right to revise and extend their own remarks?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the Members who spoke today would have that right without any further request.

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Roosevelt first took office we had one relief problem. That was the unemployment relief problem. Now we have four relief problems confronting this Congress and this country.

They are:

First. The problem of relief for the unemployed and the needy.

Second. The problem of relief for the taxpayers.

Third. The problem of relief for the Government's credit.

Fourth. The problem of relief from a growing army of the New Deal "faithful" on the Federal pay rolls.

A very great number of these "faithful" on the Federal pay rolls are simply on high-salaried, luxurious relief.

In the midst of the multifarious agencies and activities now dispensing relief there has been established by Mr. Roosevelt a relief agency which is the most expensive, the most uneconomical, the least efficient of any of the various forms of relief—and the one agency most difficult for Congress to reduce. This is the President's rapidly expanding bureaucratic agency for luxury relief for the "faithful."

It constitutes a most vital part of the spoils system so effectively injected into our governmental set-up under the exigencies of the emergency by Postmaster General Jim Farley, National Democratic Committee chairman.

Since Mr. Roosevelt's advent a new army of New Deal civil employees on the Federal pay rolls has been created, numbering 265,713 persons.

The number of civil Federal employees on the pay rolls as of February 28, 1933, according to the records of the United States Civil Service Commission, was 563,480. The total of civil Federal employees as of March 31, 1937, according to the same authority, was 829,193.

It is fortunate for the country that Mr. Roosevelt did not promise in his first campaign to cut the Government expenses by 50 percent instead of the 25 percent he did promise, because, working in the reverse as have this and so many other of his promises, in such case it is hard to tell how big this army of the "faithful" on the Federal pay rolls would have been by now.

Mr. Speaker, the general impression is being created throughout the country by the President that herculean efforts are being made by him and his New Deal advisers to achieve economies, to avoid an increase in taxes, to balance the Budget, and to get back on a normal permanent basis as rapidly as possible, if only he can get Congress to go along with him.

At the same time, while this Congress is struggling valiantly, if blindly, to achieve some relief for the taxpayers and for the Federal credit without impairing necessary relief for the worthy needy, Mr. Roosevelt is trying to freeze into permanency this other superexpensive, uneconomical New Deal luxury relief for the New Deal "faithful"—and all the departments and agencies making up this luxury relief class are helping him to do so.

We have heard much about the savings that were going to be made by the President's economy program concerning the executive departments. We have been hearing this same story at different times for a long period of time. The Washington Herald yesterday morning stated that Acting Budget Director Bell disclosed the day before that the maximum reduction in Government spending resulting from Mr. Roosevelt's April request to departmental heads to curtail unnecessary expenditures would, if carried out, be about $295,000,000. This, as we all realize, is merely a drop in the bucket so far as actual economy is concerned.

If Mr. Bell is correct in his estimate, and I assume he is, and if savings in the amount he suggests can be brought about through a Presidential request, why is it, if the President is really interested in bringing about economy, that he has not long ago submitted such a request to the executive departments? If those departments have been unnecessarily spending three hundred millions a year, why has not Mr. Roosevelt registered his disapproval of it long ago? There has never been in the history of this country, during any previous administration, a period when economy in government was as vitally necessary to the perpetuity of this constitutional democracy and the welfare of our people as it has been throughout the 4 years of the administration of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Genuine economy can be accomplished only through the elimination of unnecessary expenditures. In all our history there has been no such exhibition of waste and extravagance as has been indulged in during the past 4 years.

Economies in the executive departments will be of little relief to the taxpayers of this country unless one of two methods are resorted to. Either there must be a radical reduction in the number of the "faithful" on the pay roll or salaries must be radically reduced. In view of the rapidly increasing cost of living, brought about in large part by the policies of Mr. Roosevelt, the latter would seem to be most inadvisable.

Congress has been struggling, and is now struggling, in a blind effort to achieve some economies despite the fact that President Roosevelt has steadfastly refused to institute any survey which would give the Congress accurate figures on relief expenditures, the number on the relief rolls, the number receiving relief who are not entitled to it—and there are many—the number not receiving relief who are entitled to it, and more important, the probable extent and duration of relief necessities in the future.

There has been a general impression created by Mr. Roosevelt's statements, together with propaganda that has gone forth, that he is having to urge Congress—almost having to compel Congress—to try to achieve economies. Every Member of this House knows, and most of the country knows, that Congress is more eager than the President to achieve real economies, if real economies can be made without visiting suffering and hardship and starvation upon the unfortunate of our citizens who are really entitled to relief.

What happens, Mr. Speaker, when Congress tries to achieve economy? The President asks for one billion five hundred million for relief. This is by no means the whole of governmental expenditures for relief. The moment the Congress moves to pare down appropriations it is met by the protests made to the Appropriations Committees by the departments that their particular appropriations cannot be reduced. Despite this fact these appropriating committees and the House and Senate have reduced the appropriations below the amounts asked for by the President through the Bureau of the Budget in every appropriation bill sent to the President during this session of the Congress.

The greatest governmental machine in the history of this country was set up by Mr. Roosevelt under the promise that it was a purely emergency set-up and would be dispensed with as rapidly as possible. Now the President is seeking to make permanent this vast and expensive bureaucracy and to fasten upon the backs of the taxpayers this staggering added load of unnecessary governmental costs. The N. R. A., for instance, was wiped out by the Supreme Court of the United States on May 27, 1935, which is within a few days of being 2 years ago. I am informed that the last employees of the N. R. A. went off the pay rolls just a few weeks ago.

How many of the former employees of this agency are still living in Washington drawing governmental salaries because of the political necessity of keeping the "faithful" forever on the pay roll? The answer is very illuminating.

The N. R. A. was abolished by the Supreme Court on May 27, 1935. At that time the number of Federal civil employees was 659,086. Shortly after the N. R. A. was abolished, the A. A. A. was also abolished as unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. These two agencies had thousands and thousands of employees who should have been rapidly separated from the pay rolls. But what happened? Six months later, on November 30, 1935, we find that the total number of civil Federal employees on the rolls was 794,467. The number had not decreased, but had increased by 135,381. From November 30, 1935, to March 31, 1937, we find that the number of employees again had increased by 34,726, to make a total as of that date of 829,193. The total number of Federal civil employees from May 27, 1935, when the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. were abolished, to the present time, has increased by 170,107. That is how Mr. Roosevelt and his boondogglers have by their herculean efforts achieved "economies" in administration while Congress has been vainly struggling to get real relief for the taxpayers, for the Federal credit, and for the unemployed.

Is there any Member of this Congress who does not well know that the governmental bureaus and departments have always resisted by every means any attempts by the Congress to reduce or abolish them? Is there any Member of this Congress who does not well know that every attempt is being made by all emergency organizations now to resist any reductions or eliminations of their personnel or their expenditures?

Mr. Roosevelt made a great gesture toward economy by vetoing a $5,000,000 appropriation to the New York World's Fair suggesting the amount was too large. It may be that as a result of his action a million, or possibly $2,000,000, may be taken off in the next bill that will be presented. One cannot fail to notice, however, that this saving, whatever it may prove to be, is one in which a reduction of the number of the "faithful" on the pay roll is not involved.

Mr. Speaker, the question of relief, economy, and the balancing of the Budget constitute a problem so utterly grave and vital to the welfare of this Nation and its people that it transcends any partisan dispute or controversy, and the time has come when we must approach the solution of this problem in the attitude of citizens and lawmakers who are determined to save their country from ruin without allowing any thought of partisan advantage or political increment to hamper and to befog our efforts. We are face to face with the grave necessity of meeting this problem on that broad and nonpartisan basis if this country is to be saved.

It is my sincere and deep conviction that the only possible way we can achieve the economies necessary to enable us to even begin an attempt to balance the Budget is by turning relief over to the administration of the States and the local communities, and disbanding this gigantic bureaucracy which has been built up under the guise of "emergency."

A provision that the States provide a proportion of the relief funds will operate, as we well know, to safeguard the taxpayers of the country against unnecessary expenditures for relief or for employment of those whose only recommendation for the job in hand is their ability to deliver the "political goods."

If then the President would consent to permit Congress to have the information, which could easily be procured for it, as to the probable extent and duration of necessary relief for the next 2 or 3 years, this Congress could make some intelligent attempt to balance the Budget, to avoid an increase in taxes, to begin eventually a decrease in taxes, and to get this Nation back onto something like a sound basis. Until that is done, we will continue to drift as we have been drifting, toward national disaster. And this catastrophe cannot be avoided unless there has first been a separation from the pay rolls of a very large proportion of the 265,713 emergency employees who were placed upon the pay rolls by this administration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 24, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Holy and blessed Spirit of God, whose indwelling brings the gift of joy into our lives: Fill us all with the gladness of God that, rejoicing in His works, we may find pleasure in His ways. Remove from our burdened memories the weight of past years, and set us free both from the glamour of complacency and the fretfulness of remorse.

Increase our faith, mellow our judgment, deepen our devotion to God, our country, and our fellow man, and, as our lives enforce what is uttered by our lips, may each one of us reveal the truth that happiness outside of holiness is vanity and to sanctify one's heart is to give it peace. We ask it through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR TRAMMELL, OF FLORIDA

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an address memorializing the life and services of the late Senator Park Trammell, of Florida, delivered by the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] before a joint session of the Florida Legislature on the occasion of memorial services for the late United States Senators, Park Trammell and Duncan U. Fletcher, on May 18, 1937, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Although Park Trammell was born in Macon County, Ala., on April 9, 1876, the son of John W. and Ida Park Trammell, we have always considered him a native of Florida, as his father and mother moved to Polk County when young Park was just an infant.

His early boyhood days were spent on a farm near Lakeland in Polk County and, while still a boy, he worked on an orange grove and on the farm, and to earn a little extra money chopped wood, packed oranges, and did any other odd jobs that he might find. His early school advantages were only such as were afforded by the short-term schools of the pioneer days in south Florida, but even in spite of the various odd jobs he undertook in an effort to make his own expenses, he always found time to keep up with his studies. All through his life Park Trammell never considered himself too good to do any kind of work, no matter how difficult.

At the early age of 16 he left Lakeland and took a position in a general store in Tampa. Along about this time the great freeze of the late nineties devastated his father's grove and garden properties so Park voluntarily shouldered a share of the financial responsibilities of the family.

By careful budgeting he was able to take out of his small earnings enough each month to apply on the family expenses and still set something aside to help pay his way through law school. He studied first at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, and was graduated from Cumberland University in Lebanon, Tenn., in 1899, being admitted to the Florida bar in the same year.

On returning to Lakeland to open his law office his savings were exhausted and his office was necessarily a humble one. It is said that with his own hands he fashioned his first office table out of ordinary pine planks that he found somewhere in the neighborhood. That table, along with 2 or 3 cheap chairs, and possibly 15 or 20 law books, constituted the furnishings of his first office.

We can well imagine how difficult it was to get a foothold under such circumstances in those trying days when there was very little law practice in Lakeland, so, in order to pay expenses while getting a start, he worked at night keeping books and also traveled as a salesman a part of each week in order to meet his expenses.

Shortly after opening his law office in Lakeland his father passed away, and thereupon, assisted by a younger brother, he assumed the care of four younger sisters, and it is to his everlasting credit that he did even more than a devoted brother would be expected to do under such circumstances, and it was largely due to his efforts that these fine girls grew to splendid womanhood, commanding the respect and admiration of all who know them.

As we look back tonight we can well imagine the dark days he had encountered in the late nineties, but, nothwithstanding these unusual difficulties he was compelled to face, he demonstrated that he was possessed of excellent ability and determination. So it was that the people of Lakeland and surrounding communities commended him highly for the sacrifice and devotion to duty that he maintained in behalf of his younger brothers and sisters. I imagine it must have been apparent, even then, that this young man, with all of his burdens, was full of energy, ambition, and determination and that there stretched before him a promising future. We find that gradually, year by year, step by step, he went upward toward the top of the ladder of success. The first step in this climb was when he was elected mayor of his home city of Lakeland and served during the years 1899 to 1903.

As proof of the success of his administration as mayor of Lakeland we find that his neighbors in Polk County rewarded him by electing him to the Florida House of Representatives, as the second step in his upward climb, where he served his first session in 1903.

In 1904 another advance was made when he was elected to the Senate of the State of Florida, and although one of the youngest members of that esteemed body he reached the fourth rung of his ladder when he was honored by being chosen its president in 1905. It has been said many times by friends who knew him and those who served with him that when Park Trammell turned over the gavel of his office to his successor he had been absolutely impartial in all of his rulings while he presided as president of that august body.

That feeling must have been evident, because a little later, in 1908, Park Trammell stepped up to the fifth rung of his ladder of fame and success upon being elected to the high office of attorney general of the State of Florida.

His 4-year term of service as attorney general of Florida was sufficient to show the people that in him was a dependable public servant worthy of their trust, and though still handicapped by financial obligations he reached the sixth rung on his ladder upon being elected Governor, the highest office in the gift of the people of Florida.

When I think of those momentous days here in Tallahassee when Park Trammell was Governor of our State, I recall most pleasantly that most estimable lady who honored and graced the executive mansion with him. I believe that no true account of his career would be complete without reference to one of the most respected and beloved helpmates that any man in public life ever had. I speak now with pride of Mrs. Park Trammell, the former Viriginia Darby, of Lakeland, whom he married while a struggling lawyer on November 21, 1900. She became his companion and helpmate in his early boyhood, and at every turn of the road, and in his climb up every rung of the ladder of fame, which I have referred to, Virginia Darby Trammell was there by his side, always ready, able, and willing to encourage and advise in a manner which never failed. She was his blessing, and from my association with him for 8 years I know that he looked upon her almost with reverence, and he never failed with her at his side. Mrs. Trammell died on March 14, 1922, and it so happened that I was delegated, along with five other friends of the family, to perform the sad rite of bearing her to her last resting place. She should, in my opinion (which I know is shared by thousands of others) take her place among Florida's most beloved women as one of whom we shall always be proud. So it is that I now wish to place this little bouquet on memory's pathway.

I never had the pleasure of knowing the present Mrs. Park Trammell, who so faithfully administered to him when the evening sunset cast its last shadows across his pathway.

When we think of Park Trammell's early life in the little log house there in Polk County, his few advantages, and faced with the necessity of working his own destiny and fighting his own battles; when we recall the unusual obligations he willingly assumed while still a young man, and the extraordinary difficulties he had to encounter, it is but fitting that this legislature designate this hour to his memory and that of his most beloved colleague, Duncan U. Fletcher, who rose to such heights as a leader and statesman that our whole Nation claimed him as their own. Step by step—mayor of Lakeland, state representative of Polk County, state senator, president of the senate, attorney general, and Governor of Florida. Park Trammell did not stop climbing even when he reached the United States Senate in 1916, which marked the seventh step up the ladder of service for his State.

I think you will agree with me that only a man with courage, determination, and honesty, coupled with the conscientious desire to do his duty, along with a sincere devotion to the public interest, could have progressed so methodically and securely. He kept faith with himself, his friends and family, and with the people of Florida and America. Park Trammell died a poor man because of his willing sacrifice for others in their hour of need.

Those were momentous days that faced our Nation back in 1917, when on March 4 Park Trammell took the oath of office as United States Senator. Half the world was at war—desperate and troublesome years followed—years in which the pendulum of prosperity of this country swung upward and then sharply down through the late depression. It was his privilege to be a member of some of the most powerful committees of the United States Senate, among them being the Naval Affairs Committee, of which he became chairman, and later was ranking Democrat on five other major committees.

It is possible to touch but a very few of the highlights of his career in Washington, but I think all who knew him best realize that he had the welfare of this State always uppermost in his heart and mind. We all know of the hopelessness that confronted many families when nearly 100 banks in south Florida failed following the advent of the Mediterranean fruitfly and the eradication campaign which followed. All of which caused the depression to strike even with more severity upon the people of Florida. Realizing the situation, Park Trammell was able to persuade the Federal Government and the Congress to approve a law which would allow many thousands of home owners to borrow amounts sufficient to save their homes and groves and farms from forced sale under the auctioneer's hammer during that terrible 3-year period following 1929.

It was largely through his efforts, with the ever-constant cooperation of Senator Fletcher, that a measure was passed to try to alleviate the suffering from the campaign to eradicate the fruitfly. This same bill passed the Senate three times, but, unfortunately, opposition lines were so strongly drawn in the House of Representatives that it never received the approval of that body.

It is recognized in Washington that Park Trammell fostered and fathered the legislation, back in 1922, making it possible for the Government to make loans at extremely low interest to home owners to pay off mortgages and other incumbrances, out of which has eventually grown the present-day Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Further than that, he joined with Senator Fletcher many times in working out legislation which created one of the most successful of all the present-day agencies—the Federal Housing Administration, which, though it lends no Government money, has, through an amicable arrangement with private lending institutions, made it possible for hundreds of thousands of responsible home owners to borrow money to repair their homes or borrow money to build new ones.

There are many who feel that his likeness should be indelibly engraved upon a million humble homes in our country.

Whenever legislation was introduced which would bring even the minutest benefit to Florida, you would always find Park Trammell there working in its behalf. Through his many long years of service in the Senate his record shows that legislation providing for improvement of rivers and harbors, highways, hospitals, schools, national parks, naval air stations, and legislation designed to make easier the road along which veterans of the World War must travel, always had his vigorous and earnest support.

His activity in behalf of schools and general relief, bank-deposit guaranties created by the setting up of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which were of inestimable benefit to all, is written forever on the pages of history.

To me, Park Trammell lived a life of courage, patriotism, and particularly a life of service, and his name has been assigned and dedicated to an honored place in the hearts of all true Floridians.

He left as our heritage a fine record of service, and in passing to his reward and the peaceful fortitude which characterized his last hours, we are reminded of that most fitting and beautiful verse written by William Cullen Bryant in his Thanatopsis:

"So live, that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan, which moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave,
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Joint resolution relating to memorializing the Congress of the United States to investigate the Federal farm credit agencies in the seventh Federal land-bank district and their activities and policies concerning loans

Whereas in enacting the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 the Congress of the United States provided the Farm Credit Administration with sufficient power and funds to act as a liberal institution where distressed farmers could readily obtain farm production and cooperative organization loans or refinance farm mortgages; and

Whereas the policy of the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul in particular in rejecting applications for farm loans and extensions and refinancing of farm mortgages has of late been such as to defeat the letter and spirit of said act; and

Whereas examples of the application of that policy toward persons applying for benefits under the act include appraising farm lands for loan purposes far below their actual market value, refusing loans on the basis of such appraisals, permitting loans inadequate to cover the honest debts of the applicant, notwithstanding the appraised value of the farm land offered as security would warrant a larger loan, denying eligible applicants extension or refinancing; and

Whereas in the guise of a governmental agency, ostensibly investigating applications for loans in the benign endeavor to furnish financial succor to the deserving farmer; the Federal land bank has disregarded the intent of Congress as expressed in the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 and has become merely a pretense of such agency, making investigations of applications only for effect and with little intention of giving applicants for benefits under the act more consideration in obtaining loans or refinancing or extending mortgages than would be accorded them at a private banking corporation; and

Whereas it is apparent that these farm credit agencies expend an unproportionately large amount for so-called educational purposes, and are advocating and formulating policies in direct opposition to the intent and purpose of Congress, particularly with regard to farm mortgage loans and loans to cooperative organizations; and

Whereas in the case of loans to cooperatives their policies tend to retard and nullify efforts to federate and unite cooperative marketing organizations; and

Whereas the farm-mortgage foreclosure situation and the ownership of farms by the Federal land banks in the seventh Federal Reserve district particularly present a problem of such serious proportion as to merit the specific attention of Congress: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to investigate the activities, policies, and financial condition of the Federal Farm Credit Administration agencies in the seventh Federal land-bank district and more specifically the activities and policies of the Federal land bank and the Bank for Cooperatives of St. Paul, as well as the activities and policies of the regional offices of the Resettlement and Rehabilitation Administration in this district; and

Resolved further, That duly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof; and

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Legislatures of North Dakota, Minnesota, and Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolution protesting the use of Government hopper dredges for the maintenance of the Cuyahoga River at Cleveland, Ohio

Whereas the members of the house understand that authority is being sought or has been granted for the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, to use their hopper dredges during the winter season to dredge the Cuyahoga River at Cleveland, Ohio, dumping this material in the outer harbor, with their intention of redredging it in spring or summer, also with their hopper dredges, and disposing of this material on the regularly established dump grounds; and

Whereas the dredging industry, which employs many men, maintains plants in the various ports of the Great Lakes and the Atlantic coast for the purpose of maintaining the rivers and harbors, and the aforesaid action will result in many men being kept idle, in direct opposition to the theory of American rights to work; and

Whereas the use of Government machinery and men can be justified for the maintenance of rivers and harbors only in the case of emergencies, thus allowing private industry and its workers to safeguard their investments and the workers to maintain their families; and

Whereas the dredging industry employs all union men, and there is harmony in the industry and desire on the part of the employees to work and support their families: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That the house protests the use of Government hopper dredges for the maintenance of the Cuyahoga River at Cleveland, Ohio, except in such cases of emergencies which cannot be handled by the dredging industry; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States and Michigan Members of the House and Senate of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to extend the excise tax on copper

Whereas the Congress of the United States placed in the revenue bill of 1932 an excise tax of 4 cents per pound on foreign-produced copper; and

Whereas this act would have expired in June 1934 if it had not been extended for 1 year by Presidential proclamation; and

Whereas the same tax was included in the revenue bill of 1935, which expires in June 1937; and

Whereas the conditions prompting the enactment of the excise tax on copper in 1932 still exist today and will continue to exist, and the problem cannot be handled under the present policy of reciprocal tariffs; and

Whereas the copper industry is of great importance to the people of the Upper Peninsula, and of the people of the entire State of Michigan, in order to permit mines to maintain wage scales and standards of living necessary for our families; and

Whereas 5 years of operation of the excise tax on copper has proved the benefits of the measure: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Michigan Legislature respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to include an excise tax of 4 cents per pound on foreign-produced copper in the revenue bill now under consideration; and be it further

Resolved, That suitable copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States; to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress; and to the Michigan Members in the Senate and House of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Whereas, before the Hawaiian Islands became a Territory of the United States, a large number of Chinese were imported to work in the sugar industry; and

Whereas, because of their adaptability and industrious nature, the sugar and kindred industries have prospered and expanded to a large degree; and

Whereas these Chinese have proven to be honest and law-abiding citizens and have contributed to the progress of Hawaii and many have since returned to their native land, and being aliens, are not permitted to return to Hawaii after 1 year's absence from this Territory, as provided by the Chinese Exclusion Act of the United States of America; and

Whereas many of them have brought up families with children who are citizens of the United States by virtue of their birth as provided by the Constitution of the United States and the organic act of Hawaii; and

Whereas such children have been educated and are making their homes in the Territory of Hawaii and that they have and are carrying out their full responsibility as citizens and are economically able to care for their parents; and

Whereas, because of the provisions of the exclusion act, these Chinese who are separated from their families and in many instances are never to be seen again by their children and grandchildren; and

Whereas it is desirable that the large number of citizens of Chinese ancestry in Hawaii may have their parents at their firesides and to integrate the most valuable institution, the home; and

Whereas these said Chinese who have done so much for Hawaii and because of advanced years are no longer able to compete with American labor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii of the Nineteenth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America is hereby requested to amend the Chinese Exclusion Act to permit the reentry into the Territory of Chinese who were former residents of the Territory of Hawaii, whether males or females, who have sons and daughters who are citizens of the Territory and of the United States and who are capable of supporting such parents; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the Congress of the United States, the Secretary of Interior, the Secretary of Labor, and the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Whereas an investigation has been made at the instance of the Bureau of Reclamation of the Interior Department regarding the water resources of the island of Molokai and the possibilities of obtaining water for irrigation purposes; and

Whereas a preliminary report has been submitted, and it is practicable and economically desirable to construct an irrigation system for the purpose of collecting water in wet areas on said island of Molokai and transporting same for use in dry areas where there are located lands suitable for farming purposes; and

Whereas there is being conducted on said island of Molokai a Hawaiian homes project established and carried on for the purpose of rehabilitating the Hawaiian race and in particular for the purpose of enabling the Hawaiian race to have farms upon which to engage in agricultural pursuits; and

Whereas the construction of such an irrigation project would make available for use on lands of the Hawaiian homes project irrigation water to be used in raising agricultural products; and

Whereas it is highly desirable from many viewpoints to make the islands of the Hawaiian group self-sustaining in regard to vegetables and other agricultural products consumed by both the civilian and military population of Hawaii; and

Whereas there is available on said island more than anywhere else land that can be used for agricultural purposes if water is made available: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Government of the United States be urgently requested to provide for the construction of an irrigation system on said island of Molokai for the purpose of making available for use on the lands of the Hawaiian Homes Commission forming a part of the Hawaiian homes project and for use on other lands on said island of Molokai available for truck farming, water for irrigation purposes; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas, due to the isolation of Hawaii as the western outpost of our Nation, the necessity for a well-trained and instantly available force of Reserve officers to augment the Regular Army and the National Guard in any emergency is vitally necessary for the defense of Hawaii; and

Whereas there are now about 650 active Army Reserve officers residing in the Territory of Hawaii; and

Whereas the effectiveness of the national defense structure is based upon the Army, the National Guard, and Organized Reserves; and

Whereas the Organized Reserves is held in a high degree of reliance by the Government of the United States; and

Whereas the officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps attain the highest degree of military fitness through individual training, inactive duty training, and partially through active duty; and

Whereas the expense involved in maintaining a Reserve commission actually exceeds the total amount received from the Government in the form of pay and allowances for active duty; and

Whereas each Reserve officer represents a Government investment of more than $1,000, which should be conserved and promoted; and

Whereas a form of inactive-duty pay would provide an incentive for the personnel of the Officers' Reserve Corps to pursue various forms of inactive duty and study to keep at a high standard the esprit, morale, efficiency, and dependability; and

Whereas there is now legislation pending in the Congress of the United States in conformity with the substance of this memorial: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Nineteenth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America is respectfully petitioned and memorialized that immediate action be taken to appropriate such sums as may be necessary to provide a suitable pay based on the rank of each Reserve officer as may be appropriate for the maintenance, efficiency, and training of the Officers' Reserve Corps and to promote enactment into law such proposed legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate of the Congress, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress, the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Joint resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and authorized to issue bonds of the said authority, and to authorize the said legislature to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions and to authorize the said legislature to enact other legislation incidental to or in connection with the aforesaid legislation

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

SECTION 1. The Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and authorized to issue bonds of the said authority, and to authorize the legislature of the Territory to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions, and for the general purposes set forth in the proposed form of the bill hereinafter set out, and, to that end, the Congress is respectfully requested to enact a bill in substantially the following words and figures, to wit:

"A bill to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and to issue bonds of the authority, to authorize said legislature to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Cogress assembled:

"SECTION 1. The Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii may create a public corporate authority to engage in slum clearance or housing undertakings, or both, within such Territory. The legislature of said Territory may provide for the appointment and terms of the members of such authority and for the powers of such authority, except that such authority shall be given no power of taxation. The legislature may authorize the Territory or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof to make loans, donations, and conveyances, and make available their facilities and services to such authority, and to take other action in aid of slum clearance or housing undertakings, and may, without regard to any Federal acts restricting the disposition of public lands of the Territory, authorize the commissioner of public lands, the Hawaiian Homes Commissioners, and any other officers of the Territory having power to manage and dispose of its public lands, to grant, convey, or lease to such authority parts of the public domain, and may provide that any of the public domain or other property acquired by such authority may be mortgaged by it as security for its bonds. The legislature of said Territory may authorize such authority to issue bonds or other obligations of such character and maturity and in such manner as the legislature may provide. Such bonds shall not be a debt of the Territory or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof, shall not constitute public indebtedness within the meaning of section 55 of the act approved April 30, 1900, entitled 'An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii', as amended, and shall not constitute bonds of the Territory of Hawaii within the meaning of the act approved August 3, 1935, entitled 'An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes.' All legislation heretofore enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii dealing with the subject matter of this act and not inconsistent herewith is hereby ratified and confirmed.

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect immediately."

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this joint resolution, upon its approval, be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior, the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, and to both Houses of the Congress of the United States of America.

SEC. 3. This joint resolution shall take effect upon its approval.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to enact legislation to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to provide for the issuance of sewer bonds by the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation of the Territory of Hawaii

Whereas with the rapid growth of the city and county of Honolulu the need of further improvements and extension of the sewer system has become acute; and

Whereas the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii is without authority to authorize the city and county of Honolulu to issue bonds in view of the provisions of section 55 of the Hawaiian Organic Act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii (the House of Representatives of said Territory concurring)—

1. That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, respectfully requested to authorize the issuance of sewer bonds in the amount, of the character, and for the purposes prescribed in the proposed form of the bill hereinafter set forth, and to that end, the Congress is respectfully requested to enact a bill in substantially the following words and figures, to wit:

"A bill to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation, to issue sewer bonds

"Be it enacted, etc.—

"SECTION 1. The Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act, or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, may authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation of the Territory of Hawaii, to issue general obligation bonds in the sum of $1,750,000 for the purpose of enabling it to construct main interceptors and trunk lines and to meet its share of expenses for the construction and extension of laterals under improvement district assessments for a sanitary sewer system in the city and county of Honolulu.

"SEC. 2. The bonds issued under authority of this act may be either term or serial bonds, maturing, in the case of term bonds, not later than 30 years from the date of issue thereof, and, in the case of serial bonds, payable in substantially equal annual installments, the first installment to mature not later than 5 years, and the last installment to mature not later than 30 years, from the date of such issue. Such bonds may be issued without the approval of the President of the United States.

"SEC. 3. Any legislation enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii in its 1937 session pertaining to the issuance of sewer bonds, as authorized by this act, is hereby ratified and confirmed subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit the amendment of such territorial legislation by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii from time to time to provide for changes in the improvements authorized by such legislation and for the disposition of unexpended moneys realized from the sale of said bonds.

"SEC. 4. This act shall take effect immediately."

2. That certified copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded by the secretary of the Territory of Hawaii to the Secretary of the Interior, the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, and to both Houses of the Congress of the United States of America.

Concurrent resolution requesting Congress to amend sections 203 (1), 203 (4), 204 (2), 207 (1), 208, 208 (1), 208 (5), 208 (6), 208 (7), 209 (1), 209 (2), 209 (3), 209 (4), 215 (1), 215 (2), 215 (3), 216, and 220 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act

Whereas the joint holdover committee of the legislature to study the Hawaiian homes project has requested that an area of 27.9 acres of unused Federal land and 4.6 acres of unused territorial land in Kewalo, Oahu, in the Papakolea area, be added to the available Hawaiian home lands in order to simplify a proposed subdivision into residence lots, lessen the costs of development, and enlarge the scope of the project generally; and

Whereas the Hawaiian Homes Commission has recommended that, in order to clarify the description of that parcel of Kalawahine, Oahu, land, now under its control and now described by "parcel" description, should be described by "metes and bounds"; and

Whereas the joint holdover committee has further recommended that an area of 16.46 acres of beach front at Keaukaha, Hawaii, mainly a park that was formerly a part of the Hawaiian homes lands and serving as an essential fishing base for the homesteaders, be transferred to the control of the Hawaiian Homes Commission; and

Whereas the joint holdover committee has recommended that the present withdrawal period of 5 years after notification by the commission of leases of available lands by the commissioner of public lands be modified in future leases so as to permit leases to be drawn with a withdrawal clause in terms to be fixed by the commission at the time the lease is drawn; and

Whereas the joint holdover committee has recommended that the homes commission should have greater latitude than the present act provides in planning agricultural and residence lots; and

Whereas in accordance with an opinion from the territorial attorney general the Hawaiian Homes Commission is now authorized to issue only short-term revocable licenses covering the construction, operation, and maintenance of needed public utilities within commission lands, and it has been recommended that the commission be authorized to grant licenses for terms of not more than 21 years to public utility companies as easements for railroads, telephone lines, electric power and light lines, gas mains, and the like; and

Whereas the Hawaiian Homes Commission has, at the request of the joint holdover committee, formulated a clear-cut policy regarding succession of the interests of a deceased homesteader in his leasehold, and has recommended to the legislature amendments to the Hawaiian Homes Act, which will allow such policy to be followed; and

Whereas by reason of the fact that the income of the homesteaders from their pineapple crop comes in too late each year to meet the taxes for that year and there is no purpose served by requiring payments to become delinquent with the resultant penalties before the Commission can act on behalf of the homesteaders to pay the tax, thereupon acquiring a lien therefor upon homesteaders' property; and

Whereas the joint holdover committee has recommended that the Hawaiian Homes Act be changed by permitting the Commission to pay the homesteaders' taxes and acquire a lien without waiting for delinquency; and

Whereas the joint holdover committee has recommended that the Commission be authorized to undertake and carry on activities having to do with the economic and social welfare of the homesteaders in addition to those now authorized; and

Whereas the joint holdover committee has recommended that the rate of interest on homesteaders' loans under the provisions of section 215 (2) of the Hawaiian Homes Act be reduced from 5 percent to 3 percent: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Nineteenth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to amend sections 203 (1), 203 (4), 204 (2), 207 (1), 208, 208 (1), 208 (5), 208 (6), 208 (7), 209 (1), 209 (2), 209 (3), 209 (4), 215 (1), 215 (2), 215 (3), 216, and 220 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, so that they will read as follows:

"SEC. 207 (1). "SEC. 208 (5). The lessee shall not in any manner transfer to, or mortgage, pledge, or otherwise hold for the benefit of, any other person or group of persons or organizations of any kind, except a native Hawaiian or Hawaiians, and then only upon the approval of the Commission, or agree so to transfer, mortgage, pledge, or otherwise hold, his interest in the tract. Such interest shall not, except in pursuance of such a transfer, mortgage, or pledge to or holding for or agreement with a native Hawaiian or Hawaiians approved of by the Commission, or for any indebtedness due the Commission or for taxes, or for any other indebtedness the payment of which has been assured by the Commission, be subject to attachment, levy, or sale upon court process. The lessee shall not sublet his interest in the tract or improvements thereon.

"SEC. 208 (6). The lessee shall pay all taxes assessed upon the tract and improvements thereon. The Commission may in its discretion pay such taxes and have a lien therefor as provided by section 216 of this act.

"SEC. 208 (7). The lessee shall perform such other conditions, not in conflict with any provision of this title, as the Commission may stipulate in the lease: Provided, however, That an original lessee shall be exempt from all taxes for the first 5 years from date of lease.

"SEC. 209 (1). Upon the death of the lessee his interest in the tract and the improvements thereon including growing crops, either on the tract or in any collective contract or program, shall vest and be determined in the following manner. A lessee shall furnish the Commission, in writing, the name or names of such person or persons being a qualified native Hawaiian or Hawaiians, within the limits prescribed in the following sequence of succession, to whom he wishes his interest in the lease to be transferred after his death; this designation to be subject to the approval of the Commission:

"1. In the widow or widower;

"2. If there is no widow or widower, then in the children;

"3. If there are no children, then in the widows or widowers of the children;

"4. If there are no such widows or widowers, then in the grandchildren;

"5. If there are no grandchildren, then in the brothers and sisters;

"6. If there are no brothers or sisters, then in the widows or widowers of the brothers and sisters;

"Upon the death of a lessee, or the cancelation of a lease by the Commission, or the surrender of a lease by the lessee, the Commission shall appraise the value of all such improvements and said growing crops and shall pay to the legal representative of the deceased lessee, or to the previous lessee, as the case may be, the value thereof, less any indebtedness due the Commission, or for taxes, or for any other indebtedness the payment of which has been assured by the Commission, from the previous lessee. Such appraisal shall be made by three appraisers, one of which shall be named by the Commission, one by the previous lessee or the legal representative of his estate, and the third shall be selected by the two appraisers hereinbefore mentioned.

"SEC. 209 (2). After the cancelation of a lease by the Commission in accordance with the provisions of sections 210 and 216 of this title, or the surrender of a lease by a lessee, the Commission is authorized to transfer the lease or to issue a new lease to any qualified Hawaiian regardless of whether or not he is related in any way by blood or marriage to the previous lessee.

"SEC. 209 (3). After the death of a lessee, a successor or successors as defined in section 208 of this title, shall not during a period of not less than 6 months nor more than 2 years, the exact length of such period to be fixed by the Commission, be deemed to have violated any of the conditions enumerated in section 208 of this title, even though he is not a native Hawaiian and does not during this period, on his own behalf, occupy or use or cultivate the tract as a home or farm in accordance with the provisions of this title and the stipulations and provisions contained in the lease.

"SEC. 209 (4). Should any successor or successors to a tract be a minor or minors, the Commission may appoint a guardian therefor, subject to the approval of the court of proper jurisdiction. Such guardian shall be authorized to represent the successor or successors in all matters pertaining to the leasehold: Provided, That said guardian shall, in so representing such successor or successors, comply with the provisions of this title and the stipulations and provisions contained in the lease.

"SEC. 215 (1). Each contract of loan with the lessee or any successor or successors to his interest in the tract, shall be held subject to the following conditions, whether or not stipulated in the contract of loan: The amount of loans at any one time to any lessee of a tract of agricultural or pastoral land shall not exceed $3,000, and to any lessee of a residence lot, shall not exceed $1,000: Provided, That whereupon the death of a lessee or the cancelation of a lease by the Commission or the surrender of a lease by the lessee, the Commission shall make the appraisal and payment provided by section 209 (1), the amount of such payment shall be considered as part or all, as the case may be, of any such loan without limitation as to the maximum amounts herein specified in this section.

"SEC. 215 (2). The loans shall be repaid upon an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual installments sufficient to cover (a) interest on the unpaid principal at the rate of 3 percent per annum, and (b) such amount of the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period not exceeding 30 years. The moneys received by the Commission from any installment paid upon such loan shall be covered into the fund. The payment of any installment due shall, with the concurrence therein of at least three of the five members of the Commission, be postponed in whole or in part by the Commission for such reasons as it deems good and sufficient and until such later date as it deems advisable. Such postponed payments shall continue to bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum on the unpaid principal and interest.

"SEC. 215 (3). In case of the borrower's death, the Commission shall permit the successor or successors to the tract to assume the contract of loan subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) of this section. In case of the cancelation of a lease by the Commission or the surrender of a lease by a lessee, the Commission may, at its option, declare all annual installments upon the loan immediately due and payable or permit the successor or successors to the tract to assume the contract of loan subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) of this section.

"SEC. 216. The Commission may require the borrower to insure, in each amount as the Commission may by regulation prescribe, all livestock and dwellings and other permanent improvements upon his tract, purchased or constructed out of any moneys loaned from the fund; or in lieu thereof the Commission may directly take out such insurance and add the cost thereof to the amount of annual installments payable under the amortization plan. Whenever the Commission has reason to believe that the borrower has violated any condition enumerated in paragraphs (2), (4), (5), or (6) of section 215 of this title, the Commission shall give due notice and afford opportunity for a hearing to the borrower or the successor or successors to his interest in the tract, as the case demands. If, upon such hearing, the Commission finds that the borrower has violated the condition, the Commission may declare all annual installments immediately due and payable, notwithstanding any provision in the contract of loan to the contrary. The Commission shall have a first lien upon the borrower's or lessee's interest in his tract, growing crops, either on the tract or in any collective contract or program, dwellings, or other permanent improvements thereon, and his livestock, to the amount of all annual installments due and unpaid and of all taxes upon such tract and improvements paid by the Commission, and of all indebtedness of the lessee, the payment of which has been assured by the Commission. Such lien shall have priority over any other obligation for which the tract, said growing crops, dwellings, other improvements, or livestock may be security.

"The Commission may at such times at it deems advisable enforce any such lien by declaring the borrower's interest in his tract, or his successor's interest therein, as the case may be, together with the said growing crops, dwellings, and other permanent improvements thereon, and the livestock, to be forfeited, the lease in respect to such tract canceled, and shall thereupon order the tract to be vacated and the livestock surrendered within a reasonable time. The right to the use and occupancy of the Hawaiian home lands contained in such tract shall thereupon revest in the Commission, and the Commission may take possession of the tract and the improvements and growing crops thereon: Provided, That the Commission shall pay to the borrower any difference which may be due him after the appraisal provided for in paragraph (1) of section 209 of this title has been made.

"SEC. 220. The Commission is hereby authorized directly to undertake and carry on general water and other development projects in respect to Hawaiian home lands, and to undertake other activities having to do with the economic and social welfare of the homesteaders. The legislature of the Territory is authorized to appropriate out of the treasury of the Territory such sums as it deems necessary to provide the Commission with funds sufficient to execute such projects, to carry on its administration and maintenance activities, and to accumulate a revolving loan fund of $1,000,000. The legislature is further authorized to issue bonds to the extent required to yield the amount of any sum so appropriated."

AID FOR SCHOOLS IN HAZARDOUS CONDITION

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I present for appropriate disposition, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, a letter from the National Congress of Parents and Teachers with reference to Senate Concurrent Resolution 11.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PARENTS AND TEACHERS,
Washington, D. C., May 21, 1937.

Hon. LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH: At its annual convention held early this month in Richmond, Va., the board of managers of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers endorsed the Schwellenbach Senate Concurrent Resolution 11, the same being a request that the President and the Administrator of Public Works approve the use of an ample sum from the revolving funds of the Public Works Administration to make the loans and grants essential for the construction or repair of school buildings for which applications have been made owing to conditions hazardous to the lives of children.

We know from the reports of our members in various sections of the country that there are many school buildings long ago condemned and involving hazards to life, which are still in daily use.

We earnestly request the adoption by the United States Senate of the Schwellenbach concurrent resolution at the earliest possible date.

Very truly yours,

MRS. MARY T. BANNERMAN,
National Chairman, Committee on Legislation.

PROPOSED ENLARGEMENT OF THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. McNARY presented a statement by Fred W. Mears, of Salem, Oreg., relative to the proposed enlargement of the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SUPREME COURT

The greatest issue before the American people since the days of Abraham Lincoln is the integrity and independence of the Supreme Court of the United States.

If our country is to continue to be free and independent, we must refuse to permit the President of the United States to become the absolute dictator of this land of the free and the home of the brave. To prevent this calamity of an absolute dictatorship arising in our country, we must refuse to permit President Roosevelt to appoint six new and additional judges to the Supreme Court. We should fight to the death the appointment by President Roosevelt of even one new and additional judge to the Supreme Court.

The term of a Justice of the Supreme Court is for life. Only by death, voluntary resignation, or by impeachment will his term be shortened. If President Roosevelt is permitted to place six new and additional judges on the Supreme Bench, no future Congress will have the power or be able in any way to remove a single one of the Supreme Court judges from the Supreme Bench.

By appointing six new and additional Supreme Court judges, President Roosevelt would control and dictate the actions and decisions of the Supreme Court for many years to come. If the appointment of six new and additional Supreme Court judges did not prove sufficient to control the future actions and decisions of the Supreme Court, then President Roosevelt would demand of the United States Senate the right to appoint another bunch of six new and additional judges.

The majority of the American people are opposed absolutely to the desire of President Roosevelt to control and dictate the future actions and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. The American people are absolutely opposed to President Roosevelt or any future President becoming the dictator of the United States of America.

God rules in the affairs of men and the American Republic still lives. Right will triumph at Washington.

FRED W. MEARS.

SALEM, OREG., May 6, 1937.

EFFECT OF LEGISLATION CORRECTING DISHONORABLE DISCHARGE RECORDS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in every session of the Congress a large number of so-called private relief bills are introduced by Members of the House and Senate to correct dishonorable discharge records of persons who have served in the Army or Navy. With a few exceptions, practically all of these measures are to enable dishonorably discharged persons who served in the Army or Navy during peace or wartime periods, to receive certain rights and benefits that by law have been granted only to honorably discharged service men.

In order that when favorable action by Congress is taken on such relief measures the rights and benefits restored to those dishonorably discharged may be fully realized, I requested the Judge Advocate General of the Navy to compile the data showing the legal rights and benefits which are restored when a private bill is passed for the relief of one discharged under other than honorable conditions.

I request that the reply of the Judge Advocate General be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the information of the Members of the Congress.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1937.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Further reference is made to your letter of April 13, 1937, in which you request to be informed as to what rights, privileges, and benefits granted to honorably discharged men of the naval service who served in the Spanish-American War, the World War, and during peacetime are denied enlisted men discharged with dishonorable or other types of undesirable discharges. You also request information as to the effect of the usual acts of Congress for the relief of men who have been separated from the service with such discharges.

The various classes of discharges in the Navy are honorable, ordinary, special order, underage, inaptitude, dishonorable, bad conduct, and undesirable. Ordinary, special order, underage, and inaptitude discharges are given under honorable conditions, and certain undesirable discharges may also be considered as being given under honorable conditions. Dishonorable and bad conduct discharges are given under dishonorable conditions in pursuance of sentences of courts martial.

The following shows the benefits that are extended by various acts of Congress and executive orders to persons who have been discharged from the naval service under honorable conditions, and the effect of a dishonorable or other discharge of a dishonorable character.

Pension: Persons who served 90 days or more in military or naval service during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition (April 21, 1898, to July 4, 1902), and who were honorably discharged, are entitled to pensions regardless of proof of physical disability if over 62 years of age and if under that age are entitled to pensions if suffering from physical or mental disability which so incapacitates them for performance of manual labor as to render them unable to earn a support (U. S. Code, title 38, sec. 365).

Persons who served 70 days or more during the above-mentioned periods and who have been honorably discharged and who are physically incapacitated, without regard to line of duty, to such an extent as to be unable to earn a support are entitled to pensions at rates different from those provided for 90-day men (U. S. Code, title 38, sec. 365b).

Widows and surviving children of persons who served 90 days or more during the above-mentioned periods and who were honorably discharged are entitled to pensions (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 364a).

A dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge from the naval service precludes the allowance of the benefits provided in the above laws.

Honorably discharged veterans of the World War who are suffering with disabilities incurred or aggravated in line of duty, and such veterans who have been in the service for more than 90 days and are suffering with permanent total disabilities regardless of service connection, are entitled to pensions. Also the widows, surviving children, or dependent fathers or mothers of such veterans who die as a result of disease or injury incurred or aggravated in line of duty are entitled to pensions (Veterans' Regulation 1a). A dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge precludes the granting of the benefits provided for persons of this class.

Honorably discharged personnel of the naval service in times of peace are entitled to pensions on account of disabilities resulting from injury or disease incurred or contracted in line of duty. Also the widows and children or dependent fathers or mothers of such persons are entitled to pensions. A dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge precludes the granting of the benefits provided for persons of this class.

Hospitalization: Veterans of the Spanish-American War or the World War are entitled to domiciliary or hospital care, including medical treatment, who—

(1) Were honorably discharged and are suffering from disabilities incurred or aggravated in line of duty.

(2) Were honorably discharged and served for a period of 90 days or more, or who served for less than 90 days and were discharged for disabilities incurred in line of duty who are incapacitated from earning a living and have no adequate means of support and who are suffering with permanent disabilities or tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric ailments or other conditions requiring emergency or extensive hospital treatment.

Former members of the naval service in peacetimes are entitled to domiciliary or hospital care, including medical treatment, who—

(1) Were honorably discharged for disabilities incurred in line of duty who are suffering with injuries or diseases incurred or aggravated in line of duty when in need of hospital treatment for such injuries or diseases.

(2) Were honorably discharged from their last period of active service for disabilities incurred in line of duty who are incapacitated from earning a living and have no adequate means of support and who are suffering with permanent disabilities or tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric ailments or other conditions requiring emergency or extensive hospital treatment which incapacitate them from earning a living.

Hospitalization is denied to all persons who were separated from the service under dishonorable conditions (Veterans' Regulation 6 (c)).

Adjusted compensation: The World War Veterans' Adjusted Compensation Act authorizes payment of adjusted compensation only to persons discharged from the service under honorable conditions (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 592). Persons discharged from the naval service with dishonorable or bad-conduct discharges are precluded from receiving adjusted compensation.

Burial in national cemeteries: Only honorably discharged persons or persons who die while in active service are entitled to burial in national cemeteries. The character of the last discharge from the service governs. Dishonorable or bad-conduct discharges from the naval service preclude such rights (U. S. C., title 24, sec. 281).

Civil-service benefits: Honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines or their widows are entitled to preference in appointments in the Government service (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 35). By Executive order honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines shall have five points added to their earned ratings in examinations for entrance to the classified service. Applicants for civil-service examination who are honorably discharged and who establish the present existence of a service-connected disability, or their wives if they are over 55 years and are disabled, are entitled to have 10 points added to their earned ratings.

These benefits are denied men discharged with dishonorable or bad-conduct discharges.

Naval Home, Philadelphia (U. S. Code, title 24, sec. 17): The privilege of admission to the Naval Home is extended by regulation to discharged enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps who have served in the Mexican War, the Civil War, the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, the World War, or any other service where the armed forces of the United States have been employed, and their lives hazarded in military operations, and who are, by reason of wounds, sickness, old age, or other disability, unable to support themselves by manual labor; also to discharged enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps regardless of war service who have become disqualified for further service by wounds or injuries received, or disease contracted in the service in the line of duty and who are unable to support themselves by manual labor.

The law or regulations governing admission to the Naval Home do not prohibit the admission of men discharged with dishonorable or bad-conduct discharges. However, as a matter of practice such persons have not been admitted. In this connection the regulations provide that where there is not sufficient room to accommodate all applicants preference shall be given to honorable service. Since there is always a large waiting list for admission to the home, this regulation would bar men discharged other than honorably.

National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers: Admission restricted to honorably discharged officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines and Army and Navy nurses who are disabled. (U. S. Code, title 24, sec. 131.) A dishonorable or bad-conduct discharge from the naval service precludes admission.

Soldiers' Home, Washington: Admission restricted to Army personnel.

The usual legislation for the relief of persons discharged from the service under other than honorable conditions provide:

"That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors (the person named) shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on (date of actual discharge): Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefits shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The effect of such legislation is to authorize future pension, hospitalization and medical treatment, burial in national cemeteries, civil-service preference, and eligibility for admission to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers provided the person concerned is otherwise eligible. Such an act does not authorize payment of adjusted compensation for the reason that the man had actually been discharged under other than honorable conditions and is not, therefore, a veteran within the meaning of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act. Also, special acts of the character above stated restrict their application to future benefits whereas adjusted compensation is a benefit vesting prior to the enactment of such legislation. Such legislation also would not have the effect of changing preference for admission to the Naval Home since the regulations require that preference shall be given to honorable service and such legislation does not change the fact of the character of service rendered.

Since August 22, 1912, citizenship is only lost by persons in the naval service upon conviction of desertion in time of war. Prior to that date loss of citizenship resulted from desertion whether in wartime or peacetime. (U. S. Code, title 34, sec. 1200, art. 18.) A relief act such as stated above does not have the effect in any case of restoring citizenship for the reason that it pertains only to the character of discharge and does not affect the conviction by court martial. However, a Presidential pardon does have the effect of restoring citizenship or any other civil rights lost by reason of conviction of desertion. Such pardons are granted as matters of course in most cases when application is made. By proclamation issued March 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 1940–41), the President granted amnesty and pardon to all persons convicted of desertion during the World War on or after November 11, 1918.

Sincerely yours,

G. J. ROWCLIFF,
Judge Advocate General of the Navy.

Hon. DAVID L. WALSH,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

RETIREMENT ANNUITIES FOR FORMER EMPLOYEES ON ISTHMUS OF PANAMA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 81) to provide retirement annuities for certain former employees of the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this bill proposes to grant annuity rights or retirement rights to 15 or 16 men who were formerly employed in the Canal Zone. In 1920 or 1921—I have forgotten the exact date—legislation was enacted giving retirement benefits to all those who had a civil service status at that time. Subsequently, in 1926, further legislation was enacted, but the legislation of 1926 was not made retroactive. As a result all but about 15 or 16 persons who were employed in the Canal Zone have been accorded retirement privileges. These men all served more than 15 years of time and it seems to me every equitable consideration dictates that they should be accorded the rights and benefits which other employees have received.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator from Maine how many of these employees there are?

Mr. WHITE. There are 15 or possibly 16.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the estimated cost of the bill?

Mr. WHITE. I have no exact figures as to the cost, but the amount would be small, because the men, in order to obtain the benefits, must make the same contributions that all other employees have made to the retirement fund.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments of the Committee on Civil Service were, on page 1, line 6, after the word "any", to strike out "person" and insert "citizen of the United States"; and on page 2, line 2, after the word "article", to insert "and who meets the requirements as to age and service set forth in subsection 103 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code, approved June 19, 1934", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 103 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code, approved June 19, 1934, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"Any citizen of the United States separated from the service of either the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Co., on the Isthmus of Panama subsequent to August 1, 1920, and before July 1, 1926, not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency, upon making the necessary contributions to the retirement and disability funds as provided in this article and who meets the requirements as to age and service set forth in said section 103 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code, approved June 19, 1934, shall be entitled to an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of this article, notwithstanding the fact that his separation from the service occurred prior to the existence of any retirement act applicable to employees of the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad on the Isthmus of Panama: Provided, That such annuity shall be payable only from the date of enactment of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not affect pending suits; and shall not apply to cases in which the time for bringing a suit under the provisions of section 4915, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 35, sec. 63), had not expired when this act takes effect.

SALLIE S. TWILLEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1585) for the relief of Sallie S. Twilley, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Sallie S. Twilley, in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of the death of her husband, Samuel J. Twilley, a former rural carrier at the Cambridge, Md., post office, due to injuries received while in the performance of his duties: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 410) for the relief of the legal guardian of Roy D. Cook, a minor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The bill (H. R. 2901) to amend the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 349), for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government to include all other employees in the legislative branch was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement about the bill and then to offer some amendments.

The bill was considered last year in the Committee on Rules and there was much discussion about it there and on the floor. It has been deemed desirable by those who favor the bill that it should be limited to those who have had 15 years' service; that is to say, no employee shall be eligible until he has been 15 years in the Government service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. There is a report on the bill, but not on the amendments which I am about to offer.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not find a copy of the report in my file.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is unlucky that it was not bound in his volume of bills. Let me explain the measure to him.

As the bill was originally written, every clerk of every Senator would be eligible for this privilege. It has been found necessary, however, to have the bill formulated in accordance with the general civil-service procedure of the Government; that is to say, that everybody who is to get the benefits of the bill must contribute the amount which it would have been his duty to pay had he started in the beginning to make the payments.

Mr. Pace, the very efficient financial officer of the Senate, felt that if the bill were to cover all employees from the beginning of their service it would place a very unnecessary burden upon his office, because in the nature of things the turnover in the positions in question is very great. In order that we may take care of those who have been a long time in the service, 15 years at least, I am about to offer certain amendments. In order to have the benefits given to any employee, he must pay back into the Treasury the amount which he would have been assessed from year to year during the 15 years, in order that the legislative employees shall have no privilege which is not accorded the employees of other divisions of the Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then does the Senator say that, as amended, the legislative employee will simply be given by the bill the same retirement privileges that exist in other departments, and nothing else?

Mr. COPELAND. The same privileges and the same obligations, and nothing else. So, Mr. President, I offer these amendments.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator proposes now to offer amendments which he says will take care of a group of employees who would not have been cared for under the language of the bill as reported.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to have an opportunity to read the amendments to see exactly their effect, inasmuch as they were drafted after the report of the committee was filed. The subject is a very complicated one. The text of the bill so indicates. I should like to know something more about how the amendments will affect the group of employees who were to be benefited by the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Would the Senator prefer that the amendments be offered and the bill reprinted with the amendments?

Mr. BYRNES. I certainly should like to have the Senator offer his amendments and have them printed, so that we may see exactly what they propose and what effect they will have upon the other employees.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well, Mr. President. Then I offer the amendments, together with amendments covering the employees of the courts who will come under the same conditions, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be reprinted with the inclusion of the amendments, so that Senators may have the benefit of studying the matter before the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the bill will be passed over temporarily.

RETIREMENT OF EMERGENCY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 423) providing for continuing retirement pay, under certain conditions, of officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability while in the service of the United States during the World War was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRNES. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the bill is to be objected to, I will wait until the conclusion of the calendar, and then move to have it considered.

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President; I may not object to its consideration. I did not know that the Senator from Georgia was at his desk. I should like to have the Senator explain exactly what the bill would accomplish.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this bill proposes to restore to the rolls under certain conditions emergency officers who were taken off the retired list by the Economy Act of March 1933. It undertakes to restore to the rolls those officers who cannot meet the rigid requirements of the causative-factor rule as adopted and as applied by the Veterans' Administration. It does not admit to the rolls any except those emergency officers who were stricken from the rolls as a result of the act of 1933, except a small group of emergency officers who received their commission after November 7, 1918, but before the actual termination of the World War. This group is very small, less than 100 in number.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much would it cost?

Mr. GEORGE. The Veterans' Administration says the passage of the bill may restore to the rolls about 3,000 officers. More than 6,000 officers were on the rolls under the emergency retirement act. As a result of the Economy Act, some 4,700 were removed and some 1,400 were left on the list.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator say that about 6,000 were on the rolls?

Mr. GEORGE. About 6,300, in round numbers, were on the rolls at the date of the passage of the Economy Act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Department recommend the bill?

Mr. GEORGE. The Department does not recommend it.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has recommended against it, I believe.

Mr. GEORGE. The recommendation of the Department may be construed as against it. The view the committee takes of the bill is that it merely corrects an interpretation of the law that should have been corrected by the Veterans' Administration itself.

If the Senate will permit me to do so, I will explain the bill.

After the passage of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act, it was submitted to the Department of Justice for construction; and two Attorneys General—Attorney General Sargent and Attorney General Mitchell—held, respectively, that emergency officers were entitled to the presumptive benefits given to the veterans of the World War in establishing compensation claims.

These presumptions related both to soundness at the time of enlistment and also to the cause of the injury or disability, if the disability arose within a certain period of time.

It is the opinion of the representatives of all the veterans' organizations, and it is the opinion of members of the Finance Committee who have given some study to the matter, that under the bill possibly 1,100 officers may be restored to the rolls. The Veterans' Administration is of the opinion that some 3,000 officers may be restored to the rolls; but it is certain that none can be restored who were not on the rolls at the time of the passage of the Economy Act, especially after the promulgation of rule V, which contains the so-called causative-factor rule, under which all the officers suffering disability as a result of disease incurred in service were almost necessarily stricken from the rolls.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the estimate of the Veterans' Administration is correct, that 6,300 would apply, the bill would cost about $20,000,000 a year, would it not?

Mr. GEORGE. No; the estimate of the Veterans' Administration is that it would cost, for the first year, approximately $6,000,000—that is, when all the officers were restored to the rolls. Thereafter, of course, the amount would decrease.

I may say to the Senate that between the passage of the Economy Act and this date approximately 500 of the disabled emergency officers have died. Ninety-seven were on the rolls receiving retirement pay. The remainder were stricken from the rolls and had their appeals pending, or their appeals had been denied.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. At the time the original emergency act was in force there was something of a scandal as the result of cumulative salaries which produced a final earning for some retirement officers which was out of all reason. I suggest that it is very definitely important for the record that the Senator should explain that the proposed legislation prohibits a repetition of that sort of a situation through the $3,000 limitation.

Mr. GEORGE. The proposed legislation prohibits any retroactive retirement pay, except that in a negligible number of cases of officers whose appeals are still pending, if the appeals should be decided in favor of the officers they would go back on the rolls anyway, and they might be entitled to retroactive retirement pay under existing law; but this bill, in making it possible for any officer to be restored to the list, expressly prohibits and forbids the payment of any past-due retirement pay. In other words, it is not retroactive.

Not only that but the bill takes out of the law the presumption of soundness on the date of enlistment and the presumption that the disability arose from a service cause under the circumstances under which a great many officers were added to the retired list or were placed on the retired list under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act. The bill also provides that the Veterans' Administration may rebut, by official record or by clear and unmistakable evidence, those cases which otherwise prima facie might be entitled to be again entered on the rolls.

There is one amendment to which I shall invite attention. That amendment is in section 2. It provides that retirement pay shall not be received by these officers if they are already drawing compensation from the Government in the sum of $3,000; or, if the amount of compensation paid by the Government, plus the retired pay of the officer, amounts to over $3,000, it must be reduced to $3,000 per annum, with two exceptions, that is, the officer who received his permanent disability in actual combat may receive compensation from the Government and his full retirement pay; and there is also another group which includes, as I have been informed, about four or five officers who received their disability as the result of an explosion of an instrumentality of war, as in the case where they were demonstrating some firearm actually in service, and were permanently and totally disabled.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia to yield to me while I propound an inquiry to the able Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Michigan has just asserted that, touching some question of the Economy Act, after some feature of it had been concluded there had arisen a great many scandals. I do not know to what the able Senator refers, but I should like to ask him whether he means to indicate by that a charge that the administration had been guilty of scandals in connection with the administration of the act, or did he mean to intimate that the persons receiving the money, whoever they were, were themselves guilty of that which led to what he calls a scandal?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me while I reply to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is a notorious fact that under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act many doctors who were employed by the Government, and received substantial salaries from the Government as employees of the Veterans' Bureau, also enjoyed retirement pay, which resulted in virtually a double compensation. It is no reflection on the administration, I can assure the Senator; it was simply the net result of the Emergency Officers' Act as originally drawn. The complaint against it was universal and uniform throughout the service organizations, and it was corrected.

Mr. LEWIS. The explanation of the Senator, I think, replies to the purpose of my inquiry.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The report of the Administrator on page 4 states that the bill repeals the provision in the present law limiting the disability retirement to officers who enlisted prior to November 11, 1918. Is that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct; and I may say by way of explanation that less than 100 officers were commissioned after November 11, 1918. Some of them were in hospitals suffering from wounds, and their commissions were not actually received by them. It cannot affect more than ninety-odd officers at best. In other words, the entire class that would be affected is limited to less than 100.

For the most part they were officers who had earned their commissions but who, on account of wounds and disabilities, had not actually received their commissions. The committee was of the opinion that it was not fair, if they were otherwise qualified, with 30 percent permanent disability received in line of duty, to exclude them from receiving retirement benefits, provided, of course, that they must have received their commissions before the actual termination of the war. I assure the Senate that only a small number would be affected by the provision, and for the most part they were officers who had earned their commissions by long service during the war. Many of them were actually in hospitals, and therefore did not receive their commissions.

Mr. BYRNES. As I read the report of the Administrator, his estimate as to the cost is three and a half million, unless the act shall be retroactive. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GEORGE. My understanding of the report of the Administrator is that his opinion is that the cost in the beginning may amount to $6,000,000. It is not retroactive, and therefore there could be, at the outside, only the retirement pay for some 3,000 officers, if the entire number were actually restored to the rolls.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator to this statement in the letter of the Administrator:

> It is estimated that approximately 3,194 emergency officers who are not now on the rolls would be entitled to retirement pay at an additional annual cost of approximately $3,696,000.

According to the Administrator, it would really cost less than the estimate.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that, because the bill prohibits the retirement pay from becoming retroactive except in a small number of cases where the officer has pending an appeal in which he may be successful, anyway, without the enactment of this measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Senate bill 423, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 2, line 8, after the word "service", to insert the words "in line of duty", and at the end of the bill to insert two new sections, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of any law of the United States, any person who served as an officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, other than as an officer of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the World War, who made valid application for retirement under the provisions of Public Law No. 506, Seventieth Congress, enacted May 24, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, secs. 581 and 582), and who prior to the passage of this act has been granted retirement with pay, shall be entitled to continue to receive retirement pay at the monthly rate paid him on March 19, 1933, if the disability for which he has been retired resulted from disease or injury or aggravation of a preexisting disease or injury incurred in such service in line of duty and directly resulting from the performance of duty: Provided, That such person entered active service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and served as an officer prior to July 2, 1921: Provided further, That where the disability is now or hereafter determined to be directly service connected, without benefit of statutory presumption of soundness or service connection, it will be considered to have directly resulted from performance of duty unless otherwise shown by official record, or clear and unmistakable evidence.

SEC. 2. Payment of emergency officers' retirement pay shall be effective from the date of enactment of this act in all cases where entitlement thereto is authorized solely by the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That subsection (b) of section 212 of Public Law No. 212, Seventy-second Congress, shall be amended to read as follows:

"(b) This section shall not apply to any person whose retired pay plus civilian pay amounts to less than $3,000: Provided, That this section shall not apply to regular or emergency commissioned officers retired for disability incurred in combat with an enemy of the United States or for disabilities resulting from an explosion of an instrumentality of war in line of duty during an enlistment or employment as provided in Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), part I, paragraph I."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for continuing retirement pay, under certain conditions, of officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability while in the service of the United States during the World War, and for other purposes."

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) providing for the participation of the United States in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I ask that this joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

JUVENILE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that this bill go over without prejudice. One of the Senators who wishes to be heard on the measure is not now in the Chamber. I hope that later the bill may be passed, perhaps in modified form, because of its great merit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT PAY OF WORLD WAR OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1040) placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who served as provisional officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, and were honorably separated from such service prior to December 31, 1921, are hereby placed in the same status with all persons who served as emergency officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War and extended the same benefits and/or privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and/or regulations for said emergency officers: Provided, That application under this act for benefits and/or privileges must be made within 1 year after the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill gives provisional officers of the World War who terminated their service before 1921 the same rights, insofar as application for compensation benefits and the emergency retirement benefits are concerned, that are possessed by emergency officers of the World War. These provisional officers served through the war just as did all other officers, but they have been excluded from compensation and emergency retirement benefits. It is thought to be just to place them in the same status with the emergency officers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, how many are involved?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About 2,200 altogether.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there any estimate of the contemplated cost of the program?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The estimate is that the compensation benefits would be in the neighborhood of about $3,300,000, and, based on applications received from provisional officers in 1928, the emergency retirement benefits would be about $10,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the recommendation of the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Veterans' Administration has recommended against the bill because the Compensation Act of 1924 excluded these men.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, these provisional officers in the main were transferred from the regular service, were they not? Most of them were either sergeants or other noncommissioned officers in the regular service who were commissioned during the war. Is not that true?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think that applies to all of them.

Mr. GILLETTE. In the main they were, I believe. There is a provision in the bill that if they served as provisional commissioned officers and were separated from such service before December 1921, they should come under the measure. Does the Senator understand that to refer to their service as commissioned officers, or their service after their return to their status as noncommissioned officers?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Their service as commissioned officers.

Mr. GILLETTE. It did not mean their separation from the service?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It meant their separation from the service.

Mr. GILLETTE. I think it should be corrected, and I shall insist on my objection at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

MAXIMUM HOURS, MINIMUM WAGES, AND CHILD LABOR (H. DOC. NO. 255)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The time has arrived for us to take further action to extend the frontiers of social progress. Such further action initiated by the legislative branch of the Government, administered by the Executive, and sustained by the judicial, is within the common-sense framework and purpose of our Constitution and receives beyond doubt the approval of our electorate.

The overwhelming majority of our population earns its daily bread either in agriculture or in industry. One-third of our population, the overwhelming majority of which is in agriculture or industry, is ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed.

The overwhelming majority of this Nation has little patience with that small minority which vociferates today that prosperity has returned, that wages are good, that crop prices are high and that Government should take a holiday.

The truth of the matter, of course, is that the exponents of the theory of private initiative as the cure for deep-seated national ills want in most cases to improve the lot of mankind. But, well intentioned as they may be, they fail for four evident reasons—first, they see the problem from the point of view of their own business; second, they see the problem from the point of view of their own locality or region; third, they cannot act unanimously because they have no machinery for agreeing among themselves; and, finally, they have no power to bind the inevitable minority of chiselers within their own ranks.

Though we may go far in admitting the innate decency of this small minority, the whole story of our Nation proves that social progress has too often been fought by them. In actual practice it has been effectively advanced only by the passage of laws by State legislatures or the National Congress.

Today, you and I are pledged to take further steps to reduce the lag in the purchasing power of industrial workers and to strengthen and stabilize the markets for the farmers' products. The two go hand in hand. Each depends for its effectiveness upon the other. Both working simultaneously will open new outlets for productive capital. Our Nation so richly endowed with natural resources and with a capable and industrious population should be able to devise ways and means of insuring to all our able-bodied working men and women a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. A self-supporting and self-respecting democracy can plead no justification for the existence of child labor, no economic reason for chiseling workers' wages or stretching workers' hours.

Enlightened business is learning that competition ought not to cause bad social consequences which inevitably react upon the profits of business itself. All but the hopelessly reactionary will agree that to conserve our primary resources of manpower, Government must have some control over maximum hours, minimum wages, the evil of child labor, and the exploitation of unorganized labor.

Nearly 20 years ago, in his dissenting opinion in Hammer v. Dagenhart, Mr. Justice Holmes expressed his views as to the power of the Congress to prohibit the shipment in interstate or foreign commerce of the product of the labor of children in factories below what Congress then deemed to be civilized social standards. Surely the experience of the last 20 years has only served to reinforce the wisdom and the rightness of his views. And surely, if he was right about the power of the Congress over the work of children in factories, it is equally right that the Congress has the power over decent wages and hours in those same factories. He said:

I had thought that the propriety of the exercise of a power admitted to exist in some cases was for the consideration of Congress alone, and that this Court always had disavowed the right to intrude its judgment upon questions of policy or morals. It is not for this Court to pronounce when prohibition is necessary to regulation, if it ever may be necessary—to say that it is permissible as against strong drink but not as against the product of ruined lives.

The act does not meddle with anything belonging to the States. They may regulate their internal affairs and their domestic commerce as they like. But when they seek to send their products across the State line they are no longer within their rights. If there were no Constitution and no Congress, their power to cross the line would depend upon their neighbors. Under the Constitution such commerce belongs not to the States but to Congress to regulate. It may carry out its views of public policy, whatever indirect effect they may have upon the activities of the States. Instead of being encountered by a prohibitive tariff at her boundaries, the State encounters the public policy of the United States, which it is for Congress to express. The public policy of the United States is shaped with a view to the benefit of the Nation as a whole * * *. The national welfare, as understood by Congress, may require a different attitude within its sphere from that of some self-seeking State. It seems to me entirely constitutional for Congress to enforce its understanding by all the means at its command.

Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Clark, and Mr. Justice McKenna agreed. A majority of the Supreme Court, however, decided 5 to 4 against Mr. Justice Holmes and laid down a rule of constitutional law which has ever since driven into impractical distinctions and subterfuges all attempts to assert the fundamental power of the National Government over interstate commerce.

But although Mr. Justice Holmes spoke for a minority of the Supreme Court, he spoke for a majority of the American people.

One of the primary purposes of the formation of our Federal Union was to do away with the trade barriers between the States. To the Congress, and not to the States, was given the power to regulate commerce among the several States. Congress cannot interfere in local affairs, but when goods pass through the channels of commerce from one State to another they become subject to the power of the Congress, and the Congress may exercise that power to recognize and protect the fundamental interests of free labor.

And so to protect the fundamental interests of free labor and a free people we propose that only goods which have been produced under conditions which meet the minimum standards of free labor shall be admitted to interstate commerce. Goods produced under conditions which do not meet rudimentary standards of decency should be regarded as contraband and ought not to be allowed to pollute the channels of interstate trade.

These rudimentary standards will of necessity at the start fall far short of the ideal. Even in the treatment of national problems there are geographical and industrial diversities which practical statesmanship cannot wholly ignore. Backward labor conditions and relatively progressive labor conditions cannot be completely assimilated and made uniform at one fell swoop without creating economic dislocations.

Practical exigencies suggest the wisdom of distinguishing labor conditions which are clearly oppressive from those which are not as fair or as reasonable as they should be under circumstances prevailing in particular industries. Most fair labor standards as a practical matter require some differentiation between different industries and localities. But there are a few rudimentary standards of which we may properly ask general and widespread observance. Failure to observe them must be regarded as socially and economically oppressive and unwarranted under almost any circumstance.

Allowing for a few exceptional trades and permitting longer hours on the payment of time and a half for overtime, it should not be difficult to define a general maximum working week. Allowing for appropriate qualifications and general classifications by administrative action, it should also be possible to put some floor below which the wage ought not to fall. There should be no difficulty in ruling out the products of the labor of children from any fair market. And there should also be little dispute when it comes to ruling out of the interstate markets products of employers who deny to their workers the right of self-organization and collective bargaining, whether through the fear of labor spies, the bait of company unions, or the use of strikebreakers. The abuses disclosed by the investigations of the Senate must be promptly curbed.

With the establishment of these rudimentary standards as a base we must seek to build up, through appropriate administrative machinery, minimum wage standards of fairness and reasonableness, industry by industry, having due regard to local and geographical diversities and to the effect of unfair labor conditions upon competition in interstate trade and upon the maintenance of industrial peace.

Although a goodly portion of the goods of American industry move in interstate commerce and will be covered by the legislation which we recommend, there are many purely local pursuits and services which no Federal legislation can effectively cover. No State is justified in sitting idly by and expecting the Federal Government to meet State responsibility for those labor conditions with which the State may effectively deal without fear of unneighborly competition from sister States. The proposed Federal legislation should be a stimulus and not a hindrance to State action.

As we move resolutely to extend the frontiers of social progress, we must be guided by practical reason and not by barren formulae. We must ever bear in mind that our objective is to improve and not to impair the standard of living of those who are now undernourished, poorly clad, and ill housed.

We know that overwork and underpay do not increase the national income when a large portion of our workers remain unemployed. Reasonable and flexible use of the long-established right of Government to set and to change working hours can, I hope, decrease unemployment in those groups in which unemployment today principally exists.

Our problem is to work out in practice those labor standards which will permit the maximum but prudent employment of our human resources to bring within the reach of the average man and woman a maximum of goods and of services conducive to the fulfillment of the promise of American life.

Legislation can, I hope, be passed at this session of the Congress further to help those who toil in factory and on farm. We have promised it. We cannot stand still.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 24, 1937.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask that the message of the President of the United States be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and that it also be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a bill and request that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator is that bill intended to carry out the suggestions made by the President in his message to the Congress?

Mr. BLACK. It is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama will be received and referred as requested.

The bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

FRED G. CLARK CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next business in order on the calendar.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 51) for the relief of Fred G. Clark Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Fred G. Clark Co. the sum of $7,586.61, being the amount agreed upon in accordance with the decision of the Board of Contract Adjustment, War Department, in full settlement for losses suffered by reason of forced compliance by said company with orders of the War Industries Board preventing said company from disposing of its stock of wool grease during the late war with Germany: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT B. ROLFE

The bill (S. 526) for the relief of Robert B. Rolfe was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to pay, from the date of approval of this act, to Robert B. Rolfe, formerly a forest ranger, compensation in the amount and manner provided for by sections 3 and 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended.

CHARLES B. STAFFORD

The bill (S. 2087) for the relief of Charles B. Stafford was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Charles B. Stafford, who was a member of Company D, First Regiment Texas Volunteer Infantry, in the Spanish War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 3d day of December 1898: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

INCORPORATION OF MARINE CORPS LEAGUE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 774) to incorporate the Marine Corps League, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, after the enacting clause, to strike out sections 1, 2, and 3 and insert new sections in lieu thereof, so as to make the bill read:

That Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune, United States Marine Corps, retired, honorary national commandant; Maurice A. Ilich, national commandant; Roy S. Taylor, senior national vice commandant; Kenneth B. Collings, junior national vice commandant; Alexander F. Ormsby, national judge advocate; Rev. John H. Clifford, national chaplain; Edward A. Walker, national sergeant at arms; John B. Hinckley, Jr., national adjutant and paymaster; John E. Brock, national chief of staff; are hereby created a body corporate of the name "Marine Corps League."

SEC. 2. That the purposes of this corporation shall be (a) to preserve the traditions and to promote the interests of the United States Marine Corps; (b) to band those who are now serving in the United States Marine Corps and those who have been honorably discharged from that service together in fellowship that they may effectively promote the ideals of American freedom and democracy; (c) to fit its members for the duties of citizenship and to encourage them to serve as ably as citizens as they have served the Nation under arms; (d) to hold sacred the history and memory of the men who have given their lives to the Nation; (e) to foster love for the principles which they have supported by blood and valor since the founding of the Republic; (f) to maintain true allegiance to American institutions; (g) to create a bond of comradeship between those in service and those who have returned to civil life; (h) to aid voluntarily and to render assistance to all marines and former marines as well as to their widows and orphans; (i) to perpetuate the history of the United States Marine Corps and by fitting acts to observe the anniversaries of historical occasions of peculiar interest to marines.

SEC. 3. OBLIGATION OF FUNDS FOR WORK AT GOVERMENT-OWNED ESTABLISHMENTS

The bill (S. 2357) authorizing the obligation of funds for work at Government-owned establishments was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a similar bill, being Calendar No. 582, House bill 6866, which has passed the House of Representatives. I ask that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill 2357 and considered at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator explain what the bill proposes to do?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill is to correct a ruling of the Comptroller General. He has ruled that when allotments are made to Government establishments for work or service rendered the funds must be spent within the fiscal year and those which are not expended must be returned to the Treasury. When, however, the Navy Department makes allotments under private contracts to private companies the amount of the unexpended balance at the end of the fiscal year is not covered into the Public Treasury but becomes available for another year. So in the construction of naval vessels and in the performance of other naval work the Government navy yards are discriminated against in favor of private concerns who bid and obtain contracts from the Government.

This bill proposes to restore what was believed to be the law before the ruling of the Comptroller General and also to put Government establishments which receive contracts from the Navy, such as navy yards, in the same position as that occupied by private establishments. The bill is recommended by the Navy Department and approved by the Comptroller General.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, it simply restores the condition that existed in the Department until the ruling of the Comptroller General to which the Senator from Massachusetts has referred?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts that House bill 6866 be substituted for Senate bill 2357 and be considered at this time?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6866) authorizing obligation of funds for work at Government-owned establishments, which was read, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing contained in title VI, part II, of the Legislative Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1933 (47 Stat., 417), as amended by section 8 of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (49 Stat., 1648), shall be construed as modifying or amending the provision in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1923 (42 Stat., 812), which reads as follows: "That all orders or contracts for work or material, under authorization of law heretofore or hereafter placed with Government-owned establishments, shall be considered as obligations in the same manner as provided for similar orders or contracts placed with private contractors, and appropriations for such work or material shall remain available for payment therefor as in the case of orders or contracts placed with private contractors."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill (S. 2357) authorizing the obligation of funds for work at Government-owned establishments will be indefinitely postponed.

JOHN A. ENSOR

The bill (S. 2266) for the relief of John A. Ensor was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John A. Ensor, of Sparks, Md., the sum of $25. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the slaughter, prior to its registration as a purebred, of one diseased cow owned by the said John A. Ensor: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

L. L. STOKES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 226) for the relief of L. L. Stokes, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of L. L. Stokes, former postmaster at Mountainburg, Ark., in the sum of $118.56, due the United States on account of public funds lost in the burglary of the post office on November 12, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPENDENTS OF W. R. DYESS

The bill (S. 1873) for the relief of the dependents of W. R. Dyess was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to the dependents of the late W. R. Dyess, who was fatally injured in an airplane accident on January 14, 1936, while in the performance of his official duties as State administrator for the Works Progress Administration, the benefits of the United States Employees' Compensation Act approved September 7, 1916, as amended, and to pay funeral and burial expenses in accordance with the provisions of section 11 of the said act.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, INDIANA AND KENTUCKY

The bill (H. R. 4550) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River between Rockport, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGES ACROSS CHICAGO RIVER AND MICHIGAN CANAL, ILL.

The bill (H. R. 5595) to extend the time for completing the construction of two bridges, one across a part of Lake Michigan at or near the entrance to the Chicago River, Ill., and the other across the Michigan Canal, or Ogden Slip, in city of Chicago, Ill., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL MARKETING AGREEMENTS

The bill (H. R. 5722) to reenact and amend provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, relating to marketing agreements and orders, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I am in favor of this bill, but an amendment has been proposed by the Committee on Agriculture to which some of my constituents are opposed, and they have asked for hearings. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to consent that the bill be recommitted for the purpose of having hearings.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that the very same amendment at two separate times had full hearings and was incorporated in the bill but went out on a vote in the Senate. I had hoped that, perhaps, there might be a vote taken on the amendment reported by the committee, as it seems to be the only controversial question in the bill. A good many have approached me about recommitting the bill and holding hearings. I wish to state to the Senator from Ohio that, so far as I am individually concerned, I feel that those who are in earnest about this matter should have that privilege; but I am informed at the Department that it is very essential that this bill be enacted in order that the necessary reorganization steps may be taken so that the marketing agreements may go into effect, especially in reference to milk.

I understand that in some of the New England States the agreements worked very satisfactorily, but since the decision in the Hoosac Mills case their marketing organizations have disintegrated, and the dairy industry is likely to suffer considerable loss by virtue of the encroachment of other forces that heretofore have operated.

I wish to repeat that, so far as I am individually concerned, I should be very glad to have the measure recommitted for the purpose of having hearings, but we have had hearings heretofore, after which the amendment was reported to the Senate but voted out of the bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. I am advised that there is new matter that could be brought up in the hearings.

Mr. SMITH. New matter?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; I am so advised.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will yield, may I inquire of him to what amendment does he refer?

Mr. BULKLEY. To the so-called Bone amendment.

Mr. POPE. With what does it have to do?

Mr. BULKLEY. It relates to canned goods.

Mr. SMITH. That is known as the fruit and vegetable amendment, which was put in by the committee. I will admit that it was done after very casual consideration, but the committee voted it in, and I had hoped that when the bill came up the amendment could be discussed on the floor and disposed of without the necessity of having the bill recommitted. Of course, if a motion is made to that effect, I shall not interfere with it, but I think "time is of the essence" in this matter; and if we could have a vote on the amendment now, it would greatly expedite the procedure.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. I wish to call to mind—I know it is not necessary in the case of the chairman of the committee, but the Senator from Ohio may not be familiar with it—that in 1935, when this very provision was in the bill, detailed hearings, lasting some 8 or 9 days, were held by the Senate committee, and some 50 or 60 pages of those hearings were devoted to this very proposal.

I can see no good reason why the bill should be recommitted to the committee solely for the purpose of hearings, for those interested have had ample opportunity to present their contentions to the committee.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina if this is not what is known as the Bone amendment?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know absolutely as to that, but it is known as the fruit and vegetable amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what I am interested in. May I further ask the Senator does he intend to have this measure disposed of in the absence of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMITH. So far as I, as chairman of the committee, am concerned, it seems to me that if there is any new matter which it is desired to discuss, that would be persuasive; but, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] has just said, exhaustive hearings were held, and then the amendment was incorporated in the bill, although when it came to the floor of the Senate the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BULKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the amendment referred to is known as the Bone amendment; there can be no mistake about that.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I think that is so.

Mr. McNARY. In the absence of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] it was proposed in the committee by his colleague, the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH]. The amendment includes in this bill, which is directed to improve the conditions of the dairy industry canned goods by including them in marketing agreements as provided in the A. A. A. Act, which was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The bill as introduced provided only for milk to come within its provisions. When the bill came up for consideration a meeting was called for another purpose; this amendment was offered, and without debate or consideration was incorporated in the bill.

When the original A. A. A. bill was under consideration before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in 1933 vegetable producers objected to the inclusion of canned goods in that measure, and canned goods were not included. They are still objecting, I am informed, to the inclusion of canned goods.

I have had from my State, Oregon, a number of telegrams from cooperative growers who opposed canned goods coming within the provisions of the act, and I think, in all fairness, they should have an opportunity to be heard. If the bill is not recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I will ask that it go over at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a statement in regard to this matter?

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator, who, I know, is very much interested in the provision as applied to the dairy industry.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if there should not be a very urgent reason for this bill going over, I should like to ask the Senate for an opportunity to elicit some evidence of the critical situation in the northeastern section of the United States which calls for action on this bill. I will not, however, detain the Senate by doing more than to read a telegram I received this morning, which, I will say, is only one of a great many communications I have received from citizens of Vermont upon this subject. This particular telegram comes from the Governor of the State and is, perhaps, entitled to weight on that account. It reads as follows:

> Passage of marketing-agreement amendment apparently only hope for 15,000 Vermont dairymen. Situation critical and haste needed.

I have had similar communications from the commissioner of agriculture and from the heads of various cooperatives and of various agricultural associations and societies in the State.

It has been represented to me that in all the depression there has never been such a chaotic condition among the producers of milk in that section of the United States as there is today. From sources upon which I rely I am informed that unless relief is provided to stabilize the market, promptly forthwith some of our best producers will be driven out of business.

Unless there is a real cause for delay in the matter I think the affirmative urgency of the situation calls for prompt action by the Congress. It is true that the interest which now arises for debate is well represented and set forth in that part of the hearings which begin at page 149 of the hearings on S. 1807, March 7 to 16, 1935, both inclusive. If those hearings cover the principle, I think the Senate ought to consider it upon the request for delay and ought to proceed as early as convenient to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, why would it not expedite the matter for the Senate now to take action on this one amendment? As I understand, nearly all Senators with whom I have had any conversation in reference to the matter are agreeable to the provisions of the bill except the fruit and vegetable provision. As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] said, the amendment was brought up in the committee and adopted casually to await the action of the Senate. Now for it to occasion such delay as would be necessary to bring the witnesses here and have them testify and cover the same ground they did before it seems to me would not be fair. I think the Senate understands the situation sufficiently to vote up or vote down the fruit and vegetable provision.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, my constituents had assurance that they would have an opportunity to be heard on the matter, and I do not feel they should be foreclosed. However, though the Senator feels it would expedite the matter to take the action he has suggested, I think it would be better if the Senate should not now proceed to the consideration of the bill, and then in the next few days we will see what we can do about it. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, New Jersey has been in the same situation with reference to the milk question. For months conditions have been serious for the milk producers, and Congress should do something to save the situation. This is a matter of great importance to us. The milk producers are in urgent need of remedial legislation. It seems to me very important that the bill, so far as these interests are concerned, should be passed promptly.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] a question. I think the cause of the disturbance is the feeling most of us have that the canners in our States are not in favor of the Bone amendment. I am in favor of the bill. Is the Senator, as chairman of the committee, disposed to press for passage of the bill, including the Bone amendment?

Mr. SMITH. No. I may state to the Senator from Florida, in view of the action of the Senate committee after deliberate and extensive hearings, the bill was voted out of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. If the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is agreeable, I, as chairman of the committee, will move to strike out the amendment and let it go to a vote.

Mr. PEPPER. That would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, before a vote is had there should be a quorum call. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] is not on the floor at the moment. As he offered the amendment and, of course, is interested in it, I think there should be a quorum call before a vote is taken on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his objection, I should like to follow the procedure which I have just indicated. I fully realize the condition in which the milk producers find themselves.

Mr. BULKLEY. I do not want to be in the position of preventing the passage of the bill. In view of the Senator's assurance and wishes, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the bill was reported from the committee in my absence the other day. I was present at the hearings of the farm bureau group, but had an appointment in the city and had to leave. When I returned I found that the bill had been ordered reported.

A dairy farmer from Maryland was in my office afterward and complained very bitterly about the milk provision and thought there ought to be an amendment. He said he wanted to work out an amendment. He has not yet brought it to my office, but I expect to hear from him today or tomorrow. I should like to have the bill go over until the next call of the calendar so that I may have an opportunity to see what his amendment may be. He claims the bill is against the best interests of the independent dairymen. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call for the regular order.

LILLIAN J. GLINN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will state the next bill in order on the calendar.

The bill (S. 727) validating homestead entry, Billings 029004, of Lillian J. Glinn was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the stock-raising homestead entry, Billings 029004, made by Lillian J. Glinn on June 28, 1927, as amended, for all of section 32, township 7 south, range 54 east, Montana principal meridian, is hereby validated, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept the final proof submitted by the entrywoman, now Lillian J. Castleberry, in support of said homestead entry on December 20, 1934, and to issue patent for the entry in regular course.

FEDERAL SURPLUS COMMODITIES CORPORATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2439) to extend the time for purchase and distribution of surplus agricultural commodities for relief purposes and to continue the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in carrying out the provisions of clause (2) of section 32 of the act approved August 24, 1935 (49 Stat. 774), as amended, the Secretary of Agriculture may transfer to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, which Corporation is hereby continued, until June 30, 1939, as an agency of the United States under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, such funds, appropriated by said section 32, as may be necessary for the purpose of effectuating said clause (2) of section 32: Provided, That such transferred funds, together with other funds of the Corporation, may be used for purchasing, exchanging, processing, distributing, disposing, transporting, storing, and handling of agricultural commodities and products thereof and inspection costs, commissions, and other incidental costs and expenses, without regard to the provisions of existing law governing the expenditure of public funds and for administrative expenses, including rent, printing and binding, and the employment of persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, such employment of persons to be in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to the employment of persons by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

In carrying out clause (2) of section 32, the funds appropriated by said section may be used for the purchase, without regard to the provisions of existing law governing the expenditure of public funds of agricultural commodities and products thereof, and such commodities, as well as agricultural commodities and products thereof purchased under the preceding paragraph hereof, may be donated for relief purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] should explain the provisions of the bill.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to extend the provisions of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation Act. I think most Senators are familiar with the work of that Corporation during the last 2 years. In this connection I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a rather complete statement of the commodities which have been handled and the States where they have been purchased and turned over to relief organizations.

A question was raised in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry recently with reference to the effect this might have upon imports of commodities such as butter and cheese. In the first place, the commodities which have been handled are considerable in number, including apples, beans, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, butter, cheese, and a great many others. I have a statement showing the months in which the purchases were made and also the imports of the commodities during the same months.

The administrators of the act claim that it has no effect upon imports at all; that the purchases are always made when the price of the commodities is very low, due to a surplus of the commodities in a given State or community; that since the price is very low it has no effect upon imports. The table which I have asked to have made a part of my remarks shows that during the very months when the greatest purchases were made there were very small imports, for the very reason, as I have said, that the price was so low imports did not come in.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

Mr. POPE. It seems to me very important that the bill be passed in order that the Jones-Connally Act and others may be extended.

I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD the statement to which I refer.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, at this point in the proceedings of the Senate I desire to address myself for 1 or 2 moments to a matter contained in the President's message sent to the Congress this morning.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I always enjoy being particularly courteous to the Senator from Illinois, as he well knows, but I suggest that we finish the call of the calendar, which we are proceeding to do under the unanimous-consent agreement, and then we shall all be very happy to listen to the able Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Very well. I do not wish to interfere with the program, of course. I shall ask unanimous consent to proceed at the conclusion of the call of the calendar to a brief discussion of the President's message in its application to certain subjects therein referred to which are very important to this body.

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1791) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for and the addition thereof to the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "quarter", to insert "southeast quarter, northwest quarter", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase when purchaseable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, on behalf of the United States under any fund or moneys available for such purpose, except from the general fund of the Treasury, any of the following-described lands in the State of California now in private ownership, to wit: Section 25, lots 3, 4, 5, 8, and 9, section 34, northeast quarter, southeast quarter, northwest quarter, lots 1 to 10, inclusive, section 35, section 36, township 1 south, range 19 east; southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, southeast quarter, lots 2, 3, and 4, section 30, section 31, township 1 south, range 20 east; sections 1, 2, and 3, east half section 10, sections 11 and 12, north half section 14, northeast quarter section 15, township 2 south, range 19 east; southeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, lots 3 to 7, inclusive, section 6, township 2 south, range 20 east, Mount Diablo meridian.

SEC. 2. When title to the aforesaid privately owned lands has been vested in the United States, all of the lands described in section 1 hereof shall be added to and become a part of the Yosemite National Park and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect any valid existing rights.

SEC. 3. The provisions of the act approved June 10, 1920, as amended, known as the Federal Water Power Act, shall not apply to any of the lands added to the Yosemite National Park pursuant to the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCARRAN subsequently said: Mr. President, inadvertently Calendar No. 583, being Senate bill 1791, was passed without my noticing it. I ask that the Senate return to the bill for the purpose of asking a reconsideration, and then that it may go over.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I did not understand that the bill had been passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand that it was passed without objection.

Mr. BYRNES. When the bill was called on the calendar, I rose to make an inquiry of the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand; but I also understand that the bill passed. I now ask that that action be reconsidered, because I understood the Senator from South Carolina to ask that an explanation be given, and I was about to ask that the bill go over; and I now ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the votes by which Senate bill 1791 was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and passed be reconsidered, and that the bill go over. Is there objection?

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. Did the Senator object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am going to object when it comes up. The bill passed without my knowing it.

Mr. McADOO. I am sorry for that; but, Mr. President, this measure is quite important to my State of California, because it is the intention of the logging companies to begin cutting the timber on this tract of 7,000 acres of land adjoining the Yosemite National Park just as quickly as the snow permits them to go upon the ground. That time is rapidly approaching, and it is important to have this bill promptly enacted, if it is to be enacted at all.

If the bill is to be considered, I shall be glad to discuss it and explain it to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The parliamentary situation is that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] asks unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and passed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate for consideration.

The Senator from Nevada now objects to the consideration of the bill, and it will be passed over.

AGRICULTURAL MARKETING AGREEMENTS

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5722, to reenact and amend provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, relating to marketing agreements and orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I move to strike from the bill the so-called fruits and vegetables amendment appearing on page 3, beginning with line 11 and including line 17.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation.

The committee has reported an amendment. It is unnecessary to move to strike out the committee amendment, because the question arises on the adoption of the committee amendment. All those who favor striking it out will vote "no." So the question is on the adoption of the amendment which is opposed by the Senator from South Carolina, who has moved to strike it out. The same result will be attained by voting against the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I think the Senate is ready for a vote on this amendment without any further delay.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 3, after line 10, to insert the following new paragraph:

(d) Section 8c (2) is amended by striking out "and not including fruits, other than olives, for canning"; and by striking out "(not including vegetables, other than asparagus, for canning)"; and by inserting after the words "except the products of naval stores" the words "and the products of honeybees" and after "soybeans" the following: "honeybees."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina about the section on page 4 relating to milk prices. Was there a hearing on the bill?

Mr. SMITH. As I understand the procedure, all those interested collaborated with the Department in preparing the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Was there any opposition to it?

Mr. SMITH. None.

Mr. COPELAND. I am assured by my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], whose dairy interests are the same as mine, that this measure is acceptable to those who are interested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 20, to insert the following new paragraph:

(f) Section 8c (6) is amended by striking out "and not including fruits, other than olives, for canning"; and by striking out "(not including vegetables, other than asparagus, for canning)"; and by inserting after "soybeans and their products" the following: "honeybees."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I object to agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLENDER subsequently said: Mr. President, a few minutes ago the Senate passed House bill 5722, to reenact and amend provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, relative to marketing agreements and orders. I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as well as the vote rejecting the committee amendents. The purpose is to correct an error in the Senate's action on the two committee amendments.

I make the request in order to move that the committee amendment on page 3, lines 11 to 17, be amended by striking out the words "striking out 'and not including fruits, other than olives, for canning'; and by strikng out '(not including vegetables, other than asparagus, for canning)'; and by"; that the committee amendment, in lines 21 to 25 be similarly amended, and that the amendments, as amended, be then agreed to, and the bill as so amended be passed.

It was the purpose of the Senate to exclude from the bill the amendment pertaining to fruits and vegetables, but in the same amendment was an item with reference to honeybees.

Mr. BULKLEY. The sole purpose is to restore the honey bees to the bill?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. BULKLEY. I do not object.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the amendment to which the Senator refers is one that was adopted by the committee, and provided for the inclusion of fruits and vegetables for canning within the bill relating to marketing agreements.

So far as concerns the farmers of my State who produce fruits and vegetables for canning, they are very anxious to have the privilege of coming under this bill. I understood, when the question came before the Senate a few minutes ago, that it was desirable not to amend the bill because of the fact that such an amendment might result in delay in the passage of the bill; that an acute condition existed in the dairy industry, and that it was therefore necessary to withdraw the support of the committee to the amendment in order that the bill might pass promptly, and the peculiar and difficult problems of the dairy industry might be taken care of.

I do not wish to stand in the way of any amendment which the Senator from Louisiana may have. I voted for the amendment in committee 2 years ago. I voted for it on the floor of the Senate. But if those who are producing fruits and vegetables for canning are willing to step aside in order to take care of a difficult situation so far as the dairy industry is concerned, I do not think any other producers in the country should attempt to delay the bill by insisting upon another amendment.

In view of the fact that we have been willing to step aside in favor of the dairy industry, I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana whether those interested in honeybees should not also be willing to take a similar position. If that is not true, if there is a different attitude toward the amendment which the Senator from Louisiana has offered than toward the amendment in which we are interested, then some distinction could be made. But I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that 2 years ago the same amendment was presented to the Senate, and, after argument, was rejected. So I cannot see why one group of producers should be asked to step aside and another group of producers be permitted to come under the provisions of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Louisiana that the vote whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, be reconsidered?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, as I interpret the parliamentary situation the bill in its present form is just the same as when passed by the House. I should like to inquire whether that is a correct statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Inasmuch as the Senate has rejected the committee amendments, the Chair is advised that the bill as passed by the Senate is now in the same form as when passed by the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. As I understand the request for unanimous consent, it is to reconsider for a definite and limited purpose. Is that the situation?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is my request.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I shall have to object to that request. I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that if he will make a request for reconsideration of the whole bill generally——

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, although my idea is to reconsider the bill for a definite and limited purpose, it was necessary that I request a reconsideration of the whole bill. In considering the committee amendments, I am certain that the Members of the Senate were under the impression that they were voting only on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH]. I for one thought the amendment of the Senator from Washington pertaining to fruits and vegetables was separate from the amendment pertaining to honey bees. When the first amendment was read by the clerk, it only referred to fruits and vegetables. I am sure that it was not the intention of the Senate to overlook the other committee amendment, with was with reference to honey bees. The Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] will recall that he presented his amendment with reference to fruits and vegetables before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and it was unanimously adopted, after which I offered a separate amendment with reference to honey bees, which was likewise unanimously adopted.

I naturally thought that the amendments would be considered by the Senate separately, and that is why I am asking for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed and the amendment rejected so that the amendment with reference to honey bees may be voted on as a separate proposal. I think that is a just and fair request, and I hope that the Senate will reconsider the vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. Inasmuch as the Presiding Officer has stated that the bill, as passed by the Senate, is in the same form and language as when passed by the other House, I object to the request for reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I am in thorough sympathy with the dairy industry. I am informed that the proponents of this measure are not really opposed to the amendments which have been rejected, but they fear that if the bill is amended, its final consideration will be considerably delayed, and the dairy industry will thereby suffer. It is my intention to offer a separate bill for the relief of the honey-bee industry.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE ON DUTY OF STATE TO THE CITIZEN

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, earlier in the day, when the message of the President came before this body touching the matter of relief to the needy, justice to the toiler, and righteousness generally to the oppressed, I was particularly attracted to observe in the President's message the following public statement to the country:

> No State is justified in sitting idly by and expecting the Federal Government to meet State responsibility for those labor conditions with which the State may effectively deal.

Mr. President, I take this occasion to note this passage in the President's message in order that I may bring that paragraph to the attention of the Senate and invite Senators to recognize for a moment its due portent, and what it now justifies us to indulge insofar as hopes in behalf of this Government being restored may be entertained. The President tells the country that he is not able to see why any State has the right to sit idly by and practically put upon the Federal Government the duties which are essentially those of the State in carrying out the obligations due to the citizens.

Mr. President, I observe in the public press that a large number of people in the city of New York yesterday paraded in public places objecting to the Congress assuming to pass legislation limiting relief to $1,500,000,000. I was attracted to the fact that the participants in this demonstration had at the same time compatriots in seven different States, giving voice to the same expression. I invite the attention of the country to the fact that here is a set of men who, not waiting to see whether there shall be necessity for relief at all, or, if there be such, whether the funds to be provided shall be sufficient for the purposes, proceed to denounce the Congress and demand that billions of dollars be promptly appropriated by Congress for distribution wherever certain combinations or organizations shall demand it.

If the conditions continue as they are now threatened, there is no treasure that can be exacted from the public purse and the public pocket that can possibly endure the demands. It is little less than a form of political cowardice for us to sit silent and allow these people to feel that by this form of hippodrome they can terrorize the Congress into doing that which is a robbery of the citizens.

Mr. President, the time has come when this Government must get back to the foundation principles of its existence, and to some degree carry out and fulfill the orders of its own destiny. If it is the purpose to convert the Government of the United States into a mere granary for the supply of all wants of mankind without regard to whence they come, regardless of whether the citizenry toil or spin, whether they labor or decline all industry, we will begin upon a course that will mean, first, the paralysis of all initiative of all business; then all manufacturing will cease, because it will be realized that whatever is produced is to be consumed by government, instead of accruing to the benefit of those who own the property, and justly distributed in wages to the toilers.

On the other hand, the farmer must bid good-bye to any aid to his farm designed to further his interests in a pursuit so elevating and historically renowned as is agriculture, because, sir, if the money is to be consumed by those in the cities who call for what they denominate relief merely because they will not work, or merely because, with work calling for them, they feel it is to their profit to shirk the work and to make no effort in behalf of sustaining themselves or the Government, then we are on the eve, I assure you, sir, of a condition in this Republic which will discourage progress in every form and, above all, will destroy every form of enterprise, and likewise discourage all men looking to the investment of whatever they may have in the way of possessions, either to increase their own business or to provide success in their enterprises for uses of others.

I cannot possibly overlook the fact that we are educating the States of America to the conclusion that they may set themselves down as one of a family in this Government and make a draft upon the Treasury for the purpose of getting funds to be distributed among themselves by the people themselves, and that without any regard to the relative constitutional limitations of the Federal Government on the one hand and the duty of the States on the other, or, sirs, the power of the Federal Government on the one hand and the rights of the people on the other.

Mr. President, the statement of the President of the United States sent to the Congress this morning is more far-reaching than possibly it was in his mind at the time to direct. He has gone further, possibly, than certain people in America expected. The President has found it agreeable to return to the fundamentals, and to announce to his country that his belief is, and he so asserts, that no State has a right to sit idly by and to demand of the Federal Government the executing of that which is the duty of the States both to enact and to protect.

This gives rise to the thought that there were reasons in the mind of the President that led him to make that assertion, and there cannot fail to be a feeling in the minds of my fellow Senators that there were in his understanding threats of invasion upon the rights of the Federal Government by those who now express it. He must have seen that a movement was generally afoot to overlook the distinction between the privilege of the people, on the one hand, and the duty of the Federal Government, on the other.

We have reached the point when the expenditure of billions of money should be an announcement to the public that we have done all we could do for relief, and to the full limit of our Treasury, and that hereafter there should not be any demand upon the Government save and except on behalf of those who are so distressed that they are unable to toil or, where proof can be adduced, that they are unable to obtain work.

If it shall be said, as it seems to me now, that men may band themselves together in communities throughout this land and demand that the Congress shall increase appropriations to the amount of billions of dollars without regard to whether it shall ever be needed or not, and demand as a privilege that the Government shall tax its citizens to the extent of practically draining them of their purse, exhausting them of their treasure, and, in the name of taxation, leaving them bankrupt, to provide funds that are supposed to be justified as a gift and favor to mankind, this is the end of government, and such a situation should receive at once the condemnation of this legislative body. If there is a move afoot, as appears now from what we see, by hippodrome and otherwise to terrorize Congress to accept the theory that it has to vote appropriations in the sum of billions of dollars to exempt people from toil, let it be said such is being done as a license from the extremes to which they have been going. We cannot in the name of relief continue to pay patrimony in the form of a gift of the people's money to those who desire exemption from toil or of duty and responsibility to the Government.

It is time it should end. It is time there should come a voice from this body announcing that it never should have begun; but, having been begun, it should never be carried further than necessity actually justifies.

I turn to see what the resolution will be. We must understand that agriculture, with the aid given to it, produces something from the soil which goes out to feed the hungry and supply the necessitous, and provides a form of industry that is necessary to the welfare of the Republic. But if there shall continue to be a demand in the name of relief for millions upon millions of money monthly along streets and highways, we must ask whence shall the money come that shall go to the needs of agriculture and to the cultivation of that which is so necessary to the Republic? Where shall we obtain that to be consumed by those who merely wish to speculate upon what may be called the generosity or credulity of the Federal Government and to drain its resources so that they may either not work, make no effort to toil, or, toiling, however slightly, may have themselves supported by exactions that can give them luxury.

We have been making a great error, as I see the situation, in not informing the public that the United States is not a bureau created for the distribution of money to those who may demand it. Is the ordinary citizen to be held up upon the highway and, at the cry of "Hands up", to have his pockets rifled on the theory that it is the privilege of such as may accomplish it? Then is to be justified as against the Government in the name of "relief" and enforced in the name of taxation. Is there never to come a time when this country is honestly to meet face to face whatever burdens and evils shall be necessary to the honest citizen?

Therefore, Mr. President, I desire to emphasize the President's words in his message which comes to us this morning, when he says:

> No State is justified in sitting idly by and expecting the Federal Government to meet State responsibility.

Mr. President, the time has come when the Government must take some action to carry out the fundamentals of this Government and the fundamental doctrines on which it was erected, or to abandon it. We cannot play with it merely to truss it up on the one hand and violate it on the other. We are either a government of certain limited powers on the one hand and privileges on the other, or we are a government of human beings posing as agents of charity, assembling around the Treasury to raid it with every effort that may be made by force and power.

We have an institution which we speak of as the W. P. A. The initials become interesting. There is justification for much of the money it has expended. There will, no doubt, be some justification for some of the money which it will distribute in the future. But the time has come when that particular branch of our Government should be at an end. This Government is not a house of charity. This Government is not a house that arrays fellow citizens against one another. This Government is seeking now, as we rise into the evidence of prosperity, to provide for those who are helpless and without aid and without opportunity; but it is not to provide for those who merely seek from the Government, through power of politics, the right, sir, to pillage the Treasury. Nor have we the right, in the name of what appears to be taxation, to drain the citizen of all his possessions, rob business of its chances, and cut off the prospect of the prosperity it seeks.

How can the employer be put in the position where he can employ idle labor if we take from him his income in a manner, sir, that does nothing more than to rend it from him in order to distribute it among those who politically terrorize Congress to give it to them?

For that reason, sir, I rise to say these few words when I find that the President of the United States, true to the Constitution, faithful to his oath, consistent with his duty, announces the doctrine to which now is the time for us to turn.

Let the States and other political subdivisions show their capacity or their right to draw money from the Treasury of the Federal Government as a loan wherever the circumstances will wholly justify. Then let those localities, through their instrumentalities, through their officers of the law, distribute such money to the needy, or to whatever sources may seem to be just under their personal supervision. Then, sir, let the Federal Government proceed in every way it can to economize its own expenditures, cut off the useless burdens and bureaus, and thus in this manner bring the Government back to the basis on which the fathers erected it, and on which its sons have erected their hopes and future.

I congratulate the President that he has found it agreeable now to sound, as it were, a tocsin and a warning that he expects the States to turn to the discharge of their duties in their local governments, and not sit idly by and attempt to put upon the Federal Government the necessity of maintaining them, their counties, their cities, their people out of the Federal Treasury, as though, sir, it were a source to be drawn on for favor or gratuity and ever to be imposed upon because it silently or cowardly accepts that status and yields to it.

I rose at this moment to invite the attention of this honorable body to the declaration of the President in his message and to refresh ourselves in the belief that at last we are returning home to the house of our fathers. Let us, sir, realize that the time has come when no longer should we strike down institutions in order to serve political or personal purposes, and at no time should we ever do that which strikes down our institutions in the house of their guardian.

BENTON HARBOR CANAL, BENTON HARBOR, MICH.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, out of order, from the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably, without amendment House bill 5177, to declare the Benton Harbor Canal at and above the west line of Ninth Street, Benton Harbor, Mich., a nonnavigable stream; and I submit a report (No. 605) thereon.

I now ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It merely declares the Benton Harbor Canal at Benton Harbor, Mich., a nonnavigable stream. The bill is approved by the War Department. The reason for immediate action is that dredges are working, and it is desired to have this vacated channel as the receptacle for the materials taken out in dredging.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, was the report from the committee unanimously favorable?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is no controversy of any nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5177) to declare the Benton Harbor Canal at and above the west line of Ninth Street, Benton Harbor, Mich., a nonnavigable stream, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Benton Harbor Canal at and above the west line of Ninth Street, in the city of Benton Harbor and State of Michigan, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be not a navigable water of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the project for the Benton Harbor Canal, authorized by the River and Harbor Act of June 14, 1880, insofar as said project relates to said canal at and above the west line of Ninth Street, in the city of Benton Harbor, Mich., be, and the same is hereby, abandoned.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 24, 1937

The House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WARREN, at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, our blessed Lord and the giver of all life, help us that we may live in the full fruition of faith. We pray that we may not measure ourselves by the narrow rules of time, but be content in the allotments of Thy holy providence. Upon those who have feeble faith or downward minds, or who are weary and anxious, let Thy divine influence rest. These blessings Thou canst give and will. Trust in the Lord at all times; pour out your hearts before Him. O God, we would enter into that larger liberty which is hidden in the secret place of the Most High. Faith is deliberate, patient, and tranquil, and herein is the source of our strength. O give us aspirations which are the breath of the divine and noble enthusiasms which give a charm to labor, a relish to daily toil, and a sweetness to rest. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 21, 1937, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] please administer to me the oath as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. RAYBURN administered the oath of office to Mr. WARREN.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

MAY 24, 1937.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: From the Secretary of the Commonwealth of the State of Pennsylvania I have received the certificate of election, in due form of law, of Hon. RICHARD M. SIMPSON as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-fifth Congress from the Eighteenth Congressional District of that State to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Benjamin K. Focht.

Yours respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, I present Mr. RICHARD M. SIMPSON, a Representative-elect from the Eighteenth Congressional District of Pennsylvania. His credentials are here.

Mr. SIMPSON appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address which I recently delivered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD upon the death of Hon. Benjamin K. Focht.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, June 1, after the disposal of matters on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, though, of course, I shall not. That carries the same provision as to privileged matters, of course, that the other requests have been recently carrying.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Texas that June 1 is Private Calendar Day.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have no objection to the gentleman's coming before the call of the Private Calendar on June 1, so far as I am concerned, because we are well along with it and after he gets through we can take up and dispose of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under reservation of objection, will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] kindly state to us what is to be the program for the rest of the week?

Mr. RAYBURN. This is District day and apparently it will take most of the day. We will next finish the relief bill. Wednesday, of course, is to be devoted to memorializing deceased Members. There is a rule reporting in order what is known as the "hot oil" bill, which, if we do not reach tomorrow, we will take up on Thursday after the completion of the relief bill, but after District business today, the relief bill is next in order until it is finished.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Texas a question. If it is likely that District business will consume several hours today I am wondering if it would not be in the interest of economy of time to let the relief bill go over until tomorrow. There are a great many amendments and I do not think it is fair to the membership to start that bill late this afternoon.

Mr. RAYBURN. It will not be our purpose to do so, and I may say to the gentleman that if District matters take until 3:30 o'clock today we will not take up the relief bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, 3:30 does not mean very much. There are a great many amendments to the relief bill and some of them will take us half a day.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman may feel safe that District business will take up most of the day.

Mr. WOODRUM. Cannot we have an understanding?

Mr. RAYBURN. If the District business takes us as late as 3 o'clock today, we will not take up the relief bill today.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to ask the majority leader about the Private Calendar, I understand there is an omnibus bill on the Private Calendar. I should like to know whether it is intended to take up the omnibus bill first or if the regular Private Calendar will be called?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the omnibus bill is not on the Private Calendar to be considered on that date.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include therein certain statistical information which I have obtained from the Office of Education with reference to the allotment under the vocational-education program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Provisional allotment to States and Territories of appropriations authorized by the George-Deen Act for the further development of vocational education and amount of State or local money required to match the Federal allotment, by States and Territories, for fiscal years ending June 30, 1938 to 1942

[1] The allotments for agriculture and trade and industry will be modified somewhat by the 1935 census which determines the "farm" and "nonfarm" populations on which these figures must be based.

NOTE.—The sums authorized to be appropriated to guarantee the minimum allotments to each State and Territory are: For vocational education, $175,000; for distributive occupations, $54,000; and for teacher training, $54,000. The amounts required to guarantee the minimum specified in the act are: For vocational education, $384,895; for distributive occupations $93,693; and for teacher training $113,911.

It should be remembered that the George-Deen Act which becomes effective July 1, 1937, replaces the George-Ellzey Act which expires June 30, 1937, and appropriations made thereunder are not in addition to appropriations made under provisions of the George-Ellzey Act. In order that my colleagues may have detailed information as to expenditures for vocational education under the George-Ellzey Act, I am herewith submitting a table of figures with amounts allotted to each State on the basis of population, together with special allotments to guarantee the minimum of $5,000 authorized under the act.

Allotment to the States and Territories of Federal vocational education funds, George-Ellzey Act, for salaries of vocational teachers, supervisors, and directors, for the year ending June 30, 1937 [1]

[1] The appropriations for allotment to the States in 1937 were for the full amounts authorized by the act to be appropriated.

The George-Deen Vocational Act was passed by the Seventy-Fourth Congress and approved by the President on June 8, 1936. It authorized an appropriation of $14,483,000 as follows:

Vocation education in agriculture	$4,000,000
Vocational education in home economics	4,000,000
Vocational education in trades and industry	4,000,000
Additional amount for minimum allotment	175,000
Vocational education in distributive occupational subjects	1,200,000
Additional amount for minimum allotment	54,000
Vocational education, teacher training	1,000,000
Additional amount for minimum allotment	54,000
Total authorization	14,483,000

Shortly after the George-Deen Act became law the President of the United States appointed a committee of sixteen to make a survey and study of the subject of vocational education and its related activities, and to make such recommendations to him, as in the judgment of the committee, were deemed advisable. The committee has not yet made its report. The Bureau of the Budget recommended to the Congress that the appropriation under the George-Deen Act be fixed at only $3,000,000. It was perhaps due to the recommendation of the President, and pending receipt of the committee report, that the Director of the Budget recommended only $3,000,000.

Extensive hearings were held by the Committee on Education in the House of Representatives during the Seventy-fourth Congress. Sufficient evidence, facts, and figures were submitted during the hearings on H. R. 12120, known as the George-Deen Act, and being Public, No. 673, Seventy-fourth Congress, to justify the passage of the bill by an overwhelming majority in the House of Representatives. The bill passed the Senate without a dissenting vote prior to action by the House, and subsequently passed the Senate without a dissenting vote.

Acting in good faith, and on the basis of the increased appropriation, various State legislatures and State departments of education set up their programs accordingly on an enlarged basis in order to meet the increasing requests and demands of respective communities and counties in vocational agricultural work.

As evidence of this statement may I submit that the Wisconsin State Legislature, on January 27, 1937, passed a joint resolution urging Congress to allocate to the several States the entire appropriation authorized by the George-Deen Act for vocational education.

The Governor of Nebraska recommended to the State legislature for the full appropriation of State vocational funds to match the full amount of Federal funds available under the George-Deen Act.

The Pennsylvania State Council of Education has registered an official request for the full amount authorized under the George-Deen Act.

Between 80 and 90 vocational-school buildings have been constructed during the past few months in the State of Arkansas, largely by the W. P. A. Administration and in order to meet the increasing demands for vocational-education training. Authorities were acting on the assumption that Congress would make available the total appropriation called for under the George-Deen Act.

Approximately 500 official applications for the establishment of vocational courses and departments have been received by the State department of education in Georgia within the past year. These official applications come from local school districts, from local boards of education, and from superintendents of education who are prepared to proceed with the program, acting of course on the assumption that the full appropriation would be available under the George-Deen Act.

As an illustration of the general need for these funds submitted by an average State, that of the State of Missouri, may I submit that there are 200 high schools which do not now have vocational agricultural departments but which are eligible for such courses? Sixty-two schools in Missouri have requested assistance in establishing vocational-education programs. They are on the waiting list pending the availability of these funds.

According to information submitted by the vocational division of the State department of education, $56,000 is needed to add 62 new departments of vocational agriculture, this amount to be used for payment of teachers. Twenty-one thousand dollars is needed to add extra teachers with large enrollments; $21,000 is needed to reimburse teachers for part-time and evening-school classes; $22,000 is needed to apply on travel allowance of teachers in attendance upon special teacher-training courses and also in visiting communities to assist in organizing vocational programs. An additional $21,000 is needed to increase salaries of the present teaching force to give them a respectable income. A total amount of $141,000 is therefore needed by the State of Missouri if the State is to meet the demands and requests for the vocational-education program.

What is true of the State of Missouri is true of a great many other States, and numbers of the States could be cited along with Missouri. Many of the States are in much greater need than the State of Missouri. I have on file in my office figures submitted by various State educational authorities showing the need for this appropriation. Some of the States are as follows: Nebraska, Pennsylvania, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Maine, Oregon, Utah, North Carolina, and others.

May I submit that in my judgment no funds appropriated by Congress have yielded greater dividends to the taxpayers and the public generally than that appropriated for vocational education, including training in home economics, the trades, and industries.

Enrollments in vocational-education classes in agriculture, trade, and industry, and home economics, reached a peak of 1,249,189 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935. This was an increase of more than 130,000 over the previous years. The increase is divided as follows: Agriculture, 40,622; trade and industry, 51,924; and home economics, 37,503.

The increases are based on a total enrollment of 329,983 persons in agricultural courses, 537,983 in trade and industrial courses, and 381,224 in home-economics courses.

The enrollment in vocational schools during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, was 1,381,701, of which 347,728 attended classes in agriculture, 579,971 attended trade and industrial classes, and 454,000 studied home economics.

State boards of vocational education, in their respective reports to the Office of Vocational Education, reveal many interesting and illuminating facts with reference to the rapid and valuable progress being made in this work. Briefly, vocational education has functioned as follows:

Training the unemployed worker how to get back into employment.

By providing occupational-adjustment training to keep the unemployed worker employed. As an illustration, in 1934, 100,000 adult farmers, 140,000 trade and industrial workers, and 129,000 women in the home were enrolled in evening classes for instruction along the lines of their daily employment. This was done to assist them in adjusting themselves to a rapidly changing work environment.

By administering apprentice training for the unemployed boy and girl.

By enrolling the unemployed worker in regular vocational courses.

By organizing special vocational courses for the unemployed.

By assisting the unemployed worker to find himself and then help him find a job.

By training the unemployed worker in his or her specific line of work.

By protecting the occupational morale of unemployed workers during unemployment.

By promoting agricultural adjustment to the maladjusted farmer.

By safeguarding the health, morale, and welfare of the unemployed worker's family.

By educating the homemaker as a buyer-consumer for the family.

By organizing live-at-home programs for rural families.

By teaching the homemaker to make over rather than buy new when he has not the money.

By vocationally rehabilitating the physically disabled unemployed.

As an illustration, in 1934 more than 8,000 permanently disabled and generally unemployed dependent workers in their respective fields of endeavor were vocationally rehabilitated and placed in employment in lines of work that they could do.

By cooperating with agencies of public and private relief.

By cooperating with Civilian Conservation Corps camps for the unadjusted youth.

By cooperation in programs of rural rehabilitation. Here more than 80,000 F. F. A. farm boys—that is, future farmers of America—have taken vocational-agricultural courses and have therefore participated in the rehabilitation and readjustment of their farm-family problems.

By cooperating with transit bureaus and elimination of vagrancy.

By cooperating with subsistence-homestead communities.

By cooperating with adult-education agencies.

By teaching and training in part-time classes adult and young men in trades and industry in order to meet the changing conditions brought about by eliminating of sweatshops, shorter hours, and so forth.

By teaching, through the Extension Service, adult farmers the importance of readjustment necessitated by overproduction of farm products and low prices.

Evidence presented by a State instruction of vocational education at the hearings disclosed that in one rural community, where vocational education had been taught for the past several years, in 1935 the citizens of the community canned approximately 50,000 pounds of fruits and vegetables and 270 beef cattle, all of which were consumed in the community, and none of it was shipped outside of the county. The testimony disclosed that not a person in that community had been on relief during the past 3 or 4 years.

Other similar and most interesting facts and conditions supporting the value and benefits of vocational education were submitted to the committee.

A perusal of the hearings will disclose many illuminating and interesting reasons why the vocational-education program should not only be continued, but should be broadened as provided for in H. R. 12120.

In 1934, 555 State directors, supervisors, and teacher-trainers for vocational education and 169 State supervisors and case workers for vocational rehabilitation were employed. Vocational teaching staffs of local communities included 8,677 teachers of evening classes, and 13,186 all-day teachers, and 5,093 teachers of part-time classes. Vocational teacher training institutions enrolled 15,962 pupils in teacher-training courses taught by 790 teachers. No group of citizens has rendered a greater service or done more toward combating the depression than these excellent vocational teachers.

My colleagues, may I make it clear that I realize Congress cannot appropriate all the money contained in the requests and demands of various persons, organizations, and so forth. No one realizes more than I do that shortly excessive spending and appropriating of public funds by the Congress must be curtailed. An individual cannot continue to spend twice as much as he earns, neither can the Federal Government continue to spend annually twice the amount of its income. But let me point out to you that no money, in my opinion, spent by the Federal Government, has done more and is doing more to reestablish our people in agricultural work and in industrial work than that which has been done by our vocational-education program.

WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOR—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 255)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Labor and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

The time has arrived for us to take further action to extend the frontiers of social progress. Such further action initiated by the legislative branch of the Government, administered by the executive, and sustained by the judicial, is within the common-sense framework and purpose of our Constitution and receives beyond doubt the approval of our electorate.

The overwhelming majority of our population earns its daily bread either in agriculture or in industry. One-third of our population, the overwhelming majority of which is in agriculture or industry, is ill-nourished, ill-clad, and ill-housed.

The overwhelming majority of this Nation has little patience with that small minority which vociferates today that prosperity has returned, that wages are good, that crop prices are high, and that Government should take a holiday.

The truth of the matter, of course, is that the exponents of the theory of private initiative as the cure for deep-seated national ills want in most cases to improve the lot of mankind. But, well-intentioned as they may be, they fail for four evident reasons—first, they see the problem from the point of view of their own business; second, they see the problem from the point of view of their own locality or region; third, they cannot act unanimously because they have no machinery for agreeing among themselves; and, finally, they have no power to bind the inevitable minority of chiselers within their own ranks.

Though we may go far in admitting the innate decency of this small minority, the whole story of our Nation proves that social progress has too often been fought by them. In actual practice it has been effectively advanced only by the passage of laws by State legislatures or the National Congress.

Today you and I are pledged to take further steps to reduce the lag in the purchasing power of industrial workers and to strengthen and stabilize the markets for the farmers' products. The two go hand in hand. Each depends for its effectiveness upon the other. Both working simultaneously will open new outlets for productive capital. Our Nation, so richly endowed with natural resources and with a capable and industrious population, should be able to devise ways and means of insuring to all our able-bodied working men and women a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. A self-supporting and self-respecting democracy can plead no justification for the existence of child labor, no economic reason for chiseling workers' wages or stretching workers' hours.

Enlightened business is learning that competition ought not to cause bad social consequences, which inevitably react upon the profits of business itself. All but the hopelessly reactionary will agree that to conserve our primary resources of manpower, government must have some control over maximum hours, minimum wages, the evil of child labor, and the exploitation of unorganized labor.

Nearly 20 years ago, in his dissenting opinion in Hammer v. Dagenhart, Mr. Justice Holmes expressed his views as to the power of the Congress to prohibit the shipment in interstate or foreign commerce of the product of the labor of children in factories below what Congress then deemed to be civilized social standards. Surely the experience of the last 20 years has only served to reinforce the wisdom and the rightness of his views. And surely if he was right about the power of the Congress over the work of children in factories, it is equally right that the Congress has the power over decent wages and hours in those same factories. He said:

> I had thought that the propriety of the exercise of a power admitted to exist in some cases was for the consideration of Congress alone and that this Court always had disavowed the right to intrude its judgment upon questions of policy or morals. It is not for this Court to pronounce when prohibition is necessary to regulation, if it ever may be necessary—to say that it is permissible as against strong drink but not as against the product of ruined lives.
> The act does not meddle with anything belonging to the States. They may regulate their internal affairs and their domestic commerce as they like. But when they seek to send their products across the State line they are no longer within their rights. If there were no Constitution and no Congress, their power to cross the line would depend upon their neighbors. Under the Constitution such commerce belongs not to the States but to Congress to regulate. It may carry out its views of public policy, whatever indirect effect they may have upon the activities of the States. Instead of being encountered by a prohibitive tariff at her boundaries, the State encounters the public policy of the United States, which it is for Congress to express. The public policy of the United States is shaped with a view to the benefit of the Nation as a whole. * * * The national welfare as understood by Congress may require a different attitude within its sphere from that of some self-seeking State. It seems to me entirely constitutional for Congress to enforce its understanding by all the means at its command.

Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Clark, and Mr. Justice McKenna agreed. A majority of the Supreme Court, however, decided—5 to 4—against Mr. Justice Holmes and laid down a rule of constitutional law which has ever since driven into impractical distinctions and subterfuges all attempts to assert the fundamental power of the National Government over interstate commerce.

But although Mr. Justice Holmes spoke for a minority of the Supreme Court, he spoke for a majority of the American people.

One of the primary purposes of the formation of our Federal Union was to do away with the trade barriers between the States. To the Congress, and not to the States, was given the power to regulate commerce among the several States. Congress cannot interfere in local affairs; but when goods pass through the channels of commerce from one State to another, they become subject to the power of the Congress, and the Congress may exercise that power to recognize and protect the fundamental interests of free labor.

And so to protect the fundamental interests of free labor and a free people we propose that only goods which have been produced under conditions which meet the minimum standards of free labor shall be admitted to interstate commerce. Goods produced under conditions which do not meet rudimentary standards of decency should be regarded as contraband and ought not to be allowed to pollute the channels of interstate trade.

These rudimentary standards will of necessity at the start fall far short of the ideal. Even in the treatment of national problems there are geographical and industrial diversities which practical statesmanship cannot wholly ignore. Backward labor conditions and relatively progressive labor conditions cannot be completely assimilated and made uniform at one fell swoop without creating economic dislocations.

Practical exigencies suggest the wisdom of distinguishing labor conditions which are clearly oppressive from those which are not as fair or as reasonable as they should be under circumstances prevailing in particular industries. Most fair labor standards as a practical matter require some differentiation between different industries and localities. But there are a few rudimentary standards of which we may properly ask general and widespread observance. Failure to observe them must be regarded as socially and economically oppressive and unwarranted under almost any circumstance.

Allowing for a few exceptional trades and permitting longer hours on the payment of time and a half for overtime, it should not be difficult to define a general maximum working week. Allowing for appropriate qualifications and general classifications by administrative action, it should also be possible to put some floor below which the wage ought not to fall. There should be no difficulty in ruling out the products of the labor of children from any fair market. And there should also be little dispute when it comes to ruling out of the interstate markets products of employers who deny to their workers the right of self-organization and collective bargaining, whether through the fear of labor spies, the bait of company unions, or the use of strikebreakers. The abuses disclosed by the investigations of the Senate must be promptly curbed.

With the establishment of these rudimentary standards as a base, we must seek to build up, through appropriate administrative machinery, minimum-wage standards of fairness and reasonableness, industry by industry, having due regard to local and geographical diversities and to the effect of unfair labor conditions upon competition in interstate trade and upon the maintenance of industrial peace.

Although a goodly portion of the goods of American industry move in interstate commerce and will be covered by the legislation which we recommend, there are many purely local pursuits and services which no Federal legislation can effectively cover. No State is justified in sitting idly by and expecting the Federal Government to meet State responsibility for those labor conditions with which the State may effectively deal without fear of unneighborly competition from sister States. The proposed Federal legislation should be a stimulus and not a hindrance to State action.

As we move resolutely to extend the frontiers of social progress, we must be guided by practical reason and not by barren formula. We must ever bear in mind that our objective is to improve and not to impair the standard of living of those who are now undernourished, poorly clad, and ill-housed.

We know that overwork and underpay do not increase the national income when a large portion of our workers remain unemployed. Reasonable and flexible use of the long-established right of government to set and to change working hours can, I hope, decrease unemployment in those groups in which unemployment today principally exists.

Our problem is to work out in practice those labor standards which will permit the maximum but prudent employment of our human resources to bring within the reach of the average man and woman a maximum of goods and of services conducive to the fulfillment of the promise of American life.

Legislation can, I hope, be passed at this session of the Congress further to help those who toil in factory and on farm. We have promised it. We cannot stand still.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 24, 1937.

REPEALING PROVISION RELATING TO TEACHING OR ADVOCATING COMMUNISM IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 148, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 148) to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the proviso appearing in the fourteenth paragraph under the subheading 'Miscellaneous' under the heading 'Public Schools' in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, approved June 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 356), and reading as follows: Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism', is hereby repealed: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed as permitting the advocating of communism."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 148) to repeal a proviso relating to teaching or advocating communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and appearing in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill amended the provision of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act of 1936 relating to the unavailability of public school appropriations for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism by substituting therefor a provision under which such appropriations were not to be available for the salary of any person advocating communism or treating any such doctrine with favor or support. The House bill also provided that no person was to be required to make a statement of nonviolation of the proviso as a condition of salary payment.

The Senate amendment struck out the House provision and substituted therefor a provision for the repeal of the proviso of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act.

The conference agreement has the effect of repealing the proviso as in the Senate amendment but adds thereto an express provision under which the repeal is not to be construed as permitting the advocating of communism.

MARY T. NORTON,
DEWEY SHORT,
AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, following three conferences held with the conferees of the Senate, at all of which the House conferees endeavored to the best of their ability to carry out the wishes approved by the House, we finally reached an agreement which we hope will be acceptable to all of the Members of the House. It is that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

That the proviso appearing in the fourteenth paragraph under the subheading "Miscellaneous" under the heading "Public Schools" in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, approved June 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 356), and reading as follows: "Provided, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism", is hereby repealed: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed as permitting the advocating of communism.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House I introduced the amendment which the House adopted which excluded from direct repeal the advocacy of communism. The effect of that was to prohibit the advocacy of communism by teachers in the public schools of the District of Columbia. The Senate voted for outright repeal, and the Senate conferees have adhered to the position of the Senate. The conferees have agreed as provided in their report today. Frankly, I say that the House conferees have fought, as I see it, for the position of the House. We all know what their individual views were; nevertheless, I am satisfied they have fought to carry out the intent of the House in the adoption of the amendment that I offered.

The primary object I had in mind was that the outright repeal should not be construed as permitting the advocacy of communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia. In attempting to arrive at an adjustment of the differences, the conferees have brought in a report for outright repeal, but with the proviso that it shall not be construed as "permitting the advocacy of communism" in the schools of the District of Columbia. Personally, I would have much preferred to have the Senate accept the amendment which I offered. We must, however, realize, as we do, being practical persons, that when there is a difference between the two branches and there is apparently a deadlock that a compromise spirit must prevail in order to have the question adjusted between the two branches, and so far as the report is concerned, while I do not favor it, it carries out the spirit and the intent of the House amendment, as I view it; while it is not a direct prohibition, it is indirectly a prohibition against the advocacy of communism by any teacher in the public schools of the District of Columbia and for that reason I shall not oppose the report. It an express declaration by the Congress that the repeal shall not be construed as permitting the advocating of communism; and, being an expressed mandate of the Congress, it is a mandate of Congress so far as the Board of Education of the District is concerned, and so far as the Superintendent and teachers of the District are concerned.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. For a brief question.

Mr. MAY. The report of the conferees eliminates entirely the question of any prohibition against teaching communism and amounts to nothing more than an admonition to the teachers or to the school authorities. Can the gentleman advise me as to whether or not if this report is defeated that it leaves the situation just as it was without repeal and that if it is adopted it leaves it with the report confirmed?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's understanding is correct, that if defeated it leaves it as it is.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. For a brief question.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Does the gentleman think that conditions in the District of Columbia warrant the repeal today any more than they did when the "red rider" was written into the law?

Mr. McCORMACK. So far as the teaching is concerned we all agree that it is advisable to permit the teaching of the truth, the established truth; and we all agree that the necessity of signing an affidavit as a condition precedent to receiving a teacher's salary was unwise and constituted in a sense a nuisance.

I am just as firm today in my position against the advocacy of communism as I ever was, but we are confronted with a practical situation where two parts of the existing law are very objectionable to all of us. The conferees bring in a report which shows specifically that in the repeal the Congress did not intend inferentially or otherwise that it should be construed as permitting the advocacy of communism. In substance it carries out the intent of the amendment which I offered, and indirectly it has the force of law operating upon those who are vested with the charge of the schools of our District. Under those conditions I took the position, having offered the original amendment, that I will not oppose the conference report, inasmuch as it accomplished the spirit and the intent; although, as I say, I would much prefer to have had an absolute and outright prohibition against the advocacy of communism. I take this position because I realize that there must be some adjustment in order to iron out the difference between the two branches. The House conferees have obtained a substantial victory in incorporating into the law the substance of the amendment that I offered.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. GASQUE. If this conference report is adopted by the House, does not the House go on record as repealing the "red rider" in toto but just saying to the school teachers of the District that we want it understood that the House is not in favor of your teaching it, but you can go ahead and teach it if you wish to?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; not the latter. It has the force of a congressional mandate against the advocacy of communism, although it does not have the direct force. Indirectly it has, as I view it, the same effect, and so far as I am concerned, it is a mandate from Congress that the advocacy of communism is prohibited in the schools of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GASQUE. The gentleman's amendment did nothing more nor less than let the teachers of the District of Columbia know that while we did not object to the teaching of communism we did object to the advocacy of communism?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly; the gentleman is right in that respect.

Mr. GASQUE. I cannot see where this conference report does anything more than make an apology for striking out the House amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall not argue with the gentleman. I construe the report of the conferees as in substance accomplishing what we had in mind, that the repeal of the "red rider" shall not be construed as permitting the advocacy of communism in the schools; and being an express mandate of the Congress, it has full force and effect upon the officials of our schools and upon the teachers in the schools of the District of Columbia.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I want the gentleman to understand my position. I am not opposing the report, although personally I would much prefer the amendment that the House adopted; but, appreciating the position of the conferees, appreciating the difficulties, and appreciating that the report carries out in substance that the repeal shall not permit the construction by anyone that it allows the advocacy of communism, I believe this is an indirect prohibition, and it has binding force and effect upon the school officials and teachers.

Mr. GASQUE. If we agree to the conference report, we are just saying that in order to harmonize and to get an agreement with the Senate, we accept this report?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not construe it that way. But if the gentleman does, I respect his state of mind, and I respect his opinion and his right to place that construction upon it.

Mr. BARRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. As a matter of fact, at any time under the school laws of the District of Columbia, communism was never permitted to be taught. The "red rider" did nothing but put a prohibition upon something that was not necessary.

Mr. McCORMACK. The "red rider" went into the field of teaching, and also had something to do with teachers' signing a paper before receiving pay. It also prohibited the advocacy of communism, and it was a direct prohibition. Personally, I would much prefer that, but this indirectly, in my opinion, accomplishes the substance of my opposition to outright repeal. It is an express statement by the Congress, and any official of the schools of the District of Columbia or any teacher who violates it will be responsible. It would be the duty of the Board of Education of the schools to proceed against that teacher, and it is their duty under this amendment, as I see it, to investigate all textbooks to see they are not in fact "red" propaganda, and to vigorously investigate all complaints that are made against any teacher on the ground that the teacher is advocating, not teaching, communism.

Mr. BARRY. If at any time a teacher taught or advocated communism, that teacher could have been proceeded against and fired?

Mr. McCORMACK. That teacher could have been proceeded against, exactly, but this is an express mandate. It does not go to the extent of my amendment. I am not opposing it because it carries out the substance of my amendment, and, indirectly, as I construe it, it is a prohibition against the advocacy of communism?

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not the gentleman believe that this, in effect, expresses the disapprobation and disapproval of Congress, and the only effect is going to be to not require this monthly or semimonthly affidavit of the teachers? We disapprove of the advocacy of communism, but the teachers will not be required to take the oath?

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend agrees with me?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes. Teachers should not advocate communism or fascism, but should instruct, teach, give learning. As you know, however, I believe that is a matter for the school authorities.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, it is the duty of the superintendent, the officials, and the teachers to realize this is a prohibition against the advocacy of communism.

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; I so understand it. And they dare not violate the will of Congress?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is the will of Congress so expressed.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I understand the gentleman is not contending this provision has any legal effect whatever.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do. I contend this is the will of Congress expressed, and it is obligatory upon the teachers of the District of Columbia and it is the duty of the school board to comply with this mandate.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman contend this proviso could be enforced by law?

Mr. McCORMACK. It can be enforced by the Board of Education where any teacher violates the express will of Congress, as contained in this proviso.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. I agree with the gentleman in opposing the teaching of communism. But I call attention to the fact that in California Communists are recognized and they nominate their own candidates for office. I understand a recent decision of the Supreme Court also recognizes the right to advocate communism from the platform.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; the Supreme Court did not.

Mr. COLDEN. Are we not abridging the right of teachers to free speech by placing restrictions upon them?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; it is not. The law does not permit of anything which is destructive of existing government. That is not freedom of speech. That is an abuse of speech and it constitutes license.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman has only 2 minutes. I suggest it would be very valuable if in those 2 minutes he would explain how this provision may be enforced by law, and what the legal effect of the provision is? That is not clear to me.

Mr. McCORMACK. If any teacher violates this mandate, it is the duty of the Board of Education to investigate and punish the teacher.

Mr. MOTT. Under law that existed prior to the enactment of this bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Under this express mandate of Congress it has, as I construe it, that effect. I have stated my position before, I prefer the amendment that I offered, but I am not opposing the conference report. It carries out substantially the intent and purposes of the amendment which I offered.

Mr. MOTT. I understand the gentleman's position, but I do not see how it can be carried out in law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], a member of the committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, it begins to appear that we shall have an interment today. This is the official day for interring and suitable obsequies for a strange little creature that once was known as "Little Red Rider", but later became known as "Little Pink Rider." For all practical purposes it will be shunted out of existence today.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Permit me to continue.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman says this has no effect.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will get to that later.

I suppose in the manner of a minister who follows the customary form of an obituary, it would be proper to say that "Little Red Rider" came into this world on the 14th day of June 1935, under rather felicitous but doubtful circumstances. Nobody seemed quite clear as to how "Little Red Rider" was born. I am not even satisfied as to the sex of this little creature. I might dub it as she, he, or it with perfect propriety. In any event, it came into being, and we do not know whether it came into being on the floor of this House or in committee. However, we do know that in the hectic days of the closing session, in June of 1935, that provision known as the "red rider" in the form of permanent law, found its way into the District appropriation bill, which put an interdiction upon the teaching and the advocacy of communism in the public schools of the District of Columbia. By virtue of the word "hereafter" inserted in the amendment, it became permanent legislation. What appeared at that time to be a wholly inconsequential little amendment provoked a storm and a fury which raged from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean and from the Dominion line to the Gulf of Mexico. In a little while it was being bandied around in the councils of the American Legion and being discussed in the forums of teachers, particularly the National Education Association. Soon we found the Patriotic Coalition, representing a hundred sundry patriotic societies, coming before the House District Committee, inveighing for and against the "little red rider." It took on some of the aspects of an international controversy, with the danger of severance of diplomatic relations. I am hopeful, therefore, that in all peace we can inter "Little Red Rider" today and never hear of it any more.

It is rather tragic that some of the circumstances and some of the evil consequences which did arise should have arisen from something that seemed so inconsequential. You would be amazed to know some of the things which have been related in the hearings of the Committee on the District of Columbia as a result of "Little Red Rider." For instance, a teacher of physiology got up before a class and said, "Now, children, today we are going to study the red corpuscles in the blood." Some very smart and sophisticated youngster said, "Teacher, you said 'red.' I am going to tell on you."

A teacher of geography began to discuss the question of Russia and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. Somebody stood up in the classroom and literally menaced and threatened the teacher for having used the word "Russia" and for having used the words "Union of Socialist Soviet Republics."

This is how far these little things can ofttimes go. It is not at all surprising, therefore, that you have not hundreds, but literally thousands, of teachers in the District of Columbia who were somewhat affrighted because their jobs were in danger. They did not know quite how far they might go without having somebody report them to the school board or to the House District Committee. This was one of the results of the "red rider", silly and nonsensical as it may seem, and you can multiply these instances as having been within the reality of experience in the schoolrooms of the District of Columbia.

Therefore after suitable hearings before a subcommittee, at which many pages were filled with testimony and a great number of distinguished personages came to testify, the matter was finally brought to the floor of the House, and then was modified somewhat by the amendment of my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. In that form it went over to the Senate. I can say to you the Senate was absolutely insistent that the "red rider" be repealed, and I think it was, perhaps, in the exercise of some generosity on the part of the Senate that this little directional provision finally crept in, which provides that the original "red rider" be repealed, and that nothing herein shall be construed as permitting the advocating of communism.

I thoroughly disagree with my very distinguished friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that this provision has the binding effect of law, unless there is something in existing law which now makes it impossible to use the appropriations which were made available in that bill for the purpose of advocating communism. I think this is in the nature of the obiter dicta you sometimes find in a court decision. I think it is nothing more than directional, that it gives a hint to the teachers and to the school board that it is the sense and the judgment of Congress that communism should not be advocated in the District schools. However, if the teachers undertake to violate this direction, I know of no way in which they can be punished unless the school board takes it upon itself to do so; and, perhaps, this has to be done only after proper notice has been given and a hearing has been held. I do not know whether the teachers can be arbitrarily and summarily discharged or not.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my good friend the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman knows full well as a lawyer that no criminal statute which does not carry a penalty either of imprisonment or fine can be enforced.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I agree with the gentleman's statement. Therefore, I feel that after all the discussion which has thus far taken place, this is nothing more than a direction to the teachers here to the effect that they will be violating, in a sense, what seems to be the present apparent desire of Congress relative to the advocating of communism.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does the gentleman think we need a criminal statute for the teachers to keep them patriotic and doing their duty? This point was brought up just now by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. Do you think we must threaten our teachers with prison as though they are criminals?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe we do.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does not the gentleman think that if some teacher should advocate the establishment of the Russian form of government, together with the overthrow of our form of government, he would get "canned" very quickly?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. We run once more the entire gamut of discussion this House has been through since 1935. I trust we have seen the light since that day.

Mr. MAVERICK. Of course. I hope we have seen the light, too.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not a fact that if the House adopts the conference report, the effect will be merely to eliminate any difficulty the teachers may have with the Comptroller General as far as concerns the affidavit they used to take under the old law?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Substantially, I would say that is so.

Mr. LUCAS. They will not be required under the conference report to make any affidavit that they have not taught or advocated communism during the previous month?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not a fact that under the McCormack amendment there was the possibility they would still be required to do that very thing?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is purely a question of interpretation, but I am not so sure but what they might have been required to do so under that amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman from Texas suggested that if a teacher should teach communism she would presently be fired. Perhaps that is true; but she would not be fired by virtue of anything in this proviso?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Nothing in this proviso, in my judgment, has the impelling force which would make it possible to discharge her. There must be some other preexisting provision of law or regulation under which she could be discharged.

Mr. MOTT. Is it not a fact this proviso is more in the nature of a face-saving compromise, so far as the House conferees are concerned?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is manifestly declaratory and I think when you analyze it that is about the best that can be said for it; but I thoroughly agree with it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 66]

Allen, Pa.	Ferguson	Long	Sacks
Caldwell	Fernandez	Lord	Sadowski
Cannon, Wis.	Fulmer	McClellan	Schuetz
Chandler	Gifford	McGroarty	Scrugham
Clark, Idaho	Gilchrist	Maas	Smith, Va.
Cluett	Goodwin	Mason	Somers, N. Y.
Crowe	Griffith	Miller, Ark.	Sumners, Tex.
Crowther	Harrington	Mouton	Smith, Wash.
Culkin	Jacobsen	O'Connell, Mont.	Smith, W. Va.
Cummings	Jenkins, Ohio	Pearson	Taylor, Colo.
Dempsey	Johnson, Minn.	Peterson, Fla.	Treadway
DeRouen	Keller	Peyser	Williams
Douglas	Kelly, N. Y.	Pierce	Withrow
Drew, Pa.	Kvale	Plumley	Wolfenden
Duncan	Lesinski	Rutherford	Wood

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and seventy-two Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentlewoman from New Jersey to order the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Indiana demands the yeas and nays. Those who are in favor of this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty Members have risen, not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. GASQUE)—ayes 182, noes 60.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein a copy of the bill which was approved by the unofficial steering committee for Government ownership of the 12 Federal Reserve banks, and a list of the 156 Members who are the coauthors and cosponsors of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF MARRIAGE LAWS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5462) to increase the age of consent for marriage in the District of Columbia to 18 years of age in the case of males and 16 years of age in the case of females.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the House Calendar. The clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph "Fourth" of section 1285 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Fourth. When either of the parties is under the age of consent, which is hereby declared to be 18 years of age for males and 16 years of age for females."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, after line 9, insert:

SEC. 2. A license to marry shall not be issued until 3 days have elapsed from date of application for issuance of said license.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the thirtieth day after the date of its enactment.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 4, strike out the figure "2" and insert the figure "3."

The committee amendment was agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO THE HEALING ARTS PRACTICE ACT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill, H. R. 6696, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", known as the "Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928", approved February 27, 1929.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up the bill H. R. 6696, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", known as the "Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928", approved February 27, 1929, be amended by striking from the first paragraph of section 24 thereof the sentence reading as follows: "After 5 years after the approval of this act the commission shall issue no license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia on the basis of a license to practice medicine and surgery or to practice midwifery, in the District of Columbia, in force on the date of its approval."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman from New Jersey tell me what this bill is about, what the bill does.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, will the lady yield to me?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. There is a provision in the old act giving those who had been practicing in the District 5 years' time in which to file their applications. A large number of doctors, dentists, and other practitioners who were in the Navy and Army and in other services have been absent from the District for a longer period of time than 5 years. This bill merely strikes out the 5-year provision so that these persons can come back to practice in the District if they see fit to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DR. RUSSELL V. PEMBERTON

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5110) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. Russell V. Pemberton and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up the bill H. R. 5110 and asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to issue a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. Russell V. Pemberton in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", approved February 27, 1929, and on condition that the said Russell V. Pemberton shall be found by said Commission to be otherwise qualified to practice under the provisions of said act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TO PROTECT BUYERS OF POTATOES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6242) to protect the buyers of potatoes in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up the bill H. R. 6242, and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, or corporation shall sell, offer for sale, keep, or expose for sale in the District of Columbia potatoes in any package which is not plainly marked or labeled with the name of the United States grade which represents a standard no higher than the actual grade of potatoes contained therein: Provided, however, That the term "unclassified" or "ungraded" may be used. The superintendent of weights, measures, and markets shall administer this act and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to establish necessary rules and regulations therefor.

SEC. 2. No person, firm, or corporation shall sell, offer for sale, keep, or expose for sale in the District of Columbia any potatoes otherwise than in packages as provided in section 1 of this act without having plainly and conspicuously displayed in proximity to said potatoes a printed sign where it may readily be seen and in letters of not less than one-half inch high printed in Gothic type clearly and distinctly stating the United States grade of said potatoes.

SEC. 3. The provisions of this act shall not apply to officially certified seed potatoes which meet the grade or certification requirements as labeled and which are sold exclusively for seed purposes, provided they are sold in original packages and bear the official seal and certification of the department of agriculture of the State or country where the potatoes were grown.

SEC. 4. Any person, firm, or corporation which shall violate any provisions of this act shall be fined not more than $50 for the first offense and not more than $200 for each subsequent offense.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROHIBITION OF UNDESIRABLE INDUSTRIES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6834) to prohibit the use of buildings or premises in the District of Columbia for the carrying on of certain undesirable industries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up the bill H. R. 6834, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas, under section 8 of article I of the Constitution, the Congress was granted power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District as should become the seat of the government of the United States; and

Whereas the area of the District of Columbia is approximately 70 square miles and, due to the continuing increase of population of the District of Columbia, the area remaining in the District of Columbia available for the housing of such population and the supplying of its needs is becoming more and more limited; and

Whereas the Government has in the past expended, and is continuing to expend, vast amounts to render the area included in the District of Columbia more suitable for a seat of government and as a place of residence for the agents and employees of the Government; and

Whereas the use of buildings or premises for the purposes hereinafter set forth is unduly detrimental to the proper use and development of the District of Columbia as a seat of government and as such place of residence: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the following purposes are hereby declared to be undesirable purposes for use of buildings or premises within the District of Columbia, and it shall be unlawful, from and after the effective date of this act, to erect, alter, or use any building or premises in the District of Columbia for any one or more of the following purposes:

1. Acetylene gas manufacturing.
2. Distillation of bones or wood.
3. Manufacture of pyroxylin, celluloid, explosives, fireworks, or gunpowder.
4. Gasoline, naphtha, or petroleum refining, except such refining as shall be merely incidental to other permitted uses and for the purpose of recovering for use by the person refining the same, of such products rendered impure through such other permitted uses.
5. Ammonia, bleaching powder, or chlorine manufacturing.
6. Gelatine, glue, or sizing manufacturing.
7. Rendering of fat or other animal products.
8. Incineration, for others, or reduction or rendering, of dead animals, garbage, offal, or refuse, except in a municipal plant.
9. Manufacture of fertilizer from animals or animal refuse.
10. Slaughtering of animals.
11. Stockyards.
12. Smelting of ores.
13. Sulphuric-, nitric-, or hydrochloric-acid manufacturing.
14. Tetra-ethyl lead precipitate or liquid manufacture.
15. Tanning, curing, cleaning, or other processing, or storage, of raw skins or raw hides, other than taxidermy: Provided, however, That in the event that any building or premises in the District of Columbia shall be actually used on the effective date of this act, for any one or more of the aforesaid purposes, the person or persons so operating or using said building or premises may apply to the Zoning Commission created by the act approved March 1, 1920 (Public, No. 153, 66th Cong.), for a permit or permits to continue such use or uses of such building or premises in the manner and to the extent hereinafter set forth.

In the event that such applicant shall, within 90 days after the effective date of this act, establish to the satisfaction of the Zoning Commission and the health officer of the District of Columbia—

(1) That such building or premises were used on the effective date of this act for one of the purposes specified above (showing the extent to which such building or premises have been so used during each of the 5 years next preceding the effective date of this act);

(2) That such use has not been and if continued will not be unduly injurious, obnoxious, or offensive by reason of noise, smoke, odor, gas, dust, or other objectionable feature; and

(3) That such use will be solely for the purpose of supplying the needs of the inhabitants of the District of Columbia and the surrounding territory within a distance of not more than 5 miles from the nearest boundary of the District of Columbia;

the Zoning Commission, with the approval of the health officer, may grant, and it is hereby authorized to grant, a permit for the continuance of such use of the premises for a period of 1 year from the date of issuance of such permit.

Such permit shall set forth the use the continuance of which is authorized thereby, and the building or premises (or portion thereof) to which the same is applicable, and shall also set forth the extent to which such building or premises (or portion thereof) may be so used for such purpose, based upon such period as the Zoning Commission shall determine to reflect most accurately the operations of the applicant, which use shall be no greater than the greater of—

(1) 125 percent of the average extent of the use of such building or premises (or portion thereof) for such purpose during the 5 years preceding the effective date of this act (or, if any such use shall not have been commenced on or before a date 5 years prior to the effective date of this act, 125 percent of the average extent of the use for such purpose during the time from the date of commencement of such use to the effective date of this act), or

(ii) the average extent of the use for such purpose during any 12 consecutive calendar months during such five years of such building or premises, or such portion thereof as shall have been used for such purpose, and shall also provide that such use shall be solely for the purpose of supplying the needs of the inhabitants of the District of Columbia, and the surrounding territory within a distance of not more than 5 miles from the nearest boundary of the District of Columbia. Any permit so granted may be renewed for a further period of 1 year, and thereafter successively renewed for periods of 1 year: Provided, That the holder of such permit shall, within 60 days prior to the expiration of any permit, or renewal thereof, establish to the satisfaction of the Zoning Commission and the health officer, in respect of the period since the date of the last previous application for any such permit or renewal, the same requirements as are hereinabove required to be established in case of an original application for such permit and in addition shall establish that it has complied with all the terms and provisions of the permit (or renewal) then held by it.

The Zoning Commission, with the approval of the health officer, may, in the event that an application for an original permit shall have been received as hereinabove provided, grant a temporary permit to the applicant for the continuance of the use specified in such temporary permit for a period of not exceeding 30 days from the date of such temporary permit, pending final action upon the application for a permit, and may renew such temporary permit for successive periods of not exceeding 30 days, provided that no temporary permit shall be effective after 6 months after the effective date of this act.

The Zoning Commission and the health officer shall have full authority to reject any application for a permit or renewal thereof if the aforesaid matters shall not be established as hereinabove provided.

Any holder of a permit granted in accordance with the provisions of this section shall have the right to alter any building (or portion thereof) covered by any such permit: Provided, That the capacity of the building shall not be thereby increased and that any alterations shall be made in accordance with the most modern methods of carrying on the permitted use, and that any such alteration shall be in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia applicable thereto.

SEC. 2. Buildings or premises erected, altered, or raised, or converted or used, in violation of any of the provisions of this act are hereby declared to be common nuisances; and the owner or person in charge of or maintaining any such buildings or premises upon conviction on information filed in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants in the name of said District, and which court is hereby authorized to hear and determine such cases, shall be adjudged guilty of maintaining a common nuisance, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $200 per day for each and every day such nuisances shall be permitted to continue, and shall be required by said court to abate such nuisance. The corporation counsel of the District of Columbia may maintain an action in the District Court for the District of Columbia in the name of the District of Columbia to abate and perpetually enjoin such nuisance.

SEC. 3. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall enforce the provisions of this act, and nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the authority of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make municipal regulations as heretofore: Provided, That such regulations are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. This act shall be effective upon the date of its passage.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill sets out a group of undesirable industries for which it is made unlawful to erect, alter, or use any building in the District of Columbia. If a building is, at the date of the bill's enactment, being used for any of the proscribed purposes, the continued use of such building for such a purpose is permitted after a permit has been granted by the Zoning Commission with the approval of the health officer of the District of Columbia. Provision is made for the granting of temporary permits for the continued use of a building for 30 days and for renewals of such temporary permits for a limited length of time.

The regular permits granted by the Zoning Commission are to run for 1 year—3 years pursuant to a committee amendment—and may be issued only after the Zoning Commission and the health officer have been satisfied as to the location, nature, and purpose of the continued use. The bill sets up a method by which the Zoning Commission may determine the extent to which a building may be used for one of the affected purposes. Provision is made for renewals of these permits, upon the Zoning Commission and the health officer being satisfied as to certain factors which are set forth in the bill.

A building which is erected, altered, or used in violation of the provisions of the bill is declared to be a common nuisance, and penalties for its violation are set forth. The bill also provides that actions against violators are to be filed in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel in the name of the District of Columbia and that actions to abate and perpetually enjoin the nuisance may be maintained by the corporation counsel in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

If what I have to say today were to be delivered as a sermon, the text would be, "Better late than never." For I am frank to say that H. R. 6834 is a bill which should have been adopted by the Congress years ago. Although part of the responsibility for this delay must rest with those of us who, in the heat of working on legislation for the country as a whole, have in this respect regrettably ignored the District of Columbia, some portion of the responsibility, I believe, is explained by the nature of the relationship between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government.

In many cities throughout this country similar legislation has already been adopted, enforced, and sustained. But action in other cities is often assured through the militant steps which can be taken by the electorate who, through their elected representatives, can prevent the establishment of these so-called nuisance industries. But action by residents of the District must be restricted to such tactics as resolutions, petitions, newspaper editorials, and the like. Having no vote, the residents here are at the mercy of the Congress, which controls the District.

Another peculiar situation injects itself. The responsibility of Congress, so far as the District of Columbia is concerned, is not only to the residents here but also to the country at large. Steps must be taken to insure that the Nation's Capital will be developed along those lines which will prevent the location in the seat of the Government of industries whose operations are unduly injurious, obnoxious, or offensive by reason of noise, smoke, odor, gas, or dust. It is, therefore, the joint stimuli of local protest and national pride which should induce the Congress to adopt H. R. 6834.

A companion bill to H. R. 6834 was introduced in the Senate, and is known as S. 2286. Hearings have been held on the Senate bill by a special subcommittee, and I have had access to the transcript of the testimony thus far adduced there. It is plain from an examination of this transcript that there is considerable at stake in connection with this bill. Responsible Government officials have indicated their support of this bill and have demonstrated the possible effect upon Government investment in various undertakings, such as hospitals, public buildings, parks, roadways, and housing projects, if such a bill is not adopted as soon as possible. Furthermore, witnesses have testified as to the need for this bill in preserving the orderly development of the District as the seat of the Government.

As your committee's report points out, the territorial limits of the District are fixed, and the growing population here makes it necessary that immediate steps be taken to prevent the construction of buildings which will be used for purposes not consistent with the manner in which the Nation's Capital should be developed. We all know that the District of Columbia is essentially a residential area, that this is not the place for heavy industries. It seems to me, therefore, that a bill of this nature only makes articulate what some of us have felt was long necessary and, I believe, what some of us mistakingly considered was already the law.

I mention this because in my discussions with other Members of this House I have found it to be the impression that there already existed in the Zoning Commission power to prohibit these industries. Unfortunately, such is not the case. The present applicable regulations of the Zoning Commission do not prohibit the use of buildings for the prescribed purposes; they merely require that before a building may be used for any of these purposes the approval of the Commission must first be obtained.

The District Commissioners have approved and are urging the enactment of this legislation. In submitting their report urging the adoption of H. R. 6834, the Commission submitted a legal opinion by Corporation Counsel Seal. Mr. Seal's elaborate opinion, authoritatively documented, concludes that the bill is entirely constitutional. This opinion points out that regulation and, if necessary, abatement of the following businesses, trades, and industries have been sustained: Distilleries, soap, glue, vitriol, and like factories; manufacturers of fertilizer, and so forth; tanneries, brickyards, brickmaking, brickkilns; stone quarries; hide-curing establishments; open cattle yards and cattle pens; keeping of hogs and hog pens; slaughterhouses; garbage-reduction plants; rendering of dead animals; manufacture or storage of gunpowders or explosives. Furthermore, his opinion points out that the exclusion of certain of the above-enumerated businesses, trades, and industries from within the limitations of municipalities has been sustained: Open cattle yards and pens; keeping of hogs and hog pens; rendering of dead animals; garbage; and so forth; slaughterhouses; and manufacture or storage of gunpowders and explosives.

Despite the fact that there would be no question as to the constitutionality of a bill which excluded from the territorial limits of the District certain industries and which would prohibit the continuance of any of these industries, this bill does not go that far. In the interest of equity, provision is made only for the prohibition of the construction, alteration, or repair of any building for any of the proscribed uses after the adoption of the bill, but the bill does not absolutely prohibit an existing use at the time of the adoption of the bill. Instead, persons using a building at the time of the adoption of this bill for any of the affected purposes may apply for a permit to the Zoning Commission, which, with the approval of the health officer, is authorized to grant renewable permits for reasonable lengths of time upon being satisfied as to certain factors.

I have heard of attempts to modify the bill to the extent of providing for compensation to certain owners or users of buildings who would be unable to use those buildings for the purpose intended if this bill was passed. I want to go on record as being against this idea. I recognize that some hardship must inevitably work on some person whenever any legislation of this kind is enacted. But, as was quoted by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Slaughterhouse Cases (16 Wall. (U. S.) 36)—

> Persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, welfare, health, and prosperity of the State. Of the perfect right of the legislature to do this no question ever was, or, upon acknowledged general principles, ever can be made, so far as natural persons are concerned.

Our function as legislators in the exercise of police power is to weigh the public benefit against resulting hardship to individual personal and property rights. Where the public benefit outweighs individual hardships as strikingly as it does in this instance, personal rights must yield to the paramount rights of the Government in conserving the general welfare. This maxim of law is fundamental to our democratic system of government. It is a maxim which the Supreme Court of the United States within recent years has extended so as to make municipal planning and zoning legally feasible.

In my opinion, the adoption of a bill which would provide for payment to owners or users of property affected by the passage of H. R. 6834 would be an unprecedented step. It would be, in effect, a price paid by a legislative body to individuals under its jurisdiction for the privilege of exercising the police power residing in that legislative body. It would be a step whch would do violence to the very essence of the police power, for it assumes that despite the fact that a legislative body has determined that the interests of the community at large require the passage of a bill under the police power, the interests of certain affected individuals of that community are so superior to the interests of the entire community as to justify an apology in the form of monetary compensation for the exercise of that legislative body's sovereign power.

Mr. Speaker, the committee has sent to the desk several suggested amendments to this bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am in sympathy with the bill, but on page 3, line 1, I would like to know if the word "incineration" would affect a new apartment hotel that might be constructed in the District?

Mrs. NORTON. No; it would not.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That would not affect it?

Mrs. NORTON. No.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. Gladly.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Will the gentlewoman please inform the House why there is so much haste in the passage of this bill? I understand that a bill of similar character is pending before the Senate and that extensive hearings have been held by the Senate, which hearings are to be concluded in a short time.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman is correct. There is a similar bill pending before the Senate and hearings have been held on that bill, which will be available to every member of this committee.

Mr. GAMBRILL. I also understand that the House District Committee has not held any hearings?

Mrs. NORTON. That is true. The committee decided it was not necessary to hold hearings before the House committee when the Senate was holding hearings on the identical bill in question. May I say that the Committee on the District of Columbia at the present time has 10 subcommittees at work on different bills? This being a matter that should be acted upon just as quickly as possible, it was thought we could facilitate the passage of the bill by bringing it up in the House. Of course, it will take its usual procedure in the Senate.

Mr. GAMBRILL. Will the gentlewoman tell us why there is so much haste in the passage of the bill? Will the gentlewoman please bear in mind in answering that question that the Senate is probably considering a compromise measure under which Gobel & Co., who have a permit to erect an abattoir out at Benning, will be paid some compensation for the expense they have been under?

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman that we have an amendment that will be read in a few moments by the Clerk which will take care of that in this bill.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. GASQUE. I am very much in sympathy with the proponents of this bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the bill.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-five Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and sixty-two Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mrs. NORTON, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is gratuitous for me to say that it is with great reluctance I take the floor to oppose a bill brought out by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and especially one brought out under the direction of the distinguished chairman of that committee. This bill is what is commonly known as the abattoir bill, or slaughterhouse bill. In all my experience with legislation I have never seen the like. I am proposing to the gentlewoman from New Jersey—and I am quite sure it will be agreeable to the majority of her committee—to withdraw the bill and hold some hearings on it.

The bill, after reciting a number of "whereases", contains unfinished lines and unfinished sentences that have no meaning.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Are we to understand that there have been no hearings whatever on this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There have been absolutely no hearings at all on the bill. The report contains 17 amendments recommended by the Commissioners of the District. I understand that these amendments were never submitted to the committee. They are not contained in the bill as reported.

Mr. Speaker, let me briefly review the history of this situation, and let me tell you at the beginning why I take this position. I do so because this bill is aimed solely and entirely against one of the best-known packers in America, the Adolph Gobel Co., of New York. They were granted a permit to remodel and reconstruct an abattoir at Benning which they have owned for a great many years. It has been operated as a slaughterhouse for about 40 years. The Commissioners of the District granted the permit, and the company spent a great deal of money to make it one of the most modern plants in America. It had the approval of the Bureau of Animal Industry, but on the very day the permit was granted somebody brought a bill up here. It is not disclosed who brought it up, but the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey introduced it by request.

That bill is supposed to be directed, after the whereases, against about 15 industries from the manufacture of acetylene gas down to tanning, yet there is not one of those industries existing in the District of Columbia. The only industry the bill is really directed against is this abattoir in Benning, about 6 miles from here, which has served the cattlemen of Maryland for 40 years and has reduced the cost of meat products to the people in the surrounding territory, as well as giving work to hundreds of employees.

As I say, there were no hearings before the committee and there was no consideration of the bill. After voting pro and con and reconsidering the vote, the bill was ordered out by a vote of 9 to 8. No amendments were submitted or approved. The committee could not have read the bill, because if they had, they would have seen unfinished sentences and unfinished provisos.

Listen to this: For the first time in the history of legislation there is this extreme attempt on the part of the Government to control private industry. It is indeed novel. The bill says that if by any chance a permit should ever be granted to operate an abattoir or slaughterhouse the commissioners appointed under the bill can prescribe that this producer or packer must not sell his products at a greater distance than 5 miles from the boundary line of the District. [Laughter.] What does that sound like? It sounds as though some competitor, maybe in Baltimore or even Chicago, does not want any packing plant in this neighborhood to interfere with the sale of his products. And so on this strange attempt to control private business goes throughout the bill. I understand that the provision to which I just referred is going to be somewhat modified by taking out the 5-mile limit, but still it will permit the zoning commissioners to prescribe within certain bounds how far a man can sell his ham or his pork. Well, of course, I could not dignify that by calling it even an extension of the New Deal.

There is a lot of talk about odors. Everybody gets excited about a slaughterhouse. I have in my district on the East Side of New York more slaughterhouses, I dare say, than in any other district in the country outside of Chicago. On First Avenue, from Forty-second to Fiftieth Streets, nearly every well-known packing concern of this country has a slaughterhouse. In this same neighborhood, just one block from the slaughterhouses in all directions are the largest, the most expensive, and the highest-class apartment houses in America, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] well knows. There is Beekman Place, where the Morgans and the Vanderbilts live; Tudor City, the largest apartment-house group in America. They are all just one block away, overlooking the slaughterhouses. Why is this possible? Because there is no odor today under the modern science of slaughterhouse operation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Are there not a lot of things in the District that stink worse than slaughterhouses that ought to be corrected?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not know of my own knowledge. But this plant has been operated for more than 40 years, yet they now propose to close it down without even the suggestion of compensating these people for their huge investment. There has been no suggestion that they be compensated.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield? There is not a slaughterhouse at the present time on this land, and it is not in process of being built.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Not at this exact time, no; but this slaughterhouse had been operating for years and is now being remodeled.

Mrs. NORTON. The slaughterhouse has not operated during the past 2 years.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It was operating for many years. There was a fire out there a short time ago, and they are now remodeling it. Of course, you can actually say it is not in operation today.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate has this bill under consideration, or one similar to it, and they have been having hearings for weeks. It will be weeks before the hearings are completed. Why was this bill suddenly brought out under those circumstances to be put before this House?

We talk about slaughterhouses. In Philadelphia, Pa., the Pennsylvania Railroad built its huge, beautiful station at Thirtieth Street, right next door to one of the largest slaughterhouses in the country. Does anybody riding through there ever smell that slaughterhouse? At Wilmington, Del., right alongside the station, that you gentlemen pass through, is one of the largest slaughterhouses in the world.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman believe that the Capital City of the Nation is the proper place for an industry of this kind?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes; I do, if it is properly controlled and regulated. I do not believe anybody from out of town, who is trying to keep the District and its outlying sections so beautiful, should dictate whether or not the people of this locality shall have in this vicinity the means of getting reasonably priced food. The place of this abattoir is 6 miles from the Capitol, away out northeast, next to an old race track and in no fancy neighborhood.

Mrs. NORTON. Why should it be within sight of the dome of the Capitol of this great Nation?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, of course, it is not, unless one is endowed with eyesight to look 6 miles downhill and through hills.

Mrs. NORTON. Why should we bring in this obnoxious industry to the Nation's Capital?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It is not being brought in. It is right here. There is not a structure beautiful in the city of Washington except the Government buildings. You never saw a beautiful hotel in Washington. You never saw a beautiful apartment. You never saw a beautiful business store here, and the churches are no great works of architecture.
